

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT, CAPE COLONY.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REVIEW CASES.

REX V. BRIL.

{ 1906.
Jan. 12th.

Act 18 of 1873, Sec. 7—Apprentice.

Sec. 7 of Act 18 of 1873 applies only to servants who are not under 16 years of age.

Hopley, J.: This case comes in review from the Resident Magistrate of Fraserburg. The accused, a juvenile apprentice, aged 13, was charged with contravening clause 2 of section 7 of Act 18, 1873, in that, without lawful cause, he absented himself from his master's premises, and from the performance of his work. He pleaded guilty, was convicted, and sentenced. These proceedings must be quashed, as the section under which they were instituted applies only to servants who are not younger than sixteen years of age.

REX V. TALJAARD, ALIAS FOURIE.

Whipping—Juvenile offender.

A Magistrate has no power to sentence a juvenile offender over the age of 14 to whipping for a first offence.

Hopley, J.: This case comes in review from the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town. The accused, aged 16, was charged with stealing a bicycle, of which crime he was properly convicted. The Magistrate, however, not wishing to send so young a lad to gaol for a term of imprisonment, sentenced him to receive a caning. In a note, he states that he knew that this was not a competent sentence, as the accused was over the age of fourteen, and could not therefore be dealt with as a juvenile offender, and so be sentenced to a whipping for a first offence. He, however, thought that it was the best way to treat the matter. The Magistrate may be quite right as to the desirability in this case of inflicting such a punishment, instead of relegating the accused to gaol for a term of imprisonment, but as the law stands, it is entirely beyond his powers to order such a punishment, and it is likewise beyond the power of the judges of this court to sanction such a proceeding. The conviction in this case is perfectly legal and correct, but the sentence must be quashed. Owing to the fact that the accused was tried just after the conclusion of last term, he has been kept in suspense as to his fate for nearly a month, and while remitting him to the Assistant Resident Magistrate for imposition of a legal sentence, I should suggest that the ends of justice will now be met by a discharge with an admonition and warning.

REX V. MULLER.

Hopley, J.: This case came before me for review from the Resident Magistrate of Uniondale. The facts are that on the night of 5th September, 1905, a room used as a storeroom was broken open, and a bicycle and tools, the property of one Henry Marx, were stolen. There was no spoor left, and no trace of the missing goods was found until the 2nd of October, i.e., nearly four weeks after the theft. On that day John Marx, the brother of Henry Marx, was using a bicycle hand-pump, on which was an "inflator" or "nozzle," which Henry recognised as his, and which bore the letter "H" on its metal work, that being a mark Henry Marx had placed upon his inflator. This inflator had on the previous day been lent by the accused to John Marx, who lives with his brother Henry. Suspicion being thus aroused, information was given to the police, and the bicycle belonging to the accused, which was at a neighbouring shop, was in his absence investigated, and partly taken to pieces, with the result that Marx recognised, or thought that he recognised, as his, the inner tube on the hind wheel. It had no mark, but apparently there were three patches very close together, and it is by those patches mainly that the identity of this tube is attempted to be established. No other parts of the missing bicycle have been found or traced, though a rigorous search of the premises belonging to the father of the accused, with whom he resides, was made. The crime was committed on a farm which is thickly populated, and the Marxes and the accused live within a quarter of a mile of each other. The father of the accused is a well-to-do landowner, who seems to have bought a bicycle for his son not very long before the time in question, and who states that he would have been quite ready to give him new tyres or tubes if necessary, and that there was no reason why the accused should not ask him to do so, and there seems to be no reason why the accused should steal a bicycle when he already had one of his own. The accused is only 17 years of age, and the whole of his conduct seems to have been open and ingenuous. He lent his bicycle and the inflator to the brother of Harry Marx, and though this may have been because he was in ignorance of the mark on the inflator, it may also have been because he genuinely believed it to be his own. Among such near neighbours, who apparently on occasion lend bicycles and bicycle-tools to each other, it does not seem to me to be by any means unlikely that such small articles as these inflators should get interchanged accidentally (and there is evidence that the accused had purchased inflators for himself); and with regard to the patched inner tube, there seems to me to be a considerable conflict of evidence as to its identity. It is not at all unlikely that two tubes might have been patched in similar manner, and that Henry Marx may have genuinely thought—and also his witnesses—that the three closely contiguous patches proved that the tube was his, and yet they might be mistaken. The accused assisted in the search of his father's house, and persisted in his claim to the disputed articles, he also swearing to the tube as his, and pointing to the three patches in proof of his assertion. On the whole, the evidence does not seem to me to be satisfactory and conclusive in so far as it was legal and proper evidence. Some evidence of a different and objectionable nature was, however, admitted, which does not seem to me to carry the case any further against the accused; but which may have nevertheless affected the Magistrate's decision. It appears that when the accused's home was being searched, his father, when he found out the object of the search, made a proposal to pay for the missing bicycle. This proposal was made in the absence of the accused, and seems to have been due to a sudden panic on the part of the father; but it is clear that those present looked upon it as a highly suspicious circumstance, of which the Magistrate admitted evidence from more than one witness. It is true that the father subsequently explained that he made the offer, not from any guilty knowledge, but in the excitement of the moment, and to save his son from the ignominy of a prosecution, and it is also true that before remitting the case to the Magistrate the Attorney-General pointed out that such evidence had been improperly admitted. But in a doubtful case like the present, it is impossible to say how deep an impression such evidence had made on the mind of the Magistrate. Though the evidence was illegal and improper, he had heard it, and if the case was a proper one to be remitted at all, it would have been well to remit it to some other Magistrate. The evidence still stands on the record as part of the case against the accused, and affords an additional ground for quashing the proceedings. I further think that even if the evidence had been satisfactory and conclusive, the sentence of six months' hard labour would have been excessive, considering the nature of the theft and that the accused was a boy of only 17 charged with a first offence. Though I could not, if everything had been in order have interfered with such a sentence, I am not sorry that there are good grounds for quashing the conviction.

{ Jan. 12th.

Dr. Greer moved for the admission of Matthys Johannes de Wet de Kock as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Bailey moved for the admission of Johannes Albertus Louw as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the A.R.M., Somerset West.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Henry T. Wickens Tromp as an attorney and notary. Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. De Waal moved for the admission of Lawrence Naude as an attorney and notary. Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M., Somerset East.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

DC PLESSIS V. MAHOMED. { 1906.
{ Jan. 12th.

Mr. Lewis moved for confirmation of a writ of arrest and for judgment under Rule 329d for £103 15s., purchase price of sheep. The ground of the original application was that the defendant was about to leave the country. Plaintiff was a stock dealer residing at the Paarl and defendant had been carrying on business as a butcher, Clifton-street, Cape Town.

Dr. Greer opposed the application as to the writ of arrest. He read an affidavit sworn by the defendant, who denied that he had had any intention of leaving the Colony, and declared that he had been wrongfully placed under arrest. Counsel also read a supporting affidavit.

Mr. Lewis read replying affidavits.

The matter was ordered to stand over till Monday morning, in order that fuller information might be placed before the Court.

Postea. (January 15).

Counsel having been heard in argument.

Hopley, J., said if plaintiff formulated any scheme for leaving the country, it was improbable he would at once go and talk to another man about it. The information that he was selling the sheep was also denied. If a plaintiff acted on such information, he did so at his own peril, and the writ would be discharged, with costs, the writ to stand as the summons, in case the plaintiff decided to go into the principal action.

WATSON AND CO. V. THOMPSON.

Mr. Pyemont moved for confirmation of a writ of arrest, and, if defendant confessed, for judgment for £56 19s. 6d., due by virtue of a bill of exchange, and for £70 7s. 2d., due on a note and account for goods sold and delivered.

Defendant said that he had been arrested when he was about to proceed Home, where his signature was required in connection with certain property. He had intended to return to this country.

He admitted that he owed the debt. Certain bills had been lying in the bank at Kimberley, which had since been sent down for his creditors.

Final judgment was granted as prayed.

HAWORTH AND CO. V. GRAHAM.

Civil imprisonment—Act 20 of 1856, Sec. 13.

A Magistrate in district A. had issued a writ of execution against the movables of G. These movables were all in district B. The Magistrate of district B. indorsed the writ, and on a return of nulla bona having been made, issued a warrant for civil imprisonment.

Held, that a Magistrate cannot grant a decree of civil imprisonment on the judgment of any other R.M. Court.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of the R.M.'s Court at Wynberg for £15 12s. and £6 3s. 10d. costs. The matter was brought in to this court because the defendant had removed to another district.

Defendant denied that he had removed from the jurisdiction of the Magistrate's court. He admitted that he owed the money, but said that he was without property or means. He was totally unable to make any offer; he was an insurance agent, broker, and commission agent, but at present was doing no business.

Cross-examined: The debt was for provisions supplied to him when he was living at Lakeside. He was now canvassing for life and accident insurance. He was living in lodgings at Wynberg, and his average earnings had been about £10 or £12 during the past 12 months. The house where he was living belonged to his wife, and was bought about five months ago. The house was entirely under mortgage. His wife had furniture, but it was on the hire-purchase system.

Counsel having been heard on the question of whether the correct procedure had been adopted in bringing the case to this Court.

Hopley, J.: In this case the amount involved is somewhat small but a somewhat important principle has been raised, and, personally, I should have been glad to have seen a case of this paltry nature settled in one of the minor Courts without incurring the costs of coming to the Supreme Court. Here there are difficulties in the way of doing what I should have liked to have seen done. In view of the fact that the plaintiff is apparently residing at Kalk Bay, which is in the Simon's Town district, he originally took out a summons against his debtor, who was then living apparently in the Simon's Town district at a place called Lakeside, and obtained judgment in the Simon's Town Magistrate's Court, on which judgment a writ of execution was taken out in the Simon's Town Magistrate's Court. By that time the debtor had removed to Wynberg, and outside the jurisdiction of the Simon's Town Court, and the proper step for the parties then to take was taken, i.e., the writ was endorsed as laid down in the 13th section of the Act 20, 1856. It does not seem to me that section 13 goes any further than this, that is to say, if the Magistrate in district "a" has issued a writ, and there are effects in district "b," the Magistrate in district "b" must endorse such writ, and then anything that is found in district "b" may be executed upon, but it does not go so far in my opinion as to make the judgment of the first Magistrate a judgment of the second Magistrate. Therefore, when you come to further steps, such as civil imprisonment, it may well be that the Magistrate in the first district may say, "I personally cannot grant a decree of civil imprisonment upon a judgment which is not my own, although there is a writ endorsed by me upon that judgment for the purpose of execution within my district." I have also considered the 16th section, but as far as I can see there is nothing in the Act which authorises the Magistrate of a second Court to grant a decree of civil imprisonment upon a judgment of another Court. It seems to me that in this case the judgment remained the judgment of the Magistrate of Simon's Town, that the defendant has chosen to remove beyond the jurisdiction without satisfying the debt incurred in that jurisdiction, and that, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to come to the Supreme Court for his remedy. That being my opinion in the matter, the plaintiff must have judgment as prayed, but, as to the application for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant, it seems to me, as defendant has no power at the present moment to make any payment, and as imprisonment without some sort of arrangement is not prayed for, he should be discharged. Of course, if he should come into anything like an income the plaintiff may renew his application. Judgment as prayed, with costs; no order as to civil imprisonment for the present.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Dold and Van Breda. Respondent: In person.]

LOTRIET V. BOONZAIER.

Mr. De Waal moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £50 ls. 1d., and costs, £8 17s. 11d.

Mr. Upington read an affidavit by defendant, who resides at Carnarvon. Dependent said that, in consequence of losses through the Anglo-Boer war and the drought, he had been ruined, and he saw no prospect of being able to make any payment for the next two years. He had a wife and eight children to support. Counsel also read a corroborative affidavit.

Mr. De Waal read an answering affidavit by applicant, who said that he had offered to assist the defendant so as to enable him to pay the balance of the debt, but the latter had rejected any proposals made to him. He added that he believed defendant had wilfully and vexatiously tried to evade payment of the debt. Mr. De Waal also read an affidavit by a man who had acted as applicant's agent.

The matter was ordered to stand over until Monday for information as to the salary earned by the defendant as manager of the farm.

Postea (January 15).

Mr. De Waal said it was difficult to obtain the information, as the plaintiff was at present in the Orange River Colony. There was a telegram, however, stating that the plaintiff was in a good position. Mr. Upington read a couple of telegrams, which set out that the plaintiff virtually received no remuneration. There was an agreement with the plaintiff's wife. The plaintiff had a home and food for his family in return for his work on the farm.

Decree of civil imprisonment granted, to be suspended on payment of £1 per month, with leave to the applicant to move for a larger amount as soon as he thought he could show that the defendant could afford it.

DOLD V. GOUS.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence for £14 15s. 9d., on a Magistrate's Court judgment, and £2 9s. 8d. and 9s. 10d., costs; and that certain rights in the joint estate should be declared executable.

Order granted.

BENNETT V. ESTATE CAMPBELL.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the plaintiff, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for the defendant.

Mr. Jones moved for provisional sentence against the defendant for £28 14s. 7d., in her capacity as executrix in the estate of her late husband, with interest at 8 per cent. from December, 1900. Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers read the affidavit of the defendant, which set out that there were no assets in the estate. There was a life policy of £460 12s. 1d., which the creditors could not claim. The executrix merely wanted to put her position before the Court. Provisional sentence as prayed, with costs.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. VAN ROOIJEN.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for provisional sentence for £330 on a mortgage bond, with interest, and that the property be declared executable. Order granted.

VAN NIEKERK V. GRACE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £80 10s., with interest at 7 per cent. from 1901, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. Order granted.

MARAIS V VAN DER BYL.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on three mortgage bonds for £720, £630, and £1,400, with interest, less £20 paid on account, and that the property be declared executable. Order granted.

TREGIDGA V. WALLACE.

Mr. Long moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, with interest, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable, and that the rents receivable may be attached. Order granted.

BLACKBURN V. BROWN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on mortgage bonds for £2,000, £600, and £400, and £1 8s. insurance premium, that the properties specially hypothecated be declared executable, and that the rents might be attached. Order granted.

ESTATE FRASER V. ESTATE CARR.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,600, with interest, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted, subject to the production of proof that the defendant is the executor in the estate.

GUTHRIE V. UYS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment for £1,500 on a mortgage bond, with interest, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. Order granted.

BAILEY V. DOBSON.

Dr. Rainsford moved that a provisional order of sequestration be made absolute. Order granted.

LOWRY V. KOEWORT.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. Order granted.

MACLEOD V. MULLER.

Mr. Struben, on behalf of the plaintiff, moved to have a provisional order of sequestration of the defendant's estate discharged. Order granted.

LE GRANGE V. SMALLBERGER.

Mr. Bailey moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. Order granted.

HUDSON AND CO. V. RENSBURG.

Mr. De Waal moved for the final order of sequestration of the defendant's estate. Order granted.

GASSNER V. WALLIS.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the discharge of an order of sequestration against the defendant's estate. Order granted.

MALHERBE V. ESTATE WRIGHT.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence against the executor on a mortgage bond for £200, less £25 paid on account, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. Order granted.

FLEMING V. SLABBER. { 1906.
{ Jan. 12th.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £150, with interest, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

VOS V. SLABBER.

FEBRUARY V. JOHNSTONE.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

Order granted.

FRANCK V. HANSLMAIR.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

The defendant appeared, and asked by his lordship if he had any objection, he replied: "Absolutely no; I want to be free."

Order granted.

GEISTER V. WENTZEL AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Bailey moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Granted.

SACHS V. JACOBSON.

Mr. Wright moved for provisional sentence on two cheques for £74 and £83. Both cheques were dishonoured.

Order granted.

CAPE TIMES, LTD. V. STAINER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £40, for value received, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

WITEL V. SINCLAIR.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest, less £10 paid on account, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

INGLESBY V. HASTIE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence for £170, balance of a mortgage bond, with interest, and that the property be declared executable.

Order granted.

THE MASTER V. ESTATE DU TOIT.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for an order on the defendant executor in the estate calling upon him to file an account within a month.

Order granted.

DILLEY V. OLDFIELD.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence for £325 upon a certain agreement of sale of property at West London, plaintiff tendering transfer against purchase price.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones read an affidavit by defendant, who said that under the agreement plaintiff undertook to do certain guttering and painting, which she had failed to do. He was willing to take transfer provided plaintiff carried out the conditions of the agreement.

Mr. Buchanan read an answering affidavit by plaintiff and others, the effect of which was that the down pipes were serviceable, and that the defects complained of by defendant were of a paltry nature.

The matter was ordered to stand over until Monday, His Lordship suggesting that the case should be settled out of Court.

GOEDHALS V. STEGMANN. { 1906.
Jan. 12th.

Hopley, J., commented on the bad wording of the claim, as set out in the summons, and refused to make an order on the present application. He suggested that the claim should be re-drafted, so as to be intelligible.

The matter was allowed to stand over until Monday, His Lordship suggesting that the parties should come to an agreement.

Judgment as prayed.

POTGIETER V. WIGGETT.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £215, money paid to the defendant, which should have been paid by the defendant into the bank in settlement of a promissory note, and for the re-delivery of a bill for £150.

Judgment as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Ex parte VAN STADEN AND) 1906.
ANOTHER. (Jan. 15th.

This was an application brought by Philippus Theunis van Staden and Gert

Christoffel Jacobs, calling upon the Attorney-General to show cause why an order should not be granted restraining him from granting or executing a warrant for the extradition of the applicants to German South-west Africa, which warrant was sought for on the ground of an act of spoliation alleged to have been committed by the applicants, who are British subjects, in the territory of German South-west Africa, such offence being an extradition crime under the treaties governing the extradition relations between Great Britain, together with its dependencies, and Germany, together with its dependencies.

The applicants' affidavit stated that they were confined in the Kenhardt Gaol, charged with stealing cattle in German South-west Africa. They had been, up to September, in the employ of the German Government as wagon drivers and conductors. Their wages for the first four months were to be £7 10s. per month, and afterwards £22 10s. The total balance due to each of the prisoners was £57 10s., no wages having been paid to them for three months. In consequence, they, with three others, drove 55 head of cattle, the property of the German Government, over the border into the Colonial territory, and were subsequently arrested. Deponents said that they did not take the cattle with any criminal intention, but bona fide believing that they were justified in doing so, as they could not obtain the money due to them. They were British subjects, and as such were anxious to be tried by a Colonial Court of Justice. They sincerely regretted the wrong they had done, and were willing to be tried before a Colonial Court, but they feared that, under the German authorities, they would be tried by court-martial, and that any mitigating circumstances which might exist in their favour would be lost sight of.

Mr. Nightingale read an answering affidavit by Mr. P. K. Albertyn de Vos, acting chief clerk, Attorney-General's Department, who said it appeared, from papers received from the Resident Magistrate of Kenhardt, that the applicants were arrested by certain officers of the Cape Mounted Police, on or about the 24th September, 1905, on a complaint made by an officer of the German troops, that the said prisoners had stolen certain cattle and horses, the property of the German Government. When arrested, they were found in possession of 65 oxen and two horses, which were claimed by the German officer and restored to him. Prisoners were brought before the Resident Magistrate of Kenhardt on the 30th September, and remanded, pending arrangements to be made for their surrender to the German authorities under the Extradition Act. On the 4th November, 1905, the Acting Consul-General for Cape Town, applied to His Excellency the Governor to have the applicants kept under arrest. On the 18th of the said month he sent a requisition for the surrender of the said prisoners on the charge of theft of about 104 oxen. On the 28th November, 1905, the Governor issued an order under terms of section 7, Imperial Extradition Act, 1870, signifying to the Resident Magistrate of Kenhardt that a requisition had been made for the surrender of the said applicants, and requiring him to issue his warrant for their apprehension in terms of section 8 of the Extradition Act, provided the conditions of the said Act had, in his judgment, been complied with. On the 9th December the said prisoners were duly committed to Kenhardt Gaol, pending their surrender to the Government of German South-west Africa, when they signified their intention to apply for a writ of habeas corpus. One P. A. Gouws was originally arrested, together with Van Staden and Jacobs, but the Acting Consul-General for Germany intimated to His Excellency the Governor that it was not intended to make a requisition for his surrender, and instructions were thereupon given for his liberation.

Dr. Greer was for the applicants; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Dr. Greer submitted that no warrant should issue to extradite the appellants, who were charged with what was not an extradition offence as contemplated by the treaties of Great Britain and its dependencies and Germany and its dependencies. After referring to the British Acts of Parliament and treaties dealing with extradition, counsel went on to submit that before extradition was allowed the evidence must be clear that the crime with which the accused were charged was a crime coming under the provisions recognised by the Acts and treaties as extradition crimes. In reference to the particular circumstances of this case, he submitted that no extraditable crime had been committed. The facts were not disputed on the affidavits.

[Hopley, J.: Do you admit that theft would be an extradition crime?]

Dr. Greer: Yes.

[Hopley, J.: You say on the affidavits that no theft has been committed?]

Mr. Greer said his contention was that the circumstances of the removal of the cattle by the applicants were such as to take it out of the category of crime. The applicants admitted spoliation, and for that the German Government had a remedy against them in the courts of this colony. The applicants had not been paid the wages due to them.

[Hopley, J.: We are dealing, not with barbarians, but with a civilised State, and we must suppose there was a valid reason for not paying these men.]

Dr. Greer: But we have the fact—and it is not denied—that the money was owing to these men.

[Hopley, J.: I suppose the German authorities do not think it worth while denying it.]

Dr. Greer pointed out that German South-west Africa was in a state of turmoil, and that the Civil Courts might at the present juncture not be so unhampered as they otherwise would be.

[Hopley, J.: During our own turmoil, the Civil Courts were sitting and doing justice to the best of their ability, and their decrees were being carried out. His Lordship added that it seemed to him that the applicants took about £700 worth of goods to satisfy their alleged claim of £150, whether it were bogus or not. It was almost insulting to the German Government or to the civil establishment in that country to suggest that the applicants would get anything but a fair trial.]

Dr. Greer rejoined that he did not say the applicants would not get a fair trial, but he did say that in a country which was swept by the ravages of war, as that country was now, there must exist confusion and turmoil, and that the chances of their getting an absolutely fair trial might be prejudiced by the existing state of things there.

Mr. Nightingale submitted that it was perfectly clear that even apart from their defence, there was a prima facie case of theft against the applicants.

Hopley, J.: It is admitted in this case that we have an extradition treaty which applies to the German possessions in South-west Africa; it is admitted that theft, certainly theft of the nature disclosed in the present case, is one of the extradition offences for which criminals can be extradited, and it appears that the applicants, who are British subjects, took service under the Government of German South-west Africa, entered into some contract, and there seems to be some sort of civil dispute between them and the German Government as to whether or not there are moneys due to the applicants by the German Government in those parts. They say in their application that they have not been able to get satisfaction for their pecuniary claims from the German Government, and that, therefore, they proceeded to help themselves to the property of the German Government, so as to recoup themselves, though it seems to me that they took property in excess of the amount alleged to be owing to them. They seized either 65 or 104 head of cattle and two horses, and took them across the border, where they were arrested, on the application of the German authorities, by our own police, and the property in their possession was handed over to the lawful owners. They now say that they had no intention to commit theft, with which they are charged, but that it was a case of spoliation. Prima facie, it seems to me, this was a case of theft. If they can show that it was merely spoliation, they will have an opportunity of doing so when they are brought to their trial. The question I have before me is that they took away other people's property, and converted it to their own use. That would be theft, and it seems to me that this is prima facie a case of theft. Looking upon it, therefore, as far as I can see, as a case of theft, is there anything which would justify me, as a Court sitting here, in restraining the extradition of these people to German South-west Africa to await their trial? It was originally alleged that they would be tried by court-martial, and that they would not have a fair trial. That has been disposed of by the German Consulate, which says that this is a civil offence, and has nothing to do with martial law, and that they would be tried before a civil court. Then we have been told that there is an objection on the part of the authorities of this country to hand over British subjects to the German Government. That may be, but, on the other hand, it is clearly implied that they have the power of doing so if they choose, and in this case the Governor, acting by the advice of his Executive, has decided to hand over these men for their proper trial in German South-west Africa. I see no reason whatever for interfering with this decision. I think it is a perfectly just and proper one, and they should go and stand their trial. The application will be dismissed.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

VAN RYNEVELD V. GOLD- { 1906.
SMIDT. { Jan. 16th.

Mr. De Waal said this matter was ordered to stand over for information as to the service. An affidavit was now put in from Mr. Van Ryneveld stating that the defendant was keeping out of the way to evade personal service. The summons had been served at the defendant's own property in Napier-street. Counsel moved for provisional sentence for £200, on a mortgage bond, with interest and costs, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

STRAUS V. JACOBSON. } 1906.
 { Jan. 15th.

Mr. Bailey said this matter was ordered to stand over from Friday, as sufficient time had not elapsed from the date of summons, and he now moved for judgment for £64 13s., an allowance due to the plaintiff as a witness in an action brought by the defendant against Johannes Schultz, with interest and costs.

Judgment as prayed.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. De Waal moved on behalf of Johannes Gideon van Zyl for the discharge of the applicant from insolvency. The estate was voluntarily surrendered in 1897. The liabilities, according to the schedules, amounted to £320 13s., and the assets £324 11s. 1d., leaving a deficiency of £486 2s. 6d. There was nothing unfavourable in the trustee's report. The insolvent ascribed his insolvency to bad times at Malmesbury.

Application granted.

Mr. Swift moved for the discharge from insolvency of Johannes Albertus Walters. The creditors consented.

[Hopley, J.: Have you any further information as to the estate?]

Mr. Swift: No, my lord.

[Hopley, J.: You seem to have a blank sheet marked a guinea on the outside, and your attorneys ask you to move. You ought to be told a little more than that. I don't know what the creditors represent. You can make your application at a later date, when we know more about the matter, and there will be no order at present.]

Mr. Swift again mentioned the application later, and said that he was instructed that the Master's certificate was amongst the papers, and that the Master was satisfied that the necessary consent of the creditors had been obtained.

Hopley, J., said it was very inconvenient that counsel had not been properly briefed with the requisite documents. It was most important that counsel should be able to present the necessary documents. The application might be quite in order, but it was not clear to him that that was the case, and the matter should therefore stand over, with leave to mention it later.

Ex parte FERREIRA.

Mr. Bailey moved for the discharge from insolvency of Ignatius Leopoldus Ferreira, M. son. The insolvency took place in September, 1897. There was nothing unfavourable in the trustee's report, and notice had been duly given. The dividends amounted to £48 9s. 6d., the deficiency being £421 1s. 3d.

Application granted.

Ex parte ROSSOUW.

Mr. Sutton moved, under section 14 of the Act of 1884, for the discharge from insolvency of Johannes Jacobus Petrus Rossouw. The creditors had all been paid in full. The trustee had recommended that the insolvent be prosecuted for fraudulent insolvency, but that was not done. Subsequently the creditors were paid 20s. in the £, and the trustee now said he had no intention of opposing the application.

Application granted.

Ex parte PHILLIPS.

Mr. Sutton moved for the discharge from insolvency of Henry Augustus Phillips, trading as H. Phillips and Co.. The estate was surrendered in October, 1904. There was a deficiency of £900. The preferent creditors were paid in full, and the concurrent creditors received 2s. in the £. The creditors had given the necessary consent, and there was nothing unfavourable in the trustee's report.

Application granted.

Ex parte PFUHL.

Mr. Bailey moved for the release from sequestration of Johan Frederick Pfuhl. The estate was sequestered on the 30th October. At the first and second meetings no creditors appeared, and no trustee was present. Notice had appeared in the "Gazette," and there was an affidavit of full and fair surrender. There had been a compromise effected with the creditors.

Application granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

VOGEL V. VOGEL. } 1906.
 { Jan. 15th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for a decree of divorce by reason of the non-return of the defendant, in accordance with an order of Court. The defendant was ordered to restore conjugal rights to his wife, but failed to do so.

Decree of divorce granted, with costs.

Ex parte STRUWIG.

Mr. Sutton moved to make absolute a rule nisi, granted under the Derelict Lands Act, and for costs out of the estate, of an application that had been wrongly made. The previous application had been made in open court.

Rule made absolute, and costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte JONES.

Mr. Lewis moved to make absolute a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte VARKEVISSER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved to make absolute a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act.

Rule made absolute.

SMITH AND OTHERS V. SMITH.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the applicants (heirs in the estate) and Mr. Gardiner appeared for the co-executor (Henry Furtman).

The application was made on behalf of several of the heirs of the late John Smith to have one of the co-executors, Stephen Smith, removed, for failing to do his duty, and for the appointment of a substitute in his place. The co-executors under the will were Stephen Reginald Smith, son of the testator, and Henry Furtman. The representatives of three branches of the family were anxious to have a co-executor with Mr. Furtman. The position the heirs took up was that they would like someone appointed with Furtman. There was no allegation whatever against Mr. Furtman.

It was ordered that Stephen Reginald Sidney Smith be removed from the office of co-executor, but his Lordship could see no necessity to appoint a co-executor with Mr. Furtman. Costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte NAUDE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved, on the petition of Hester Petronella Susanna Naude and others, for leave to confirm a family arrangement entered into between the various members regarding the division of certain farms in the district of Worcester between the estates of Petrus Chas. Naude and Jan Abram Naude. The agreement had been unanimously entered into by those concerned in order to save the land from being sold in execution.

Hopley, J.: I see no reason to think that the parties have come to other than a wise family arrangement in this matter. All the parties who are concerned, it seems to me, have made up their minds that this arrangement they have come to is better than the somewhat complicated, cumbrous, and perhaps ruinous terms of the will under which they are at present existing, which may possibly, if strictly adhered to, end by ruining or going far towards ruining this family, who might, on the other hand, be kept on foot, and in a good position for some years. It seems to me that, in sanctioning the agreement come to between the parties, as the Court hereby does, it perhaps sweeps away the terms of the will, and puts the family into a new position, and the probability is that the meaning and true intention of the testator is best perhaps expressed by the present arrangement or better expressed at all events than under the terms of the will. The co-testator is still alive, and is one of the consenting parties. It appears that the surviving old people and the young people have come to a very sensible arrangement. This application is granted as prayed, and in granting it I may, if it is necessary to state the opinion of the Court, say that as to prayer (c), the parties will have leave to mortgage the property as prayed, notwithstanding anything in the will.

MINTO AND OTHERS V. TRUSTEES, MALAY MOSQUE.

This was an application brought by Hadje Minto, Hadje Mahomet, and Abdulla Boran, upon notice of motion, calling upon Hadje Imaum Rakep and Imaum Abdullah to show cause why an interdict should not be granted restraining the High Sheriff from paying over to the said respondents balance of proceeds of sale in execution of the Malay Mosque in Buitengracht-street, Cape Town, of which respondents are trustees.

Mr. Gardiner was for the petitioners, Mr. Upington was for the respondents.

From the affidavits of the petitioners, it appeared that the Malay Mosque, in Buitengracht-street, had recently been sold in execution, and that there was a sum of about £543 remaining in the hands of the High Sheriff after satisfying the debt. He had given notice that, unless an order of Court were obtained, restraining him from paying over the money to the respondents, as trustees of the said Mosque, he should proceed to hand it over. Petitioners said that they had been members of the Mosque for some years, although for a considerable time past they had not attended the Mosque, having left the Church because they could not agree with the Imaum. They desired to re-construct the congregation, and said that the Church had fallen into its present position, owing to the ill-administration and want of care of the congregation shown by the respondents. According to the Mohammedan religion and the Koran, moneys which had been raised for church purposes could not be used other than for church purposes.

[Hopley, J.: I do not think that the Mohammedan religion and the Koran are different from the common law in that respect.]

The affidavit of Hadje Imaum Rakiep said that none of the petitioners had been members of the congregation for many years past, and none of them had been inside the building to his knowledge for upwards of 30 years, nor had any of them contributed to its upkeep. Deponent had been Imaum of the congregation for about 40 years. The trustees were prepared, and it was their intention to use the money received from the sale of the building towards either re-purchasing the property, or obtaining other suitable premises for a Mosque, so that the intention of the original grantee of the property might be carried out. The petitioners had given no reason, nor did he (deponent) know of any reason for alleging that he and his co-trustee would not use the money to be paid out to them for church purposes. Deponent referred to an old dispute, which he had had with the father of the first-named petitioner in the '70's.

Answering affidavits were read, in which several of the statements of the Imaum were called in question, and it was stated that the petitioners, although they had not, for some years past, attended the church, had remained members of the congregation, and had supported the Mosque by labour and money. The first-named petitioner said he was informed that the Imaum intended to use the money for other than church purposes, and generally alleged that he was not a fit person to have the money entrusted to his custody.

Hopley, J., suggested that the money might be placed in a fund, such as the Guardians' Fund, pending further directions as to how it should be disposed of.

Mr. Upington said that, on behalf of his client, he could not consent to such a course. His client was the trustee, and until he had been removed from the trusteeship he was entitled to the custody of this balance, at any rate, until some good reason to the contrary had been shown.

Hopley, J.: This seems to be a matter of long standing between these parties. It is simply a continuation of an old feud in the Malay congregation of this town. Some 30 years ago the main applicant tried to dispossess the father of the present respondent or the present respondent himself from his office as minister of the Malay congregation in this town. He was unsuccessful then, and as far as I can gather from the affidavits there was a split in the congregation, and the present applicant was one of those who seceded, and for over thirty years he has never appeared in the mosque. Under the circumstances, it is only common sense that he has ceased to be a member of that particular congregation. I suppose there must have been some sort of place in which he has his religious consolation. It is not to be supposed that he never attended any place of worship. The presumption would be that during these thirty years he belonged to some other congregation, and the other two people who join him seem to be much in the same position. As far as the present respondent knows, they have never been inside his church. Now, after all these years, as soon as there is a little money in the matter, they suddenly discover they still are members of the congregation. The first question is: have the applicants shown any sort of locus standi? Are they more interested in the disposal of this money than any member of the Mohammedan faith? The mere fact that one is a Mohammedan does not seem to give him a locus standi to interfere in a matter like this, which concerns the guardianship of certain moneys in which the applicants have long ceased to have any special interest. We must remember that the respondents are the duly-elected trustees. They were unanimously appointed by the congregation, and their election was confirmed by the Supreme Court ten years ago. The chief respondent (Rakiep) has been priest-in-charge of this congregation, and he still is so. Now, in his old age, creditors have pressed him. The property was sold, and there was a sum of £500 left in the hands of the Master after the creditors were paid. There is no reason to suppose this old priest will not be able to set up his congregation somewhere or other. If there was anything to show that the respondent was likely to squander the money, the Court would restrain him from receiving it. Mr. Gardiner had to admit that the allegations are extremely vague. The money will be jointly paid out, and I hope the money will be deposited in such a way that neither trustee will be able to act without the signature of the other. At all events, they are jointly responsible, and the Master might call Abdullah's attention to the fact that he is equally responsible with Rakiep, and advise them to operate only on their joint signatures. I feel there is no good ground for restraining this payment, and the application must be refused, with costs.

[Applicants' Attorney: R. J. McLeod. Respondents': Faure, Van Eyk and Moore.]

Ex parte BRAND.

Mr. Buchanan moved to have a rule nisi made absolute for the cancellation of a certain bond, which was lost. The rule made absolute.

Ex parte JONAS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for leave to sue by edictal citation to have a deed of transfer set aside. The petitioner duly received transfer of a certain erf at Beaufort West, on which she erected certain property. The deed of transfer was in possession of one D. H. Blythe, whose business was afterwards taken over by Reece and De Villiers, but they were unable to trace the deed. Ultimately it was discovered in the Deeds Office, with a mark of transfer to relatives of the petitioner. The petitioner was able to write her name, and denied that she made the mark in question.

Leave granted to sue petitioner's son-in-law, one Herman, and her son Joseph Isaacs, by edictal citation, the property to be attached to found jurisdiction. The citation and notice to be served simultaneously and personally, and the process returnable by March 1, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte THE COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Nightingale said this was the return day of a rule calling on the respondent, one Le Roux, to show cause why certain mineral leases should not be cancelled. The leases contained a stipulation that they should be cancelled on non-payment of rent. No rent had been paid, and no work done since 1398. There had been due publication. The original lessee could not be traced. Rule made absolute.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. CONCORDIA COPPER MINING SYNDICATE.

Mr. Nightingale said this was a similar application to the last over 12 mineral leases, in Namaqualand. The Government had no knowledge of the respondents, and there had been due publication.

Rule made absolute.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REHABILITATION. { 1906.
Jan. 16th.

Mr. Swift again mentioned the application of Johannes Albertus Walters for discharge from insolvency. Counsel now presented the information required by the Court.

Order granted as prayed.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SANDERS V. CAPE TOWN TRAMWAYS CO.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for respondents), mentioned this matter, which was an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis. He said that the matter had originally been before Mr. Justice Maasdorp, and he should like an expression of opinion from the Bench as to whether it was thought the further hearing should be before his lordship. The application was opposed by the Tramways Co. on more than one ground.

Hopley, J., said that he would confer with his brother Maasdorp, and ascertain whether it would not be possible for his lordship to sit in that court and deal with this and other matters which might be brought before him, while he (Mr. Justice Hopley) took the Criminal Sessions. It might be possible to arrange for an exchange of courts to-morrow (Wednesday).

The matter was again mentioned later in the day, when Mr. Watermeyer (for petitioner) said that the application was urgent.

It was directed that the matter be again mentioned to-morrow morning.

Postea (January 17th).

Mr. Watermeyer now informed his lordship that the matter was urgent, the applicant having met with an accident on the 1st August last, having being under treatment at the hospital, and exposed to great expense in doctors' bills.

His Lordship thought that under all the circumstances it was desirable that the hearing should be before Mr. Justice Maasdorp, before whom the original matter came.

Ordered to stand over until the 1st day of term, or earlier, that the application might be heard before Mr. Justice Maasdorp.

Ex parte THE INSOLVENT ESTATE WENTZEL AND SCHLESWIG.

Mr. Bailey moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of Mr. J.

C. A. Leister and Mr. G. W. Steytler as provisional trustees in the estate of Richard Horn and Wm. Young, trading as Wentzel and Schleswig, chemists and druggists, Cape Town, pending the election of permanent trustees. It was stated that there were preferent claims against the estate of £13,812.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte BREUSING.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to assume the death of Robert Gustaf Breusing, generally known as Paul Breusing, late of Three Anchor Bay, brother of the petitioner, who resides at Worcester. The petitioner said that his brother, who had been in practice as an architect, had disappeared from Cape Town on or about the 3rd October, 1905, and had not since been seen or heard of. Further affidavits were read to the effect that a man believed to be the deceased was seen on the date named to walk into the surf at Three Anchor Bay. He floated away, and the body had not been recovered. The assets of the deceased included a sum of £252 10s. 6d., standing to his credit in the Post Office Savings Bank, certain lots of ground at Sea Point, and certain shares. A photograph of the deceased was identified by one of the deponents as that of the man whom he saw walking into the sea. The Master declined to take the usual steps without an order of Court.

Hopley, J., observed that it was surprising that the clothes of the deceased, which were ostensibly left on the shore, were not utilised to establish his identity.

Mr. Benjamin said that, no doubt, a search was made by the police, but no explanation as to what had become of the clothing was forthcoming.

Leave was granted to presume death, the Master to be authorised to take the necessary steps to appoint an executor.

Ex parte XABANISA.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for an order authorising the amendment of the name of the petitioner in certain deeds as Patrick Xabanisa.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte THE ESTATE ENGELBRECHT AND OTHERS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to cancel certain deeds.

Order granted.

Ex parte THE ESTATE ROODT.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain immovable property in the estate of the petitioner's late husband. The distribution account had been filed with the Master in 1897, and he considered it a good account and as fair valuation. The Registrar of Deeds objected to pass transfer on the ground that the valuation was not a fair one compared with the present one.

Hopley, J., ordered the matter to be referred to Mr. Norton, a sworn appraiser of the Court, for an affidavit as to the true selling values of the farms in June, 1897, with leave to the petitioner to amend the accounts in accordance with such valuation, and to obtain transfer on the basis established if so advised, or otherwise to apply again.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. DE VILLIERS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved to have an award of the arbitrators made a rule of Court. There was a consent paper filed by the respondent.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN ZYL.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved on behalf of the petitioner, executor in the estate, for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain property in the estate of her late husband, Gideon van Zyl. The original lessor of the farm could not be found.

A rule nisi was granted calling on all persons professing to have an interest to show cause why transfer should not be passed, one publication in a local paper and one in the "Gazette."

Ex parte MASSEY.

Mr. De Waal moved for an order declaring certain property derelict on which the petitioner had paid quitrent for a number of years. The owners of the land had abandoned it some 12 years ago, and the petitioner wished to obtain transfer.

Hopley, J., said he saw no way of helping the applicant. As far as he could see, there had been no final abandonment of the land, as the owners might eventually return, and it was impossible to say they did not intend to do so. Of course, if they stayed away thirty years, the applicant would probably acquire a prescriptive title. He did not see that he could make any order.

Ex parte GOLDSTEIN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the amendment of a certain birth certificate by altering the names of the petitioner and his wife to "Abraham" and "Bertram Rebecca" respectively.

Order as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE SNYMAN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to cancel a certain bond.

A rule nisi was granted calling on all concerned to show cause why the bond should not be cancelled, one publication in a Uitenhage paper and the "Gazette," returnable 28th February.

Ex parte ESTATE VISSER.

Mr. McGregor moved for an order confirming the disposition of a certain farm, and authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register the transfer.

Hopley, J., ordered the matter to stand over sine die, as he had doubts whether the matter, as the circumstances disclosed, could be decided on motion.

Postea (January 19th).

Hopley, J., said that he wished to make an intimation in reference to this matter, which had come before him the other day. He had since thought over the matter and had also laid it before the only judge whom he had been able to meet on the point, namely, the Chief Justice. They thought that there should be notice, at all events to Kruger, both individually and in his capacity as guardian of the minor children. Then if he raised no objection, it was possible that the order might be made, but if he did object then the matter would have to take another development altogether. The order of the Court would be that notice of the application be served upon Jacob Casper Kruger in his individual capacity and also as guardian of his minor children.

At a later stage Mr. McGregor (for petitioner) read a telegram which stated that all the children were majors in 1904.

His Lordship then ordered that notice of the application be served upon Jacob Casper Kruger and his major children; upon the former both in his individual capacity and as guardian of the minor children (if any).

Ex parte LOOTS.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved, on behalf of the executor testamentary in the joint estate of Loots, for an order authorising certain transfers of property in the Britstown division. The matter had already been before Mr. Justice Maasdorp, and had been referred to the Master for report.

Hopley, J., said that in ordering that the prayer be granted, one must protect the interests of the children, who were probably minors, and who had some contingent interest directly in the lands, so that these lands might not be sold at all events during their grandfather's lifetime, and they should not be prejudiced by their immediate parents. It was not likely that such things would be done, but they might be done. It was, therefore, ordered that the petition be granted, in terms of the prayer, and according to the areas therein set forth, the division of the farms Eerstegeluk and Tweedege-luk, to be made along the line "d," "g," and "x," as shown in the plan put in amongst the papers in the proceedings, and that transfer be allowed to be given to the various heirs according to the arrangement made by them and the executor, subject to the terms of the will as to the rights of the children.

Ex parte THE ESTATE DE BEER.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved on the petition of the executor dative for leave to sell certain land in the division of Bedford.

Ordered to stand over for production of a further affidavit as to the value of the ground in question.

Ex parte THE ESTATE ROBERTSON.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved on the petition of the executors testamentary for leave to raise on mortgage a sum not exceeding £3,000 upon certain landed property in the Claremont Municipality, so as to discharge certain debts due to one of the petitioners (Mr. Fraser), the balance, about £1,500, to be divided among the six heirs, all majors. The object of the application was to avoid a sale of the property in the present depressed state of the market.

Order granted authorising a mortgage not exceeding £3,000 to be raised, and to be applied as stated in the petition, and authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register such bond.

Ex parte CARTER.

Mr. Lewis moved on the petition of Frederick James Carter, of Ceres, for leave to sue his late employers, Kirsch and Co., who are storekeepers at Ceres, in forma pauperis for £300 damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained through the negligence of a fellow servant, acting in common employment. Petitioner said that his right arm was fractured, and his body was paralysed as a result of the accident. He had been an out-patient of the New Somerset Hospital. Counsel said he was prepared to certify in favour of the application.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon the respondents to show cause on the first day of next term why leave should not be granted as prayed.

BURSLEM V. BURSLEM.

Dr. Greer moved, on the petition of Nellie Alberta Burslem, for leave to sue her husband, George James Burslem, by edictal citation for divorce, by reason of the defendant's adultery. The petition stated that petitioner was married to George James Burslem at Orange, New South Wales, in January, 1885. Petitioner and her husband came to this city and resided here for a number of years, but dissensions and differences arose, and on the 24th October, 1903, they entered into a notarial deed of separation. On the 12th December of the same year an order was granted by the Supreme Court, by consent, in terms of the said deed. Since that time the petitioner and her husband had lived apart. Petitioner's husband continued to live in Cape Town for some time after the application. On the 28th May, 1904, he left Cape Town, under the assumed name of Lieut. George, by S.S. Kaikoura, trading to New Zealand. On the 15th of the same month, one Jeanie Angeline Mary Kelly left likewise for New Zealand under the name of Mrs. Brown. Petitioner knew that her husband and the said Kelly had been on very friendly terms while residing in Cape Town, and from information she had received she went to Christchurch, New Zealand, and from further information she there received she left for Sydney, New South Wales, and proceeded to the defendant's house, situated in Gordon-street, Paddington, and found that her husband and Kelly were living together as man and wife. Petitioner was living in Cape Town.

[Hopley, J. (to Dr. Greer): Why did she not sue him there and then, seeing that they were in their original country?]

Apparently she has settled down in this country. There was some considerable property in this country, and that property was divided by the decree of separation between the parties. I think I am correct in stating that all the property belonging to the estate was situate in this country.

Well, my lord, his property is in this country, and he does not appear here to object to the domicile.

[Hopley, J.: Of course, he does not appear to object, because he knows nothing of these proceedings. I do not know what he will do when he receives your citation.]

The question of domicile might then be raised. Counsel submitted that there was sufficient before the Court to show prima facie that the respondent's domicile was in this Colony.

I believe there was property amounting to several thousands of pounds when they were judicially separated. If, afterwards, the question of domicile is raised it could then be threshed out.

[Hopley, J.: What strikes me is that this man came out here from Australia, and that he afterwards returned to his original country. Is this his proper forum? She went there to track them. Why did she not proceed to move for her divorce in New South Wales? Why should we be bothered with this New South Wales intrigue?]

Dr. Greer said that the respondent had already accepted the jurisdiction of this Court in regard to the order made upon the notarial deed. Respondent had had livery stables in Cape Town.

Hopley, J.: It seems to me rather a pity that when she caught them living together she did not proceed against the respondent for divorce. Of course, there may have been practical reasons why she should not have proceeded in Australia. I can quite understand that she is domiciled here, but the question is whether her husband is domiciled here. I should like to know more as to the property, how it stands, whether he parted with his share before he went away, and whether he seems to have finally severed his ties with this country. You may mention the matter again, and I will grant relief to the petitioner if I can possibly do so.

Postea (January 18th).

Dr. Greer said that he had a further affidavit in reference to this matter, which was an application for leave to sue the husband for divorce by reason of his alleged adultery. The ground of the application was that the defendant was believed to be residing beyond the jurisdiction, presumably, in New South Wales. Counsel said that since the matter was brought before the Court on Tuesday, an affidavit had been sworn by George T. Hopgood, of the C.I.D., to the effect that he saw the defendant, who was accompanied by a young woman, between Rondebosch and Westerford, between the 14th of December and early in the present year. Hopgood had volunteered this information after seeing the reports of the matter in the papers.

His Lordship said that the whole complexion of the affair was now changed. If further inquiries were made, it might be possible to serve a summons on the defendant. There would be no order at the present stage on the original application, but leave would be given to renew the application if, hereafter, it were found necessary.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Friedlander and Du Toit. Respondent: In default.]

Ex parte BETHLEHEM.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on the petition of Elias Bethlehem, a merchant carrying on business at Humansdorp, and his wife, Paula, for leave to register an ante-nuptial contract, excluding community of property, as if the same had been executed before marriage. The parties were married during a visit by the petitioner to England in November last, the ceremony taking place at the Duke-street Synagogue, London. The first petitioner was a naturalised British subject.

After hearing the petition,

Hopley, J., said that there appeared to have been a genuine error on the part of the petitioners. Leave would be granted to enter into a contract, to have the effect of an ante-nuptial contract, saving the rights of creditors, and all parties interested up to date of registration of contract.

Ex parte HILLIARD.

Mr. Benjamin moved as a matter of urgency, for an order authorising the attachment of a certain sum of money, which may be found to be due to one Hendrik Gortner, who was indebted to the petitioner in the sum of £83 9s. 4d.

Rule nisi granted, authorising the attachment of £60, returnable on the 1st February, rule to operate as an interim interdict.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

WHEELER V. LOGAN. { 1906.
{ Jan. 17th.

Forum—R.M. Court—Costs—Act
20 of 1856, Sec. 35.

The plaintiff (domiciled in Cape Town) wishing to sue defendant, who was domiciled within the Magisterial District of W., for services as an expert witness in an arbitration case, asked him to accept service of summons in Cape Town. On defendant's refusal to do this, plaintiff summoned him in the Supreme Court and recovered less than £20. He now applied for specially qualifying costs in addition to the ordinary costs allowed by the Rules of Court.

Held, that as the cause of action had arisen within the district of W., plaintiff by Sec. 35 of Act 20 of 1856 was only entitled to costs on the R.M. Court scale.

This was an application upon notice calling upon James D. Logan to show cause why judgment in the action recently heard between the parties should not be entered for the plaintiff, with costs. Mr. Benjamin was for applicant; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), was for respondent.

Mr. Benjamin said that the matter arose out of an action brought by plaintiff against defendant to recover a certain amount in respect of his services as a witness in reference to an arbitration. His lordship found for plaintiff for a less sum than £20, the exact amount being £9. The question of costs was allowed to stand over.

[Hopley, J.: I remember; there was a dispute between counsel as to whether or not Logan objected to service in this town, or whether he should have been served in this town.]

Affidavits having been read on both sides,

Sir H. Juta submitted that it was quite clear from Act No. 20, 1856 (section 35) that the applicant was not entitled to his costs. It was found in the judgment given by his lordship that the contract on which Wheeler succeeded was entered into at Matjesfontein, in the district of Worcester. The Act made it perfectly clear that the plaintiff had not an election to proceed in the Supreme Court, and thus get costs on the higher scale. The whole of the cause of action arose at Matjesfontein—that was where the defendant resided—and there was, therefore, no election to the applicant. Again, if Mr. Logan resided at Cape Town, the plaintiff resided at Maitland, and thus in the same district, so that again plaintiff would have had no election.

Mr. Benjamin said that his learned friend had omitted to mention section 34 of the Act. There was a question of law concerned in this case that had never previously been decided in the Court—i.e., as to whether a witness was entitled to special qualifying costs beyond the scale of costs awarded according to the rules of Court. For the first time in the recorded history of this Court appeared a decision that a witness was entitled to such costs.

Mr. Benjamin: If it had been raised in the Magistrate's Court, there certainly would have been an appeal to this Court.

[Hopley, J.: There is always an appeal if the Magistrate had decided wrongly.]

That is so, but I would submit that when questions of law, especially doubtful points of law, are involved, the Court would always hold that the plaintiff was entitled to come into this Court and have the matter decided once for all. Counsel went on to quote English cases, and pointed out that it was to the advantage of the whole country to have had a decision on this point.

Sir H. Juta, in his reply, said that all this that was now raised by his learned friend was raised, as the Chinese said, to "save his face."

Mr. Benjamin: It was raised at the trial.

Hopley, J.: In this matter I was of opinion at the trial, as has been pointed out, that the case should not have been brought into the Higher Court, and it was a matter in which, if possible, a Magistrate's decision should have been obtained, followed, of course, by a judgment, as I suppose the Magistrate would probably have come to the same conclusion as I did, that there was a sum of £9 due to the plaintiff, which would have carried Magistrate's Court costs. I went so far as to give judgment at that time for that amount, with Magistrate's Court costs, until, at the request of Mr. Benjamin, I reserved that particular point, because, he said, it had not been possible for his client to sue in the Magistrate's Court, his client residing in Cape Town, and Logan having refused to accept service in Cape Town, and it having become necessary to serve him in the district of Worcester. On that point, there was a dispute, and the matter was deferred for further information, and the question of costs was allowed to stand over. Now, it would appear that, whether by his instructions or not, Logan's agent in Cape Town did say that Logan could not accept service here, so that service had to be given in the Worcester district at considerable expense. If the matter rested on that point alone, I should give judgment for costs on the higher scale, but I am bound by the terms of the Act, which seem to be very strong—and, in fact, Mr. Benjamin has not tried to controvert it—and the Act clearly lays down not only that the parties must reside in different districts, but that no part of the cause of action should have arisen in defendant's district before the plaintiff has the option of coming to the Higher Court for his remedy. It would appear from the reading of the 35th section that if the defendant resides in the district in which the cause of action arose, although it be the district in which the plaintiff may not reside, still the plaintiff must follow him into his own (defendant's) district for his remedy. That being so, it seems to me that the plaintiff chose the wrong Court. In this case the cause of action arose at Matjesfontein, and the action ought to have been brought in the district of Worcester. That being the case, it seems to me that I have no option but to confine the costs to Magistrate's Court scale. It is said that an important point of law was involved in this case, and that I should therefore exercise the discretion that is in the Court, and give plaintiff costs on the higher scale. I do not myself think that the point of law was such a one as the Magistrate was incompetent to deal with, or which would justify the plaintiff in risking an adverse decision on the question of costs in coming to the Higher Court. Costs must be allowed only on the Magistrate's Court scale.

Sir H. Juta mentioned the question of costs of the present application.

[Hopley, J.: Costs of the present application must be against the applicant.]

[Applicant's Attorneys: Moore and Son. Respondent's: Van Zyl and Bussinne.]

WALKER V. CORDEAUX AND { 1906.
FARROW. } Jan. 17th.

Interdict—Contract in restraint of trade.

F. had contracted with W. and C. (then in partnership) that he would not, "within five years, after the date on which he shall leave Messrs. C. and W.'s employ without Messrs. C. and W.'s previous consent in writing, practice as an architect, &c., in East London or the Eastern Provinces of the Cape Colony, &c." F. left the employ of C. and W. with their written consent, and subsequently C. and W. dissolved partnership and C. secured F.'s services. W. now applied for an interdict restraining C. from employing F., and F.

Held, that in view of the doubtful and uncertain terms of the contract, of doubts as to its reasonableness: and of W.'s failure to show that he had sustained damage: the interdict must be refused.

This was an application brought by Leonard Kendle Walker, architect, East London, against his late partner, Herbert John C. Cordeaux, for an interdict restraining him from engaging or employing one Wilford Farrow as clerk, assistant, agent, etc., at East London, King William's Town, or any portion of the Eastern Provinces, for a term of five years. An interdict was also sought against the said Farrow restraining him from accepting employment in any of the capacities named with any surveyor or architect in the area named or from practising as an architect or surveyor.

The facts were briefly that Messrs. Walker and Cordeaux had been in partnership, and during the continuation of the partnership they entered into a contract for the services of Mr. Farrow. According to that contract, he agreed that he was not within five years of the date when he should leave Messrs. Cordeaux and Walker's employ, without Messrs. Cordeaux and Walker's consent in writing, to practise as an architect and surveyor in East London, or in the Eastern Province, nor be engaged as clerk, assistant, and so forth in such business. That contract was entered into in February, 1903, and it was extended for another year in November, 1903. Mr. Farrow's term of service with Messrs. Cordeaux and Walker expired on the 31st December, 1905, so that from the 1st January, 1906, Mr. Farrow bound himself not to practise nor be interested in the business of an architect in the Eastern Province. In August last year the partnership of Messrs. Cordeaux and Walker expired by effluxion of time. Mr. Farrow received the amount of his salary to the end of December, 1905. He had now been engaged by Mr. Cordeaux, and this the applicant said was a breach of the agreement which Mr. Farrow had entered into.

From the affidavits it appeared that the second respondent had been employed at a salary of £25 a month, and that, according to Mr. Cordeaux, he was only qualified to act as a building and quantity surveyor. Applicant said that Farrow had been sent to manage Mr. Cordeaux's branch at King William's Town, while Mr. Cordeaux, on the other hand, said that he did not propose to injure any business of Mr.

Walker, and that he had morely tried to befriend Mr. Farrow by retaining his services. There had been no collusion between himself (Cordeaux) and Farrow, and if the latter could better himself elsewhere, he should be only too glad to help him.

The replying affidavit of the applicant said Farrow was qualified to practise as an architect, as Cordeaux well knew when he took him into partnership. The statement was untrue that Farrow was only qualified to practise as a building and quantity surveyor.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C.) for applicant. Mr. McGregor for respondents.

Counsel said Farrow's agreement terminated on the 31st December, 1905, he received his salary in full up to that date, and there was no moral obligation on Mr. Cordeaux. The whole objects of these contracts was to prevent competition on the part of the gentleman who was brought from England. Counsel cited the case of Palmer v. Mallet (36 Chan. Div., p. 411), in which an injunction was granted after the partnership had been dissolved by the effluxion of time, and Smith and Harthorne (76 "Law Times"), to show how far the Court would go to enforce these contracts.

Mr. McGregor said that the present instrument was one between Farrow and Cordeaux and Walker. In the case of Patterson's Executors v. Webster, Steel and Co. (1 Juta, p. 350, the Chief Justice laid it down as a general principle that the Court could only recognise the members of which the firm consisted, and any change destroyed the identity of the firm. The only goodwill in an architect's business could be the value of the connection. So soon as the partnership dissolved, there was no one to give Farrow leave to practise, nor was there anyone who could stop him. Supposing the Court held that the agreement was one governing the man, still there came the question as to whether or not the agreement was reasonable. Could it be reasonable that such an extensive agreement, covering the Eastern Province, should be upheld? Of course, the facts of each case would have to be taken into consideration. Taking Chartreuse, for instance, counsel did not doubt for a moment that a man knowing the secret of Chartreuse, in which the whole world was interested—could be restrained on a contract anywhere.

Sir H. Juta, in reply, contended that it was contemplated that the restraint upon Farrow should exist not merely during the life of the partnership, but after the termination of the partnership. Upon this agreement, it was all important that they should look at the intention of the parties. Counsel relied strongly on the fact that the agreement was for a period longer than the term of the original partnership.

Hopley, J., called attention to clause 6 of the agreement, and said that it appeared from that clause that the restraint was against Farrow in case he left without the consent in writing of Cordeaux and Walker.

Sir H. Juta: Neither of the parties has read the agreement in that way. That is not the idea of the agreement. The point has never previously been raised.

Hopley, J.: In this case the Court is asked for the extraordinary remedy of an interdict to restrain a person, who is at present earning his living by acting as an architect's assistant in the town of King William's Town, from doing so, on the ground that he contracted himself out of the right to carry on his particular calling in any portion of the Eastern Provinces of the Cape of Good Hope. The first point that I feel about this matter is that it seems on the wording of the sixth clause of the agreement between this person, who is sought to be so restrained, and the firm of which at that time the present applicant was one of the partners, extremely doubtful whether there has been any breach whatsoever on the part of respondent. The clause reads as follows: "Wilford Farrow agrees that he will not, within five years after the date on which he shall leave Messrs. Cordeaux and Walker's employ without Messrs. Cordeaux and Walker's previous consent in writing, practise as an architect or surveyor in East London, or the Eastern Provinces of the Cape Colony, nor be concerned, engaged or interested either as principal partner, assistant, clerk, or agent in any such business in East London, or the Eastern Provinces of the Cape Colony." Now that is capable of two readings. Grammatically speaking, the comma being where it is, after "writing," I should say that the first meaning of it is that he shall not within five years after he leaves the employ of the firm without their consent in writing do certain things, but, of course, it has been argued that no one has read it in that way, that it has not been taken up in that way, and that they all consider that the contract means that he shall not, within five years, leave the firm's employment to practise as a surveyor or architect in East London or in the Eastern Provinces of the Cape Colony without Messrs. Cordeaux and Walker's previous consent in writing. It is capable of that reading certainly. I think the more simple one, the more grammatical one, is the one I first dealt with, and, if that is the case, the respondent Farrow has never broken this agreement at all, for he did not leave their employment without their consent in writing. Then there are other doubtful and arguable points, which arise in this matter, and I am not entirely satisfied by the case of Palmer v. Mallett, that it is absolutely good law that either of these parties, after the dissolution of the partnership, without its being expressly stated in the agreement, should come and sue, individually, for the breach alleged to have taken place in an agreement made with the firm of which they were at the time of the agreement members. As to the case of Palmer v. Mallett, and the other cases, I quite see the force and strength and logic of the judgments of the Lord Justices of Appeal, but I am not absolutely satisfied, on the wording of the present agreement, that those judgments can be applied to this case. The next point that occurs to me is, should this agreement be enforced or should it be held to be void as being wide and in restraint of trade and in restraint of the ordinary right that any man has to earn his living and his livelihood in any portion of His Majesty's dominions? Of course, a man can contract himself out of that right, but at the same time the contract must be reasonable, and it must be shown that there are parties so interested that it is a vital matter to them that a person should be so deprived of his common law rights. Now here is a person, without any particular distinguished position, merely, as far as I can see, a humble architect's assistant, who comes to this country at a salary which is not a large one—£25 a month—and yet it is in this contract sought to restrain him from earning that sort of livelihood as an architect's assistant, or in any sort of line which is at all connected with the architect's profession in the whole of the Eastern Provinces of the Cape Colony. What that exactly means I am not prepared at this moment to state. It may just mean the Eastern Province proper, as it was, it may include the whole of British Kaffraria, and it may also include the great Transkeian territories. It seems to me that there is a great deal to be said on the point as to whether or not this contract is not void, or it should not be held to be void for vagueness, and because it is too wide and too much in restraint of the ordinary common law right that this man Farrow has of earning his living practically in the only line of profession that he knows. I do not say that the present applicant could not succeed, but there are these doubtful points which occur to me, and they all seem to me to be quite sufficient, certainly taken cumulatively, to make me refuse this extraordinary remedy which I take it should only be granted when the right is perfectly clear, and I do not think it is clear in this particular case. There is another reason that occurs to me. I do not know how, on the circumstances disclosed on the affidavits, it would be possible for Mr. Walker (the present applicant) to prove that he is being in any way damaged. It is said that he has a large interest in seeing that this contract is enforced, so that Cordeaux shall not have the services of Farrow. If that is so, he will probably be able to show how he is damaged in an action. If he is not damaged at all, it does not seem to me that he should have this extraordinary remedy. At any rate, I think that so far as the present proceedings are concerned the interdict asked for should be refused. As regards costs they had best abide the result of the action to be brought, if an action be brought. The order of the Court is that the application be refused, costs to abide the result of an action to be forthwith instituted, failing which applicant to pay costs.

DRUMMOND V. LEZARD.

Mr. Gardiner moved on behalf of the applicant (defendant in the action) for the removal of the trial to Kimberley before the High Court of Griqualand. The defendant had taken exception to the declaration on the ground that it disclosed no cause of action. The hearing of the trial and the exception were set down for February 2, and counsel pointed out if the exception was upheld the defendant would be put to unnecessary expense in bringing his witnesses from Kimberley. The action was for £1,500 damages for an alleged breach of trust on the part of the defendant, who, the plaintiff alleged, handed over a document contrary to his instructions, with the result that he was arrested, and after being tried for forgery, was found not guilty.

The applicant, Hildyard Home Drummond, read his affidavit, in which he set out that owing to the professional negligence of the defendant, he was detained for three months on a charge of forgery. The witnesses, he said, could only give evidence in mitigation of damages.

Hopley, J., ordered the exception to be heard on February 2, and the case to be set down for trial on February 23. After the exception was heard, the defendant could renew his application for removal, costs to be costs in the cause.

ESTATE DARROLL V. INSOLVENT ESTATE HUMPHRIES AND TURKINGTON.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the trustee in the insolvent estate of Humphries and Turkington, to pay over a certain dividend due by one Duggan to the applicant, to whom Duggan owed money for rent. Duggan's whereabouts were unknown.

Hopley, J., granted a rule nisi, to operate as an interim interdict, to be served on the trustee, Mr. W. A. Currie, restraining him from paying over the money. Rule returnable February 1. A copy to be sent to P.O. Box 1,367, and one publication in the "Cape Times."

Ex parte THE KALK BAY MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for an order restraining James Colley, the contractor to the drainage works, from removing any of the material which was against the express terms of the contract.

A rule nisi, returnable on the first day of term, was granted, restraining the contractor, or his agent, or servants, from removing any of the materials in the meantime, and, further, calling on him to show cause why he should not return any materials he has taken from the works.

Ex parte MADER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved on behalf of the applicant (defendant in the action) for an order, calling on the respondent to pay over £50 to enable her to defend proceedings against her for a decree of divorce.

Dr. Greer appeared for the respondent, and put in an affidavit by the respondent's attorney.

Hopley, J., ordered the respondent to pay to the applicant £35, the question of costs to stand over.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

SPRINGFIELD PUBLIC SCHOOL { 1906.
V. BAUMGARTEN AND { Jan. 18th.
OTHERS.

Public school—Committee—Irrregular election.

In 1886 the Government granted a certain piece of land as a site for a school and cemetery for the use of certain German immigrants. These people, with the help of a few friends, built the school, and subsequently a German church adjoining. Government provided an annual grant towards the teacher's salary. In August, 1905, practically all the German immigrants in the neighbourhood met and decided to abandon the Government grant from January 1st, 1906, and to sever their connection with the Education Department, and they gave the Department notice of their intention. Thereafter some 9 persons who disapproved of this resolution met together and elected a new school committee without having given public notice of their intention to do so. The new committee now applied for an order of Court, calling upon the original committee to hand over to the applicants all books, papers, &c., &c., belonging to the said school.

Held, that as the applicants had not been legally elected as a committee, the application must be refused with costs.

This was an application upon notice calling upon the respondents, the Rev. Heinrich Baumgarten and others, to show cause why an order should not issue from this Court compelling them to hand over to applicants, as constituting the committee of the Springfield Public School, and recognised as such by the Department of Education, all books, papers, documents, and moneys belonging to the said school.

Mr. Howell Jones was for applicants; Dr. Greer was for respondents.

Dr. Greer: Who first mentioned the matter, said that it was one of considerable urgency, involving a declaration as to whether this was a public or private school. The school should open on Monday next, and both parties, he understood, had engaged teachers who were ready to go on with the work of the school.

[Hopley, J.: Is it a matter that can be settled on motion?]

Dr. Greer: I don't know that it can be settled altogether on motion, but at any rate some sort of order should be given.

Hopley, J., intimated that the case should be called.

Mr. Jones said that the application was by certain gentlemen who had been elected as the committee of the Springfield Public School, situated on the Cape Flats, and who were recognised by the Government, for an order upon respondents, who had also been elected at another meeting, as the applicants said without proper notice, and who had not been recognised by the Government, requiring the respondents to deliver up the movables at the school.

From the affidavits it appeared that the allegation was that the school had, since July, 1884, been carried on as an undenominational school, under the Department of Education. Applicants (Carl H. A. Horstmann and others) said that, hearing in the latter part of 1905 that it was the intention of the existing committee to make the school a private German school, and as they (applicants) desired to preserve the school as a public school, they held a meeting, at which they elected a committee. Subsequently, a meeting was held by the old committee, at which another committee was elected.

The Rev. Heinrich Baumgarten, in his affidavit, said that he had been chairman of the committee of the Springfield Public School, and that he was pastor of the community of German immigrants on the Cape Flats. The buildings in which the school was held were erected, and paid for by the German immigrants, many of them contributing labour when they could not contribute funds. It had been resolved by an overwhelming majority at a meeting of those interested, that the school should be converted into a German private school. The applicants represented non-German, and insignificant elements, and included the rural constable, who had been appointed a member of the new Board. Mr. Baumgarten submitted that the applicants had no locus standi so far as the school was concerned.

From an affidavit by the Acting Superintendent-General of Education, it seemed that the department recognised the committee appointed by the meeting convened by applicants, not only on the ground that the meeting convened by respondents was irregular, but because of the desire of a considerable portion of the inhabitants that the school should continue as a State-aided public school, the absence of any sound reason why the continuity of the function exercised by the previous committee should not be preserved, and on other grounds.

Mr. Jones said that notice had been given by the respondents of an application for an order requiring the applicants to vacate the premises. This notice, however, was irregular.

Dr. Greer said that it was to the interest of both sides that the respondents' application should be heard.

Hopley, J., said that if the notice was irregular, the respondents' application could not be heard at the present stage.

Dr. Greer said that the applicant committee had taken possession of the building. The site, by a Government grant, was given to certain trustees. Those trustees, two of them at any rate, were opposed to the action taken by the irregularly-convened meeting. The ground was originally granted to the Civil Commissioner, the pastor for the time being of the German immigrants on the Cape Flats, and a trustee from time to time to be selected by the said immigrants on the condition that the ground should be used for the purposes of a school, and burial ground, in connection with the German immigrants on the Cape Flats.

[Hopley, J.: But that means a Government school. It is granted by the Government as a Government school, and amongst other things they put a Government nominee on the Board in the name of the Civil Commissioner.]

Dr. Greer: As a matter of fact, the grant is made generally for the advancement of the German immigrants for burial ground and school purposes. On the ground there has also been erected a church as well as a school. There is no limitation in the Act as to what the school shall be.

Mr. Jones said that the sole object of the respondents at the present time was to convert this public school into a private school, and to appropriate all the movable assets thereof, which had been contributed from time to time, not only by the Government, but all other persons, who did not say for a moment that they had contributed these funds and this furniture on the strength of its being a private German school. The funds had been contributed, not to a German private school, but to a public undenominational school. Really, the object was to exclude in this way the operation of the School Board Act. The position taken by respondents was, he submitted, quite an untenable one. Clearly, the applicants were the committee duly elected, according to the School Board regulations.

Hopley, J., remarked that it seemed to him to be extraordinary that any one in the position of Horstmann should have convened a meeting to elect a committee.

Mr. Jones submitted that the school had been carried on hitherto as a public undenominational school.

[Hopley, J.: It is a pity there is this split.]

I quite agree, but the people who are at the wrong end of the split are the respondents. They have no locus standi. Counsel (continuing) submitted it was already one of those schools which were referred to in the Act as a public undenominational school. Private schools were not aided by the Government. It was the duty of the committee on the expiration of their office to hand over the assets to the School Board Committee.

Dr. Greer said it was evident there was an attempt being made to carry an issue against the wishes of the majority of the beneficiaries. It was quite clear that this action was taken by a disappointed minority, who were endeavouring to assert their opinions as against the decision of the majority. The land was granted for the purposes of a school, and burying ground to the German immigrants. It was given for the purpose of inducing the German immigrants to settle there, and the German immigrants or their friends had built the school. The Education Department had never granted a penny towards the building. It was true that the Government gave assistance by providing some furniture, but that furniture had long since gone, and the present furniture was supplied by the German people or their friends, and the sole grant of the Government was for work and labour done. Surely, it was not to be said that the Government had acquired a right not only to the building, but to the whole of the money subscribed to that school? The contention in itself was manifestly absurd. There was a precedent in the case of St. Martin's School, Long-street, the committee of which, after receiving the grant, gave notice of their intention to relinquish it in favour of a private school, and the Education Department acquiesced in their decision. The real test in the matter, counsel submitted, was the wishes of the majority of the beneficiaries.

Mr. Jones having been heard in reply,

Hopley, J., said it was to be regretted, in a small and flourishing community, there should be any squabbling over the important matter of education. What he had to consider was whether the applicants had shown a clear right to have it declared that certain property must be handed over to them, and that they must be entrusted with the management of a school which had been erected at Springfield, on the Wynberg Flats, by the German community. Apparently the school was built together with the church and the teacher's house upon a piece of land granted in 1886 by the late General Torrens, when he was Administrator here, to the German immigrants, for the purposes of a school and burying ground, and leave afterwards was added to erect a church. The Germans seemed to have contributed money by labour, and collected money from their friends in other lands and people in South Africa to put up these buildings.

It was clear that the object of the grant was to encourage these German immigrants on the ground, and to give them the solace of their own religious ritual and the power to keep on the language of their Fatherland. In the building erected by them the Government paid for a certain amount of furniture, but the original furniture had worn out, and what was in the school at present had been contributed by the school itself, and direct Government aid had not been obtained. The school seemed up to quite recently to have been managed as an undenominational public school, the Government merely contributing towards the salary of the teachers for every school term. Within the past year a new School Board Act was passed, and it might be in consideration of the terms of that Act, or it might be that they were actuated by other matters of policy, such as keeping the school entirely a white man's school, but whatever their reasons were these people met on the 21st August, and the affidavit of Mr. Baumgarten set out that the meeting called by him was attended by practically all the German immigrants or their descendants, when it was decided from the 1st January, 1906, to change the school to a private German school. He took it to mean that they wished to have the absolute control of their own school, and they gave the Government notice of their intention. Of the fifty voters who were present, it was stated that the resolution was carried by 41 to 9. Among the 9 dissentients was Mr. Horstmann. Had these people any locus standi to come to Court to claim that they were properly appointed as a committee? It was evidently in the minds of these people that as they were to have a private school at the end of the year, it would not be necessary to elect a School Board Committee. The notices which appeared in the "Cape Times" and "South African News" did not say that it was proposed to elect a new committee, and Mr. Baumgarten had said that the English language in which the notices appeared was not generally read, and it did not put before them clearly the main issue which would be the election of a new Board of Management. It was perfectly clear there should be some notice to the guarantors as to who were the members to be elected. If the applicants wished to insist upon a regulation as showing Mr. Baumgarten's meeting to be illegal, surely they must abide by the other regulations laid down, none of which they seem to have kept. He could not find that the applicants had acquired such a right, such a clear locus standi as to justify the Court in granting them the order. It might be that other points would arise hereafter. They might be able to show they were properly elected, but it had not been shown that the applicants had any right to the order they asked for, and the application must be refused, with costs.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Reid and Nephew. Respondents': Friedlander and Du Toit.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE YATES. } 1906.
} Jan. 18th.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on behalf of the creditors, in the estate, who represented almost the entire liabilities for the appointment of a provisional trustee to carry on the business of an hotel at Swellendam.

Application granted, Mr. F. Simpson Reid appointed as provisional trustee.

Ex parte GESWINT.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for leave to the petitioner to exchange certain property in the interests of the estate of his father, to whom he was duly appointed as curator.

Order as prayed.

Ex parte ISMAIL AND OTHERS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to sell the shares of two minors in certain property, and for the appointment of their mother as guardian to act on their behalf, and to pass transfer. There were certain arrears due in respect of a mortgage, and the bond-holder threatened an action. A portion of the building fell in during the severe weather last winter.

Order granted as prayed, any surplus belonging to the minors to be paid into the Guardians' Fund.

Ex parte RUBBI AND WIFE.

Mr. Benjamin moved on the petition of Rubbi and wife for leave to register an ante-nuptial contract in terms of draft deed, annexed to petition, and for an amendment of his name, as registered in certain bonds. The first-named petitioner, who belonged to Italy, came to this country some years ago, and commenced business in Cape Town. During October last, he was married to the second petitioner in Padua, Italy.

Order granted as prayed, saving the rights of any creditors up to date of registration.

Ex parte BOYCE.

Dr. Greer moved on the petition of J. W. Boyce, acting on behalf of his minor daughter, for leave to raise a mortgage of £270 upon certain property in Stirling-street, Cape Town. The petitioner offered as collateral security a second bond on his property at Milnerton.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte KOHNE

Mr. Gutsche moved, on the petition of C. H. H. Kohne, acting on behalf of his minor children, for leave to pass a mortgage bond of £150 upon certain property, situate off Kent-road, Wynberg. The money was required to effect repairs. Counsel stated that the Master, in his report, seemed to have confused the property referred to in the present application with another property, which had previously formed the subject of an application by petitioner.

Order granted, authorising the bond to be raised.

Ex parte CONGO.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on the petition of Theophilus Congo, as the eldest son of Nathaniel Congo, a native, who had died intestate, for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds in Cape Town to pass transfer. The petition was accompanied by an affidavit by the Resident Magistrate of Umzimkulu, stating that petitioner was, according to native law and custom, the sole heir of his father, and to the best of his knowledge and belief entitled to the land. The matter had been ordered to stand over for more definite information, and an affidavit was now read from Mr. Moore, attorney, stating that Congo had been appointed executor ad litem.

Hopley, J., said that he could scarcely see how the application was necessary under the circumstances.

Mr. De Villiers said that the Master desired an order of Court authorising him to act.

Ordered to stand over. Subsequently, Hopley, J., remarked that he did not see any necessity for the application. If the Master could not see his way to do the necessary things without an order, then the matter should be mentioned again. He was not prepared to make what seemed to him at present to be an unnecessary order.

Postea (January 22nd).

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers again mentioned this matter, which was an application by a native, as the eldest son and heir, according to native law and custom, of his father, for an order on the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain property in his father's estate. The matter had been ordered to stand over for further inquiries.

Rule nisi granted calling upon all persons concerned to show cause on the last day of next term, rule to be published once in a Kokstad paper and once in "Imvo."

HODGSON V. MCKAY AND CO.

Contempt of Court—Interdict— Personal attachment.

This was an application upon notice calling upon the partners in McKay and Co., music dealers, Cape Town, to show cause why a writ of personal attachment should not issue against them by reason of their contempt of Court, in that, after being interdicted from removing any of their goods from certain premises, 6 and 8, Church-street, they persisted in so doing, and why the Sheriff should not be authorised to place a man in possession of their premises to prevent respondents from removing further goods while the interdict continues.

Mr. Close was for applicant; Dr. Greer was for respondents.

Mr. Close read an affidavit by the applicant, which set out that the interdict was granted on the failure of the respondents to pay arrears of rent amounting to £365. The Court had declined to entertain an application on behalf of the respondent to remove the interdict, and the respondents continued to occupy the premises and dispose of their goods, against which the interdict was granted. They were selling off their stock as if no interdict was in force, and in defiance of the order of the Court. To the original debt of £365 for rent there was a further £120 due for rent in November and December.

Dr. Greer put in a replying affidavit from John P. Bishop, partner in the firm, which set out that it was arranged the firm should pay the arrear rent at the rate of £10 per month, and the combined sums had been regularly paid. He denied that the Court declined to entertain an application to remove the attachment, as it was ordered that it should be set aside if £400 was paid into court, or security for that amount found. It was submitted that it was never the intention of the Court to close the business. The interdict was interpreted by both parties to mean that the respondent could not remove the goods in bulk.

Mr. Close put in a replying affidavit, in which the applicant denied the arrangement to pay off the arrears of rent at the rate of £10 per month.

Mr. Close made a proposal that the respondents should pay £120 within a few days and instalments of £60 per month afterwards, pending the action.

Hopley, J., said that on the application of the landlord the Court granted an order interdicting the removal of the goods from respondent's premises pending an action, which he then and there instituted, for the payment of arrear rent. That was an absolute order, and it was not left to the parties to construe it to mean anything else than that what the order said. The respondents did not approach the applicant, and they did not come to the Court for an explanation. They went on, in spite of the order of Court, selling as many goods as they could, and apparently doing as they chose with the funds which came into their hands from those sales. That was not a compliance with the order of Court. The only thing that could be said for the respondents was that they might have thought the Court did not mean to close up the business as a going concern. The respondents treated the applicant's remonstrances with contempt, and they simply went on selling. After that the respondents came to Court, and asked to be allowed to remove the goods on the ground, as they said, that they were being damaged by remaining in the shop. Another Judge of the Court then gave them leave to remove the goods if they paid £400 into court or furnished security for that amount. That they never did, and the result was that they were still in the same premises. Yet, in spite of these two orders of Court, they (respondents) went on selling the goods piecemeal, though they now said that they were replacing the goods. The only difficulty was the exact remedy to apply. Of course, the Court could at once order the attachment of the managing partner, the person who authorised these sales in spite of the order of Court, but the applicant did not pray for that, and there was perhaps a reason for not doing so, in that, as respondents said, they construed the Court's order to mean that they might continue the business as a going concern. He did not, under those circumstances, and without being pressed for it, wish to make an order of personal attachment, but he wished to call respondents' attention to the fact that there was a resort that the law had for those who treated the Court's orders with contempt. The order of the Court would be as follows: That the Sheriff do take charge of the said premises to prevent further removal of goods, this order to be suspended in any case until Monday, and, thereafter, if on Monday £120 be paid or deposited with the Registrar, or security for that amount be found, to be further suspended until the 31st of the month, on which date, if £60 be paid or deposited with the Registrar aforesaid, or security be found, the order to be suspended until the hearing of the action; during all times of the suspension of the order, the respondents to have leave to carry on the business as a going concern. Respondents to pay the costs of this application. His lordship added that he did not see why some sort of arrangement could not be come to between the parties.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

JOLLIFFE V. VAN ZYL. { 1906.
{ Jan. 19th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for judgment in terms of the referee's report and for costs. Mr. Upington was for respondent.

The case, it appeared, originally came before his lordship at the Colesberg Circuit Court, and was referred to Mr. Wilfred Murray, Government land surveyor, Colesberg, to take evidence and report his findings on certain points. The plaintiff's claim was composed of the following items:—(a) £540 for building a cottage; (b) £260 for building an additional wing to the cottage; (c) £395 for building shed and stables; (d) £85 19s. 6d. for extras; (e) £2 10s. for a stable door, making a total of £1,283 9s. 6d. By instalments the defendant had paid to plaintiff a sum of £975. The plaintiff had also agreed to reduce his claim by £37 5s., thus leaving a balance, according to plaintiff's claim, of £271 4s. 6d. The claim was entirely repudiated by defendant. He admitted having entered into the contracts, but said that the work was so badly executed by the plaintiff that no money was due to him. He claimed in re-convention a sum of £150 for damages, and also said that as to the sum of £975 it was not paid as part of the contract price but merely by way of loan to the plaintiff.

Hopley, J., said that when he directed the referee the sum of £975 was practically admitted by counsel to have been paid on account of the contract.

Mr. Van Zyl said that the referee had allowed £36 as damages for delay in the completion of the cottage, being six months' rent of the cottage at £6 per month.

[Hopley, J.: That is pretty much what I should have arrived at though in a different way by allowing say 8 per cent.]

Mr. Van Zyl read the report of the referee, who said that the plans and specifications were drawn in a very rough manner, though that seemed to be the practice in Colesberg. As to the cottage, the workmanship in some particulars was very bad, but at the same time the vagueness of the contract should not be lost sight of. As to the additional wing, he reduced the claim of the plaintiff to £230. In regard to the claim for extras, he reduced the amount to £52. He allowed the defendant a sum of £37 5s. agreed to by plaintiff, and further allowed him £50, the amount estimated to be required to put the cottage in a fair state of finish. In regard to the shed, he found that £15 would be required to put that part of the building in a fair state of finish. He found also that the time limit of nine months for the completion of the building was a reasonable one and allowed defendant £36, being rent of the cottage for six months during which he should have had possession. As to the shed, he did not find that defendant had suffered any damages by reason of delay on the contractor's part. Briefly summarised, the referee's findings were: For plaintiff £540 contract for erection of cottage, £230 for additional wing, £395 for shed, and £52 for extras, making a total of £1,217. For defendant: £975 cash paid, £37 5s. allowed under the claim "b," £50 allowed for completing cottage, £15 allowed for completing shed, and £36 damages for delay in completion of cottage, making a total of £1,113 5s. This showed a balance of £103 15s. in favour of the plaintiff, as compared with a claim of £271 1s.

Mr. Van Zyl submitted that, the plaintiff having substantially succeeded in his claim, judgment should be given for the balance in his favour as found by the referee with costs.

Mr. Upington was proceeding to argue, from the minutes of evidence sent up by the referee, that certain of his findings were not in accordance with the evidence, when Hopley, J., interposed, and remarked that in sending the matter to the referee it had not been his intention to be furnished with the record of evidence. The referee seemed to have sat an extraordinary number of days in order to hear the case, and in a communication that he had sent he pointed out that the parties would persist in leading additional evidence, and thus prolonging the hearing.

Mr. Upington said the plaintiff was really in default when he came into Court. He had not completed his contract, and he was not entitled to a penny until the contract was completed. The plaintiff in his summons based his claim on the completion of the contract, and one of the questions submitted to the referee was to find out whether the contract was completed, and he found that it was not, and that the work was far short of requirements.

Hopley, J., said it was necessary in this case to appoint a referee, and for the time he had been engaged in the proceedings the referee's fee would be fixed at sixty guineas, and that would form part of the costs. If the referee had found that the contract had been completed in a workmanlike manner, the applicant's case would have been exceedingly strong, but the referee found that the contract had not been completed, and certain repairs were necessary. However, he could not find, taking all the circumstances into consideration, that either party was devoid of blame in protracting the proceedings. There would be judgment for the applicant in the sum of £103 15s., each party to pay his own costs, the costs of the referee to be borne equally by each party, and the plaintiff's share to be paid out of the £103 15s.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

REX V. CORNELIUS. { 1906.
 { Jan. 22nd.

Master and Servants Act—Act 18 of 1873, Secs. 4 and 7—Child under 16.

Buchanan, J.: A case has come in review from the Special Justice of the Peace of Victoria West. A lad aged 13 years had been convicted of contravening section 4, sub-section 6, Act 18, 1873 (Master and Servants Act). The sentence was only half-a-crown or three days, and the imprisonment has, no doubt, been undergone, but for the guidance of the Special Justice of the Peace, I mention this case and quash the conviction, as, if the Justice had looked at section 7 of the Act he would see that it is expressly enacted that these sections are not to apply to servants under sixteen years of age.

HARRIS V. DOYLE.

Mr. Upington moved for leave to take the evidence of the defendant (Denis Doyle) on commission in Bloemfontein, O.R.C. The applicant said that, with a view of saving expense and avoiding loss of business which would result from his absence from Bloemfontein, it was of advantage that his evidence should be taken on commission.

Dr. Greer (for respondent and plaintiff in the suit) read an affidavit by Harris's attorney, who denied that there would be any loss or inconvenience if the defendant came to the Court to give his evidence. On the ground of saving expense, he opposed the application. It was important, deponent urged, in order to judge of the veracity of the parties, that they should appear before the Court.

Application granted, evidence to be taken before Mr. Advocate Hill, failing him the R.M. of Bloemfontein, costs to be costs in the cause.

Buchanan, J., observed that he did not think it would be to the disadvantage of plaintiff if defendant gave his evidence on commission.

HOLMES AND CO. V. FRYER.

This was an application for the removal of trial to the R.M.'s Court at Uppington. Dr. Greer was for applicant (Fryer); Mr. Benjamin was for respondents.

The matter arose out of a dispute as to certain promissory notes. Provisional sentence had been given. The judgment of the Court had not been satisfied. Applicant said that he was unfit to make the long journey to Cape Town.

Buchanan, J., pointed out that security had already been given by Fryer.

Mr. Benjamin said he was not aware of that.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, J.: The present applicant and defendant gave a promissory note to the respondents and plaintiffs on July 1, 1905. This note, on maturity, was not paid. The amount was £178 13s. The holder of the note sued the applicant in the Magistrate's Court of his district on this promissory note, whereupon the defendant took exception under the Act of 1876, and claimed the right to have the case removed to the Supreme Court. The case was removed to the Supreme Court, and provisional sentence was given in November last. The defendant has done nothing since then; he has not satisfied the judgment, he has not entered appearance, and he has done nothing at all. The plaintiffs, fortunately for defendant, have not taken out a writ of execution yet, or provisional sentence would have become final within a month of granting the order. The defendant is not entitled to play fast and loose with the jurisdiction of the different Courts in this way. He was sued in the Magistrate's Court at the beginning, he objected to that jurisdiction, and he forced the plaintiffs to come to this Court. Now he wants the case to be sent back to the Magistrate's Court. The case is not one in which the Court will make an order. Whether the Court can order a case which has been brought into the Supreme Court to be removed to a Magistrate's Court for trial is a question which I do not wish to settle at the present time. All I can say is that it is not one of those cases which are contemplated by the Charter of Justice. The application will be refused, with costs.

ROSENBERG V. FOURIE.

Motion—Judgment.

It is not the practice of the Court to grant judgment on motion in defended cases.

This was an application brought by Moritz Rosenberg, general dealer and farmer, of Oudtshoorn, upon notice of motion calling upon Jacobus Andries Fourie to show cause why he should not be ordered to restore to applicant, and put him in lawful possession of, certain nine mules, buck wagon, and gear, the property of the applicant.

Applicant's affidavit stated that the applicant let the property to the respondent on lease, which was renewed from time to time. Payments were made by respondent as they became due. The lease finally expired on the 10th April last, and the applicant said that after that date he allowed the respondent to continue in possession on the same terms as were embodied in the lease. The applicant said there were other transactions that he had with the respondent, in respect of which the latter gave him a promissory note for £250 2s. 2d. This note was paid by cheque drawn by the father of the respondent. The respondent said that the promissory note was given in respect of the purchase price of the property in dispute, and, although requested by the applicant to deliver up possession of the mules, etc., he declined to do so.

Mr. Bisset for applicant; respondent in default.

[Buchanan, J. (to counsel): Why did you not institute an action in this case? Why did you proceed by motion?]

Mr. Bisset: I suppose ultimately it would come to that. It would appear from the affidavits that the respondent is not in a substantial position. What one would suggest is that the respondent be ordered to deliver the mules to the applicant, with leave to the respondent to institute his action.

[Buchanan, J.: It would be introducing a new practice in the Court—obtaining judgment on motion. I will give you an interdict attaching this property pending an action to be brought in the Circuit Court. You need only then issue a summons.]

Mr. Bisset acquiesced in this proposal, and

An order was granted attaching the property, pending an action to be instituted in the Circuit Court by the applicant for recovery of the property, costs to be costs in the cause.

ALLEN V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the applicant, Joseph G. S. Allen, a hotel proprietor, of the Paarl, and Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Government. Mr. Jones, at the outset, said he might explain that the Government had not had time to file any replying affidavits, as the applicant's affidavits were only served that morning. He would ask the Court to postpone the hearing of the application.

Sir H. Juta said if the interdict was not granted, he would ask for access to and from the premises. His client had bought some erven close to the Railway Station, where the Government proposed to erect a fence along an old road, and so prevent the applicant having access to his premises. The Railway Department stated that the road was their land. Counsel thought the whole matter might stand over until the action was decided, but if they insisted on fencing he thought the Government should not fence in front of the two hotels.

Buchanan, J. (after hearing Mr. Jones on the facts) said he would take it as an ex-parte application, and he granted a rule nisi, returnable on February 1, to operate as an interim interdict, calling on the Government to show cause why an interdict should not be granted pending an action to be instituted by applicant forthwith, restraining the erection by the respondents of any fence between the points marked "e" and "f" on the plan attached to the application, costs to be costs in the cause. His Lordship suggested that there should be no delay in taking the action.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.O.M.G., LL.D.).]

ADMISSIONS { 1906.
Feb. 1st.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the admission of Robert Rhodes Reed Barrett Howes as an advocate.

Application granted and oath administered.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the admission of Thomas Norman Palk Palmer as an advocate.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for the admission of Charles William Henry Lansdown as an advocate.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of Josias Jacobus Malherbe as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Ex parte LOW.

Attorney—Admission.

The Court admitted an article clerk who, during the absence of his principal, had discharged purely nominal duties without salary, as acting secretary to a Divisional Council for a period of three months.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the admission of Stirling Graham Low as an attorney and notary.

Mr. Searle, K.C., opposed, on behalf of the Law Society. The opposition was based on the ground that the applicant for a period during the time he was article had acted as secretary to the Divisional Council. The affidavit of the applicant set out that the books of the Council were kept in the office of the attorney with whom he served. In the temporary absence of the secretary, Jacobus Viljoen, the applicant had acted as secretary for three months. He drew no salary for the work done.

De Villiers, C.J., said he quite agreed with the contention of Mr. Searle that the practice of taking additional duties was not to be commended, as it was a practice which was liable to abuse. In the present case, however, there was not such an abuse. The additional duties performed by the applicant were merely nominal, and they certainly did not interfere with the due performance by him of his duties as articled clerk. The application would be granted, but there would be no order as to costs, as the Law Society were quite justified in coming into court.

On the application of Mr. Buchanan, the oaths were ordered to be taken before the R.M. of Prince Albert.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MACCALLUM AND OTHERS { 1906.
v. STEVENS. } Feb. 1st.

Writ of arrest—Removal from the Colony.

Writ of arrest confirmed, although the defendant alleged that he did not intend to leave the Colony unless he could first settle with all his creditors: it being clear that he had made all the necessary preparations for removing from the Colony.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., appeared for the first plaintiff, Mr. P. S. T. Jones for the “Cape Times” and John Garlick, Mr. Lewis for F. B. Andrews, and Mr. W. P. Buchanan for the defendant. Mr. Schreiner moved to make absolute the final order of sequestration of the defendant's estate, and that the rule nisi to attach 55,000 shares in Sacco, Limited, and £150 in the hands of the Deputy Sheriff be made absolute.

Mr. Buchanan said that the defendant would not now raise any objection to the sequestration of his estate. It was admitted that certain money was owing by the defendant, but he denied that he owed the first plaintiff as much as was claimed.

Charles Henry Stevens, the defendant, went into the box, and denied that on the 17th January he attempted to leave the country. Witness never had a bill of costs from the first applicant.

By Mr. Schreiner: The costs were mainly in respect of his recent prosecution. Witness had asked Mr. MacCallum for a bill of costs. He was going away on the 17th January, provided he could fix up his affairs. On the previous Saturday he wrote to Mr. MacCallum stating that he intended to leave on the Wednesday, and asking for an account of his indebtedness. He denied that he had taken a ticket, or that he approached the shipping company. Other people were not making arrangements for his departure.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is Sacco, Limited?—It is a cure for consumption, my lord.]

Continuing, under cross-examination, the witness denied that he intended to leave without making provision for his debts. His lawful debts amounted to about £350. The defence in the criminal case amounted to £243 16s. 3d., according to the statement of the applicant. Witness thought he owed Mr. MacCallum about £60. His arrest prevented him from paying his creditors.

By De Villiers, C.J.: He had been in Cape Town about four years. Formerly he was a cycle agent.

Mr. Jones was about to cross-examine the witness, when De Villiers, C.J., intimated that there was no occasion for further cross-examination.

Mr. Buchanan was then heard in argument on the facts.

Without calling upon counsel for the plaintiffs.

De Villiers, C.J.: Whatever doubts may exist in this case, upon other points there seems to me to be no doubt whatever upon this point: that the defendant is insolvent, and that the sequestration must now be finally adjudged. A ground upon which the application for sequestration was applied for and granted was, inter alia, that the defendant was about to leave the Colony. The defendant now consents to the sequestration of his estate, and I take it that that consent involves that the ground upon which the application was made was a good one. But, even if it was not, I consider that there is sufficient evidence in this case to show that the defendant was making preparations to leave the Colony. It would be easy for a debtor under such circumstances to say that his intention was to leave, only providing he could satisfy his creditors, but all his preparations were made, and I think that was a sufficient ground for the application to the Court for the arrest of the defendant under the 8th Rule of Court. The Court will therefore confirm the arrest, with costs. Then, upon the application for sequestration of the estate, the Court will make an order that the sequestration be adjudged, and this order will also involve the release of the defendant. Then, in regard to the rule nisi, I consider that at this stage the Court should not decide the question, but should wait until trustees are appointed. I am not sure within what time trustees can be appointed; I suppose within a month. The Court will continue the rule, which is to be served on the trustee of Stevens's insolvent estate on his appointment, and which will be returnable on the last day of February.

O'REILLY V. WASSEBZUG.

Mr. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a taxed bill of costs for £31 10s. 9d.

Granted.

AFRICAN HOMES TRUST V. SCHROEDER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence for £50 on a certain guarantee of fidelity.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones appeared for the defendant.

The guarantee was given in writing, by which the defendant undertook conditionally upon the plaintiffs appointing a certain individual as their agent, to be responsible for payment, in certain circumstances, of a sum not exceeding £50.

Mr. Benjamin said he could not maintain that this was a liquid claim.

De Villiers, C.J., said the principal case would have to be gone into.

Mr. Benjamin said that he would ask that the summons in the present case should be allowed to stand as summons in the principal case.

Mr. Jones said his client had been brought into court on a wrong procedure, and he submitted he should have his costs.

De Villiers, C.J., said it appeared to him that this was a matter in which the plaintiff should go into the principal case to prove the loss for which he sued the surety. An order would be made accordingly, costs to be costs in the cause.

KOCH V. CRAIG.

Mr. Bisset moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

Granted.

VAN DER SPUY V. GRAY AND ANOTHER (TRADING AS GRAY AND SON).

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the discharge of a provisional order of sequestration.

Granted.

DU TOIT V. AJAM.

Insolvency—Act 38 of 1884—
Interests of creditors.

A provisional order of sequestration having been made upon a petition, stating that the defendant was insolvent and that it would "be in the interest of" the creditors that the estate should be sequestrated.

Held, that the use in the petition of the words: "in the interest," instead of "for the benefit" of the creditors, was not fatal to the order.

Mr. Russell moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

Mr. D. Buchanan appeared to oppose on behalf of one Omar Crabier, a creditor.

The petition set forth that the petitioners, Jacobus du Toit and Fatima du Toit, were creditors of the respondent to the amount of £265. It was to the advantage of the creditors to have the estate sequestrated.

In the replying affidavit Crabier said that the petitioners were Ajam's brother-in-law and sister. Ajam had previously applied to surrender the estate voluntarily, and the Court had refused to accept the surrender. He believed that there was a collusive arrangement between Ajam and the petitioners, and that there was no real debt owing by Ajam to petitioner. If the application were granted there would be much additional expense, and assets wherewith to satisfy deponent's claim would be considerably lessened. The object of the other parties was to cause him as much loss and inconvenience as possible. Crabier, on a judgment, attached sufficient property to satisfy his claim six months ago.

It appeared from further affidavits that Crabier's claim was in respect of the purchase price of property bought by Ajam from him. Ajam stated, in an affidavit, that Mrs. Du Toit had lent money to Ajam and it was in respect of this that Du Toit and his wife claimed. Petitioners stated it would be to the interest of the creditors that the estate should be finally sequestrated.

Mr. Buchanan having been heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J.: On the whole, I am of opinion that this is a case in which sequestration should be adjudged, because that course would do least injustice to all concerned. It is quite possible that the plaintiffs may be able to prove, in case of sequestration, that they are bona fide creditors, and in that case it would be very hard upon them that their rights should be swamped entirely by a creditor who has taken out execution. It is true, as counsel has stated, that the Court favours a vigilant creditor, but it does not do so at the expense of other creditors, who have equally good claims, but who have not put forward their claims because, as in the present case, they believed that the debtor would obtain sequestration voluntarily. It is only after the debtor failed herself to obtain sequestration that the petitioners came forward and took action. If it should turn out that the plaintiffs are not bona fide creditors the trustee will protect the estate, and at all events there will, as I judge from the evidence, be sufficient to pay the amount claimed by Crabier. But then it is said that the words used in the petition are "in the interests" instead of "for the benefit" of creditors. Well, it seems to me that there is very little difference between the two; if it is for the benefit of creditors that the estate should be sequestrated it is in their interest and vice versa. It is also said that there are only two creditors, but at all events the plaintiffs are in a majority, and therefore it is to the benefit of the creditors, that is, the majority of the creditors, that sequestration should be adjudged. As to the costs, I consider it would be well to let the costs be costs of sequestration, more especially by reason of the fact that, when voluntary sequestration was applied for, the Court refused to grant it. It is quite possible the plaintiffs may not be able to establish their claim as creditors, when the trustee goes into the whole matter, and therefore the matter ought to be left over for further consideration by the trustee, and as to the costs of both sides, I consider they should form part of the costs of sequestration. The Court will, therefore, make an order that sequestration be adjudged, and that the costs of both parties form part of the costs of sequestration.

NATIONAL BANK V. HARRIS.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment of the Supreme Court. Judgment was given on August 1 for £600 on a promissory note. The defendant appeared in Court and said he had no money. Formerly he was a bookmaker, but since bookmakers were abolished he had no employment.

Cross-examined by Mr. Watermeyer: He was a foundation member of Tattersall's Club, and paid £23, which had not yet been returned to him. He was suffering from rheumatic gout and could not do any work. Tattersall's Club was closed down pending an application to Parliament to alter the law.

De Villiers, C.J., said if the £23 deposited was available an application might be made to attach it, but there would be no order at present, as there was nothing to show that the defendant had any means.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

SANDERS V. CAPE TOWN { 1906.
TRAMWAY CO. { Feb. 2nd.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, on behalf of William King Sanders, for a rule nisi calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be allowed to sue the defendants in forma pauperis.

The affidavit of the applicant was to the effect that he was a coachbuilder by trade, and that whilst driving along the Sir Lowry-road, owing to the condition of the road, caused by the Tramway Company in relaying the tram-line, the horse bolted, and threw the occupants of the cart out. Sanders received such injuries that he was confined in hospital for seven weeks. He considered he had sustained damages to the extent of £400, and as he was not possessed of property to the value of £10, he moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis.

Sir H. Juta said that this case had been before Mr. Justice Measdonp when certain affidavits were filed for the respondent, but the matter was postponed to enable the applicant to amend his petition on the grounds that the petition disclosed no grounds for the action. Sir H. Juta read replying affidavits, which set out that every care was taken in relaying the blocks.

The applicant did not even suggest in what respect the company was acting unlawfully, nor did he give any details of the accident, or as to how or where it occurred. The applicant should reasonably give some details of the accident. The superintendent of the Tramway Company saw the cart after the accident, and he stated that the shaft was in a rotten state, and might have broken at any time. In submitting a claim, one of the applicant's attorneys stated there was a collection of rails on the road, but the superintendent was in a position to state that there was no such heap of rails. A witness of the action, in an affidavit, said the driver had a large picture in front, which seemed to hamper him in the control of the horse.

De Villiers, C. J., said he thought it was rather unusual to go into the merits of the case at that stage.

Sir H. Juta said the applicant should show a prima facie case. There was absolutely nothing in the petition to show that the defendants were responsible.

De Villiers, C.J., said he thought it would be advisable to have the additional affidavits read.

Mr. Watermeyer read the affidavit of the applicant, in which he stated that he had read the affidavit of Donald McDonald. As alleged in the petition on the 1st August he was proceeding along Sir Lowry-road in a cart, which was in perfectly sound condition. The respondent company were relaying the tram-line, and, owing to carelessness, the relayed rails were from nine to twelve inches above the level of the road. At the spot where the accident occurred the rails were taken up. So as to avoid a collision with an approaching tram, the applicant had to drive on to the portion of the road ripped up, with the result that the shaft of the cart was broken, and the horse bolted, throwing the occupants out.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not think the Court can go into the merits of the case. Doesn't the petition show a prima facie case?]

Sir H. Juta: I do not think so my lord.

Sir H. Juta contended that there was a broad road over which the applicant could have driven without turning into the right side.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But isn't there a board put up?]

No, as it prevented the public getting on the trams.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That may be very good evidence, but it cannot be gone into now. If a person travelling on the road meets with an accident through the carelessness of the Tramway Company, he is entitled to take proceedings to recover damages.]

He must travel on the road, and not on the tram-line.

De Villiers, C.J., it was not denied by the defendants that the plaintiff was entitled to sue in forma pauperis. But certain requirements were necessary before the Court could grant applications. The main requirement was that there should be a certificate of counsel appointed by the Court for the purpose of ascertaining the question as to whether plaintiff had a probable cause of action. Such a certificate was forthcoming in the present case. The defendants contended that the petition did not disclose any cause for action. It was quite true that it was somewhat vague in its wording, but when the matter first came before the Court, the Court authorised the petition to be supplemented by further affidavits to state what the real cause of action was. Such affidavits were now forthcoming, and he thought that if the petition was read by the light of the affidavit now forthcoming, there certainly appeared to be a prima facie case. It was quite true that the defendants might be able to prove everything stated in the counter affidavits, but it was not at that stage that the merits of a case were to be tried. The only question was, was there a probable cause of action? He (his lordship) thought there was a prima facie cause of action. The travelling public had a right to the use of the roadway which had to some extent been appropriated by the Tramway Company. If the Tramway Company, during their work, temporarily endangered the public, they should take steps to minimise the danger. In his opinion, there was sufficient cause shown to make the rule absolute. There would be no order as to the costs of the application at that stage, but the plaintiff would be at liberty to move when the final judgment was given, for the costs to be costs of cause.

Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton were appointed attorneys, and Mr. Watermeyer counsel in the case.

COATES AND COTTRELL v. { 1906.
S. JOHN'S BENEFIT SOCIETY. { Feb. 2nd.

Benefit Society—Constitution—Ultra Vires.

A majority of members of a benefit society which had received its charter from the Grand Lodge of Free Gardeners in Scotland resolved to return the charter and apply for a fresh charter from the Grand Lodge in England.

Held, that the applicants, who had received a certificate of membership in connection with the Grand Lodge of Scotland and who had voted in the minority, were entitled to an order declaring the resolution to be null and void, and interdicting the payment of any of the funds of the society for the purpose of obtaining the charter from the English lodge, in the absence of any rules authorizing such a fundamental alteration of the constitution.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved on behalf of the applicants, Joseph John Coates and Lewis Cottrell, for an order restricting the defendants, the secretary of the St. John's Benefit Society, in connection with the Grand Lodge of Scotland of the Ancient Order of Free Gardeners from paying out of the funds of the society any money for purposes contemplated by a certain resolution passed at a meeting of the society on the 26th September last, pending an action to be instituted, and also to declare null and void a resolution to the effect that the St. John's Society in future work under the charter of England.

When the case was before the Court in December last, after the different affidavits had been read, the case was adjourned to see if it was not possible for the parties concerned to settle their differences, and if possible thus save an action.

The application was opposed by Mr. De Villiers.

The applicant's petition stated that they were members of the society, which had for its object the raising of funds by entrance fees, subscriptions, fees, fines, etc., for various benefit purposes. At a meeting of the members of the society in December last, it was resolved by the majority of members (several remaining neutral), that the charter of the Lodge of Scotland should be returned to Scotland, and that the society in the meantime work under the Free Gardeners' Rules locally as the St. John's Benefit Society, pending a final decision, a minority of eight voted against it, amongst whom were the petitioners. At a subsequent meeting held in September last, it was agreed by a majority of members that the society in future work under the charter of England, and that the sum of £10 be paid out of the funds of the society for the purpose of paying the expenses of initiating 12 of the members into the British Order of Free Gardeners. Petitioners lodged an objection to the diversion and misappropriation of the sum from the funds of the society for an object not contemplated by the rules or by members who had originally contributed to the society; wherefore petitioners prayed that the Court would grant an order declaring the resolution void, and grant an interdict as prayed.

Mr. De Villiers said that this was the second time the application came before the Court. On the previous occasion it was adjourned to enable the applicants to show the difference between the British order and the Scottish one.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If I had known that at first I would have ordered the case to stand over for Mr. Justice Maasdorp.]

Mr. De Villiers said the applicants had had ample opportunity of proving the difference between the two societies, but had not yet done so. Unless the applicants could show that working under a new charter changed the character of the society, they should fail in their application.

De Villiers, C.J., said that as far as he could gather the society was formed on a charter from the Scottish Lodge.

They have acted without a charter for the past twelve months.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But hasn't the Grand Lodge of Scotland some authority over them?]

We would like to know that.

Mr. Buchanan said he presumed the parent institution would have some control over its children. That there was some supervision was apparent.

De Villiers, C.J., said it seemed clear from the affidavits that for the purpose of establishing the society in connection with the Grand Lodge of Scotland, it was necessary for the local society to obtain a charter from the Grand Lodge of Scotland for the establishment of the local society. The rules of the local society were headed: "Rules of the St. John's Benefit Society in connection with the Grand Lodge of Scotland," and the certificates given to the members were given from the St. John's Benefit Society in connection with the Grand Lodge of Scotland. A meeting was called by the ruling authorities of the local society for the purpose of considering whether there should not be a change of charter and whether the society should not be in connection with the British Lodge, instead of the Scottish. Now, if this had been a voluntary act on the part of all the members, the Court would not have intervened, but eight of the members voted against the change, and notwithstanding their objection, a fresh charter was obtained from the British Lodge. That seemed to him such a fundamental alteration in the constitution of the society as altogether to exceed the power of a majority of the members. The rules of the society confer no such power on them, and on principle no such authority can be held to vest in them. The contract with the members was that they were to be members of a society in connection with the Grand Lodge of Scotland, and the local society had no right to alter the contract of any members of the society if any of the members objected. That seemed perfectly clear, and even if the rules of the Grand Lodge of Scotland did not differ from the rules of the British Lodge, his ruling would be the same, because if a person wished to remain affiliated on sentimental or national grounds, the other members of the society had no authority to substitute any other Grand Lodge for the parent lodge. For those reasons the Court was of opinion that the applicants were entitled to have it declared that the resolution was void, and that there would be an interdict to restrain the secretary from using the funds of the society for the purpose of obtaining a fresh charter. The application had been made against the trustees of the society, and he thought that the costs of the application should come out of the funds of the society.

Mr. De Villiers: What is the ruling with regard to the five guineas already paid for the charter?

KALK BAY MUNICIPAL COUNCIL V. COLLIE.

Contract—Removal of materials—Interdict.

One of the conditions of a contract entered into by the respondent with the applicant Council, was that all the materials brought by the contractor on the works should be deemed to be the property of the Council and should not be removed during the progress of the works without the written order of the Municipal engineer. Before the completion of the work, the respondent, without the consent of the engineer, removed a pulsometer from waste land of the Council to a shed some distance off, and kept the key of the shed in his own possession.

Held, that there had been a breach of the condition.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi restraining the respondent or his agents from removing any further materials or implements from the drainage works in connection with the Kalk Bay Municipality.

The affidavit of W. T. Olive (Acting Engineer of the drainage works), stated that the respondent was the contractor for the drainage works, and that he entered into the contract on September 15, 1904. In terms of the contract all materials, timber, tools, etc., brought by the contractor on to the works were deemed the property of the Council for the time being, and were not to be removed during the progress of the works without the written orders of the Engineer, and in case of the suspension of the work by the Engineer for any act or default of the contractor, or of the work being taken out of the hands of the contractor, the materials should be subject to be used in the completion of the work. About December 23 last the respondent caused to be removed from the works a pulsometer, against the protest of the Engineer, and although requested to return it had failed to do so. Since that date he had removed certain timber and other articles from the works, in contravention of the section, and against the Engineer's express instructions.

The replying affidavit of the respondent stated that since the granting of the rule nisi the applicants had taken the work out of his hands, and had taken possession of all his plant, machinery, etc., used in connection with the work. He submitted that there never was the slightest necessity for the application, inasmuch as he never intended removing any portion of the plant from the works during the progress of same. With regard to the allegation that he removed the pulsometer, he admitted having hired a store in which to keep it when it required shelter. Before ceasing work for the Christmas holidays he gave his staff orders to remove all plant and tools not actually required, so as not to impede the traffic on the road, and they, as far as possible, placed under shelter such plant as was too bulky to be removed into the store. In doing so he was actuated solely by the desire to leave the road as free as possible during the holidays, and also to preserve the plant, etc., from injury. With regard to the other allegations with reference to the timber, the affidavit stated that Olive complained to respondent that there was an unnecessary amount of timber projecting out of certain excavations at St. James. This quantity of timber had been used when it was impossible to say how deep the timber would have to be sunk, and at the time the complaint was made it was evident that owing to the rock having been found comparatively near the surface, and that so great a quantity was not required, respondent therefore ordered its removal. It was this timber, and certain other timber used in shoring excavations which had been completed and were being filled, that was removed from the public road, and stacked on some waste ground adjoining which had been utilised for the work ever since the drainage had been started, and the timber remained there ready for use in connection with future excavations. Respondent was always ready to continue his contract.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan for applicants; Sir H. Juta, K.C., for respondents.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J., said that the respondent entered into this contract with his eyes open, and he must be presumed to have known the terms of the contract, and he was bound by those terms and conditions, however stringent they might be. The 18th section of those conditions was certainly as stringent as any employer could, under any circumstances, insist on. Under the heading, "Materials brought on the ground," it was stipulated that all materials, implements, engines, tackle, timber for shoring, tools, etc., brought by the contractor on the works should be deemed the property of the Council for the time being, and should not be removed during the progress without the written order of the Engineer, etc. It was stated that in the present case the pulsometer was taken down from certain waste land and placed in a shed belonging to the respondent, and by him placed under lock and key. Not only was there no written consent, but there was an actual protest against the removal, and notwithstanding this the pulsometer was placed in the shed, and there was no tender by the respondent to the Council, or the Engineer, of the key to allow the Council to retain control over them. Under those circumstances the Court cannot hold that there was not a removal, and that thus there was a breach of the 18th section of the conditions, and that the rule granted was a proper one. It might be that since the rule was granted the necessity for an interdict had fallen to the ground, but on the question of costs he did not see why the respondent should not pay the costs, as he did what he was not justified in doing. As to the timber the case was not so strong against the respondent. The terms of the contract were very wide, and the respondent should not have entered into it if he intended to repudiate it in the way he had.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

THE CAPE TIMES, LTD. V. THE (1906, SOUTH AFRICAN NEWS, LTD.) Feb. 2nd.

Libel — Newspaper — Trading Company — Damages — Practice.

The S.A.N. (a newspaper published in Cape Town) accused the C.T. (another Cape Town paper) of suppressing a report of a certain informal meeting of a quasi private character, in the course of which meeting certain strictures were made by one of the directors of the C.T.; and the S.A.N., in a published article, suggested that the said report was suppressed from interested motives. The C.T. now sued the S.A.N. for damages for libel, but special damage was not pleaded. The defendants applied for absolution from the instance.

Held, that as the C.T. had not claimed to have been injured in its business, absolution from the instance must be granted.

Semble: If a defendant intends to apply for absolution from the instance on the ground that the declaration discloses no cause of action; exception should be taken to the declaration.

This was an action in which the Cape Times Limited sued the South African Newspaper Co., Ltd., for £5,000 as damages for alleged libel.

It appeared that the action arose out of circumstances connected with the interim election for the Cape Town Council, which took place last September. The plaintiffs' declaration was in the following terms:

1. The plaintiff is the Cape Times Ltd., a company duly registered in Cape Town, owning, printing, and publishing a newspaper circulating in Cape Town, and elsewhere in South Africa, styled the "Cape Times."

2. The defendant is the South African Newspaper Co., Ltd., a company duly registered, and having its head office in Cape Town, being the proprietor and publisher of the "South African News," a newspaper published and circulating in Cape Town, and elsewhere in South Africa.

3. On or about the 11th September, 1905, an election took place to fill certain vacancies in the Town Council of Cape Town. After the declaration of the poll, the candidates and certain other persons were invited to meet the Mayor in the official parlour of the Mayor at the Town Hall, and on the said occasion one Richard Stuttford, one of the successful candidates, and also a director of the plaintiff company, made a speech relative to municipal affairs and the recent election.

4. Thereafter, in the issue of the "South African News," of date September 12, 1905, the defendant company published what purported to be a report of the said speech, and thereafter the said Richard Stuttford wrote to the plaintiff company for publication a letter, which appeared in the "Cape Times," of date September 13, 1905; the plaintiff company craves leave to refer to the said letter when produced at the trial, and to the editorial comments published at the foot thereof.

5. Thereafter, in commenting upon the above, the defendant company printed, published, and circulated in the issue of the "South African News," of date September 15, 1905, in a leading article styled "Disgraceful Allegations," the following false, malicious, and defamatory words of and concerning the plaintiff company, and the management and conduct of its newspaper, to wit:

"Apparently what happened was that the 'Cape Times' thought it well to suppress this interesting expression of opinion by one of its directors, and accordingly decided to suppress the whole report of the proceedings in the Mayor's parlour, which its representative had industriously compiled. After this it invented and communicated to Mr. Stuttford, the ingenious theory that the proceedings were private, a theory which is not supported by men who have a longer acquaintance with municipal affairs than Mr. Stuttaford. We can only add an expression of our regret that Mr. Stuttaford should have disclaimed his speech, as in our opinion what he said about Mr. Liberman especially did him credit as a young Councillor. However, these events not unnaturally distressed the rebuked 'Cape Times,' and that journal decided to execute vengeance, of all people in the world, on us, and vented its rage in an article which will do much to deepen in the minds of many honest and gentlemanly Progressives the sentiments so frankly expressed by Mr. Stuttaford on Monday night."

6. The said words were intended to mean, and did mean, that the plaintiff company had acted in a dishonest and dishonourable manner in the conduct of its business as proprietor of the "Cape Times" newspaper, and in its dealings with the said Richard Stuttaford; that it had wilfully and deliberately suppressed its own shorthand writer's report of the proceedings aforesaid in the Mayor's parlour, because the said Richard Stuttaford had during the course of the said proceedings commented adversely on the attitude taken up by the "Cape Times" newspaper with regard to the said election; and that subsequently, in order to deceive the said Richard Stuttaford, and to prevent publication of his speech aforesaid, had falsely pretended to the said Richard Stuttaford that the said proceedings were private, well knowing that they were not.

7. By the aforesaid false, malicious, and defamatory statements, the plaintiff company has been greatly injured in its fair name, fame, and reputation, and has sustained damages amounting to the sum of £5,000.

Wherefore the plaintiff company claims: (a) The sum of £5,000 as damages; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant company admits paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of the plaintiff's declaration.

2. It also admits paragraph 4 thereof, and says that the report therein referred to was a substantially correct report of the said speech.

3. The defendant admits the publication complained of in paragraph 5, and that it referred to the plaintiff, but denies the rest of the said paragraph.

4. As to paragraph 6, it admits that the words complained of meant that the plaintiff company had wilfully suppressed the report of the speech made by the said Stuttaford for the reason specified in the said paragraph, and the defendant company says that the said statement is true, and that it was in the public interest that it was published. Otherwise it denies the innuendoes set forth in the said paragraph.

5. It says further that the words complained of were published bona fide, without malice, and that they constituted a fair criticism or comment upon the conduct of the "Cape Times" with respect to a matter of public interest and importance.

6. The defendant denies paragraph 7 of the declaration.

The replication was general.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Bisset), for plaintiffs; Mr. Molteno (with him Mr. Burton) for defendants.

Buchanan, J., observed that these newspaper amenities were very common, and were regarded by the public in a Pickwickian sense. He thought it a pity that it should come into court.

Mr. Searle said he would submit that it was a very serious imputation to make. The seriousness of it lay in the fact that Mr. Stuttaford was a director of the "Cape Times," and it was suggested in this article that a certain report of proceedings was wilfully suppressed because Mr. Stuttaford, one of the directors, had spoken against the "Cape Times," that there was an invention of the theory that these proceedings were private, and that that was why the report was not published. He (counsel) submitted that these were allegations which, if true, showed a very wrong, dishonourable, and dishonest method of carrying on a newspaper if a newspaper suppressed proceedings of that kind, and then endeavoured to cover it up by saying the proceedings, after all, were private, and that for that reason they were not reported. When he came to argue the case he could quote authorities to show the libellous character of the statement. The matter was one of importance to the "Cape Times," and it was likely to injure the company in its business.

[Buchanan, J.: What one newspaper says of another is likely to advertise it, and to do it good, but as to injuring it that is quite another question. I can only judge it for myself. I can only say that if I considered it, I would not think it harmful.]

Maitland Hall Park said he was the editor of the "Cape Times," and had occupied the position since September, 1902. He remembered the occurrence in connection with the election last November. He saw the article in the "South African News," headed "Disgraceful Allegations."

Counsel proceeded to read the article.

Buchanan, J., said it appeared that after the election certain people were invited to the Mayor's parlour.

Mr. Searle: Yes, and certain speeches were made there which I shall try to show were not intended to be reported.

[Buchanan, J.: One should hope so, or it would be introducing a new horror into life.]

I shall endeavour to show they were so regarded.

[Hopley, J.: What were the reporters doing there?]

It will be explained, my lord, how the reporters got there.

[Buchanan, J.: I suppose they, too, were invited to share the hospitality of the Mayor.]

Probably; sometimes they do that. The reporter went there apparently to seek the Town Clerk to get information about the polling.

Buchanan, J., said he believed that in the case of the King against Palmer he gave a direction to the jury as to the law on the point of libelling a Corporation.

Mr. Searle said it had been settled in England that a corporation had a reputation to be protected. Of course, there were cases where it had been held that, where matter is published concerning a non-trading corporation it must be matter affecting certain individual members. A distinction was drawn, at all events, in the English law, between a trading company and a non-trading company. In a case where the Mayor and Corporation sued a paper for libel, it was held that it was an individual matter for them.

[Buchanan, J.: Do you allege that this corporation has been injured in its business?]

I do not think it is necessary to say that. I say candidly I do not think the business has fallen off, but I say that it is sufficient that the words published are likely to injure the business, and I have authority—plenty of authority—on that point.

Mr. Park, continuing, said there was no truth in the allegations that he suppressed the report.

Mr. Searle: Is there any truth in the allegation that, as far as you are concerned, as the editor, you willfully suppressed the report of these speeches at the Town House?

Witness: No.

[Buchanan, J.: Did you consider the meeting private?]

Witness: I was not even aware of the existence of a report.

Mr. Searle: When did you first hear there had been any report?

It was not until I saw the "South African News" the next day that I was aware that anything had been reported.

Is it matter which in the ordinary course would come before you?—No; news matter in the ordinary course does not come before me.

Just explain what comes before you, and what control you have?—The news reporter goes first of all to the reporters' room, where he transcribes the report from the shorthand note. He then takes it to the sub-editor's (Mr. Dumbleby's) room. In the ordinary case, that is to say, in 99 cases out of 100, I would not see these news reports at all until they appear in the paper, and would know nothing about them, but if any case arises where the sub-editor has any difficulty, he would always naturally come to me.

That is, if he is in difficulty as to whether anything should appear?—Yes; he would then appeal to me. That is to say, he regulates matter in regard to space by his own discretion, but if matter which appears to him to be defamatory or libellous comes to him, he would refer it to me.

As a fact, then, you did not know anything about these proceedings? Were you in the office that evening?—I was in the office that night. The only thing I knew about the Mayor's parlour meeting was when Mr. Dumbleby, who comes in about the last thing in the evening to me to hand over the summaries, came in, and made a remark the exact terms of which I cannot recollect. But the gist of it was that he had heard, or that a reporter had said—I cannot swear whether he mentioned a reporter—that Mr. Stuttaford had made some uncomplimentary remarks. I made no observation at all, I think. I simply said "Oh!" and smiled.

Yes, I am quite used to it, my lord.

In further examination, Mr. Park said there was absolutely no truth in the suggestion that someone invented the theory that the proceedings were private. Mr. Stuttaford came in to see him the following forenoon.

Mr. Searle: Just tell me, shortly, without going into detail, what took place when Mr. Stuttaford came in to see you the next day.

Witness: When Mr. Stuttaford came into the room, I was naturally somewhat annoyed about this, and the first remark he made was that he was very sorry at what had appeared in the "News" that morning. I think the answer I made was: "So well you might." Mr. Stuttaford then said: "If you wait a minute, I will explain, and I think you won't take the same view of it." He then said he had not the remotest idea that any of the remarks he made would ever have appeared, but that he regarded the meeting as entirely private.

Mr. Molteno said he would point out that there was no reference to Mr. Maitland Park by the defendants.

[Buchanan, J.: You plead it is the truth?]

Mr. Molteno: We plead, in regard to the first matter, that it was suppressed, and that there was a reporter there, but we do not bring Mr. Park in, and we make no reference to an interview between Mr. Park and Mr. Stuttaford.

[Buchanan, J. (to Mr. Searle): Isn't it sufficient for Mr. Park to say it is absolutely untrue that there was any suggestion made?]

Mr. Searle: I am leading up to the letter written by Mr. Stuttaford, my lord. (To the witness) This was the only meeting you had with Mr. Stuttaford before he wrote this letter to the paper: "Sir,—I was much surprised to find in your morning contemporary a report of some remarks made by me in the privacy of the Mayoral Parlour last night, and I feel sure that His Worship the Mayor would be the last to allow his hospitality to be taken advantage of for the purpose of making 'newspaper copy.' The only thing I would suggest to the reporter in question is that in any future occasion on which he is invited to the privacy of the Mayor's apartment, if it is too much to ask him to drop his business for the time being, at any rate he should be more thorough, and report the whole proceedings which lead up to any remarks made, and correctly report those remarks.—I am, etc., R. Stuttaford"?

Witness: Yes.

Mr. Searle: You made this comment on the letter: "If His Worship the Mayor gives the entree to persons who abuse the privileges of his hospitable parlour by publishing, and publishing inaccurately, as Mr. Stuttaford asserts, what was never intended for publication, this is the Mayor's own concern. If we took the report as it stands, the proceedings, if they were not to be accepted in a purely Pickwickian and postprandial sense, would certainly be more remarkable for sound than for sense, not to speak of good taste. If Mr. Matthews, or Mr. Stuttaford, or anybody else, thought the views expressed by the "Cape Times" in regard to the issues or the candidates were erroneous, the columns of the paper were open to them to say so before the election took place, and to give their reasons. The public could then form their own conclusions, and some good might result from the discussion. But no possible good can come of bottling up wrath until the elections are over, and then talking about "foul blows," as Mr. Matthews is reported to have done. Here we may say that the "Cape Times" never stated that Mr. Matthews 'knew nothing about municipal work'; what we did say was, he and Mr. Bartlett had, in our opinion, 'shown no grasp of the larger issues of municipal life,' that 'they had shown no desire to obtain such a grasp,' and that they had 'often put themselves in merely factious opposition.' Naturally Mr. Matthews does not share this opinion, and Mr. Stuttaford and others may think with him rather than with us; but we write what we write according to our judgment, on the available evidence, of what is best for the public interest, and this we shall, of course, continue to do.—Editor, "Cape Times"?

Witness: Yes, I wrote that. The letter was sent in afterwards, and I added the footnote.

Did you suggest to him that he should write the letter?—No.

[Hopley, J.: Did he suggest to you that he would write the letter?]

He told me he would write a letter.

I suppose you told him that would be the best course to pursue?—Quite the contrary. All I said to him was that I would have to say something about the matter, now it had been published, and that it would be for him to consider what course he should pursue.

Cross-examined by Mr. Molteno: Mr. Park, you say the editor of a paper doesn't necessarily know what is going to appear in the news portion next day; he doesn't see it?—No; he doesn't see all the news.

Do you know your own reporter was present, and took notes at this very meeting?—Yes; I know now.

That he was present with the "News" reporter taking notes of this meeting?—I know he was present now, but I did not know at the time.

But you knew one of your reporters was present, because you had information from Mr. Dimpleby that Mr. Stuttaford had made this speech?—I have already said I cannot positively state whether Mr. Dimpleby said a reporter had told him, but naturally I would conclude it was one of our reporters; but I did not understand from him that these remarks were reported by the reporter.

Did Mr. Stuttaford tell you that he knew his speech would be reported?—He said, on the contrary, that he was absolutely astonished to see a report in the paper.

A number of people will come here to say that both reporters were seen taking notes, and that it was generally regarded that it would appear in the paper next day?—I cannot say what other people say.

You regarded it as private?—As absolutely private.

Mr. Molteno proceeded to cross-examine the witness in regard to an article written by him, in which the words "disgraceful allegations" appeared and asked him whether the words with which the article complained of was headed were not borrowed from this article written by the witness.

[Buchanan, J.: What has that to do with this case?]

Mr. Molteno: I want to show that the words "disgraceful allegations" are borrowed from that article.

Mr. Molteno (to witness): Were you going to take editorial action on this report?

Witness: I was going to comment upon it.

And do you still contend that the meeting in the Mayor's parlour was a private one?—I think so.

And you, on the following day, had an editorial note, which your counsel has read, charging a certain writer with publishing private, confidential reports?—I did not use the word "confidential." I said this was a private meeting, as I understood it.

And you blamed the "News"?—Certainly.

And you also inferred that the "News" had falsely reported Mr. Stuttaford?—I made no such statement.

Mr. Molteno read the foot-note to Mr. Stuttaford's letter, and asked: "You were a little severe, weren't you?"

Witness: I don't think so.

But you are a little severe sometimes?—Well, I do my best.

And some of us suffer sometimes under the sting of your severity?—I am sorry.

And don't you think, Mr. Park, that editors are sometimes a bit too sensitive, a little tender?—I assure you I do not think, personally, I am at all tender. I have had 20 years of it now.

But this awful libel was too much for you?—I consider it one of the worst libels I have ever seen.

You were so angry at this awful libel that you also summoned this unfortunate newspaper for £5,000 damages?—I did.

Questioned as to why the action was not brought with the present one, the witness said he understood from his counsel that it had been proposed to the other side that the actions should be heard together, and that they declined to agree to the consolidation.

Mr. Molteno: How did you know this meeting was private?

Witness: I say I should regard it as private.

But you weren't there. I will tell you what occurred: that the meeting was not private, that after the declaration of the poll the Mayor turned to those standing around him, and asked them to come up. And do you know that the reporters were invited to be present?—Quite probably.

The reporters are not personal friends of the Councillors?—As a matter of fact anyone who knows anything about functions of that kind knows that reporters are frequently asked into purely private functions after public proceedings.

But you know your reporter was present and took notes?—I know now.

Have you got the reporter's note-book?—No.

Have you asked for it?—No.

Do you know that an order of discovery was served on Mr. St. Leger, and that this reporter's note-book was not put in?—The notes are not kept; we don't put them in a safe.

Did you never ask to see Mr. Short's report?—I do not think I saw Mr. Short, our reporter, for ten days afterwards.

Do you think it any harm to suppress a report in a paper?—Most distinctly, if I did it because it reflected on me in my editorial capacity. It would be most detrimental and damaging to a newspaper if its editor suppressed anything because of his own personal repute.

You know the value of a report is destroyed by something being left out?—That is a matter of judgment. You may leave out part of a public speech, because you do not think it is an important part of the speech. A paper cannot report everybody verbatim. But the editor does not do that because he is afraid for himself it should appear. But in this case there is a distinct allegation that I suppressed it because a director of the "Cape Times" had made a statement, and it reflected on me personally.

Have you dropped this personal action against the "News"?—No, I have not.

In re-examination, Mr. Park said that there were occasions when it was possible for a paper to cut down reports creditably, and times when it was not possible. A paper could not report everything fully. Matter had to be cut down, and instructions were given to the reporters to cut down unimportant parts, but it would be most discreditable for an editor to instruct a reporter to cut out anything because it reflected on him in his editorial capacity. He considered that an editor who did that would be dishonoured.

[Hopley, J.: Would it not come to this: that you would not put in what every man in the street said about the "Cape Times"?]—The point here is that there is an insinuation that I did this, not because it is unimportant, but because it reflected on myself.

But even that is a very good reason for omitting it?—I consider it is detrimental to the editor, and still more detrimental to the journal, because then the public would then have no assurance that news was not struck out, not for the public interest, but for the editor's interest.

In reply to Sir John Buchanan, the witness said he desired that his action should be amalgamated with the present one.

Buchanan, J., said there was no reason why this should not be done.

Charles Malam Dimbleby, sub-editor of the "Cape Times," said that on the evening of the election, Mr. Short, a member of the reporting staff, returned to the office from the City Hall. All news which came in after 7 p.m. passed through witness's hands. On this occasion, Mr. Short returned somewhat late. Witness remarked that he was late, and Mr. Short then said there had been a little function in the Mayor's parlour, which was informal and private. Witness replied, "Just so," and asked him to let him have his copy quickly, and some time afterwards Mr. Short brought the copy, which witness read over, and sent into the printers. Mr. Short told him afterwards that Mr. Stuttaford and Mr. Matthews had made uncomplimentary remarks with reference to the "Cape Times."

Mr. Searle: Did Mr. Short supply you with a report, and did you suppress it?

Witness: Oh, no.

Did you know as a fact he had taken any notes?—No.

[Hopley, J.: If he did as a fact take notes, he suppressed them to you?—Exactly, my lord.]

In reply to further questions, the witness said he had been twenty-five years in Cape Town, and for sixteen years had been sub-editor on daily papers—the "Cape Argus" and the "Cape Times." He had been at several functions in the Mayor's parlour.

Mr. Searle: As far as you know, are they regarded as private?—I have never known proceedings in a Mayor's parlour after a declaration of poll to be published.

They are always regarded as private?—Yes, so much so, that if there had been a report brought in, I should have questioned the reporter particularly as to what he was doing reporting proceedings of that kind.

[Buchanan, J.: The more private it is, the more some papers like to get hold of it.]

Cross-examined by Mr. Molteno: Witness did not think that Mr. Short told him that a "News" reporter was there reporting.

By the Court: Witness did not ask Short if he had taken notes; he did not suppose that a reporter would have taken notes of such proceedings.

Lennox Short, reporter on the staff of the "Cape Times," said he was deputed to report the proceedings in connection with the declaration of the poll, which took place at the entrance to the City Hall in Corporation-street. After the declaration the successful candidates and unsuccessful candidates made speeches, of which witness took a report. Witness wished to verify the figures, which had been read out by the Town Clerk, and on inquiring for that official he was given to understand he was in the Mayor's parlour. Witness thereupon went there. There were about twenty or thirty people present.

The Town Clerk was not there. Witness went and sat down on a couch, intending to wait for the Town Clerk. The door was then shut, and refreshments served, and some speeches of an informal character were made. About a dozen persons spoke, among whom were some of the candidates. Mr. Seabrook, of the "News," sat next to witness. As about the middle of the first speech, Mr. Seabrook asked witness if he intended to give anything, and witness replied in the negative, saying they would take some notes "for fun." Mr. Stuttaford spoke twice during the proceedings. Witness took disjointed notes of three or four speeches. He became personally interested in the proceedings as they developed, and discontinued writing and listened to what was being said. The Town Clerk did not return, and witness saw the figures posted up, and verified them. He took the notes on some loose sheets of paper, which he tore up the same night. He did not tell Mr. Dimpleby he had taken any notes. He did not take notes of Mr. Stuttaford's speech at all, and only a few words of Mr. Matthews' speech. Witness told Mr. Dimpleby that Mr. Matthews and Mr. Stuttaford had been "slanging" the "Cape Times." Witness produced the transcript of his report. He did not transcribe any of the notes he took in the Mayor's parlour. He regarded the proceedings as private.

The witness, under cross-examination, said he found himself in the Mayor's parlour quite by accident.

By Hopley, J.: He could not have got out without inconveniencing other people.

Continuing under cross-examination, witness said he was anxious to have his notes in for the paper as quickly as possible. He only left off taking notes when Mr. Matthews came to the subject of the "Cape Times." He said nothing to Mr. Seabrook.

[Hopley, J.: When you said you were taking notes for fun, what did you mean?]

It is not unusual to take a note for practice.

Mr. Molteno: Did you not think that the fact of your taking notes would lead the gentlemen who were speaking to infer their speeches would appear in the paper?—I was behind a lot of people. Proceeding, the witness said he destroyed his notes taken in the Mayor's parlour.

You told Mr. Dimpleby what had taken place in the chamber?—Yes.

Did you tell him what Mr. Stuttaford said?—Nothing beyond a casual remark.

Was he not interested to know what was said about the paper?—I don't think so.

Did you not tell Mr. Seabrook that you were taking notes for publication?—No.

Counsel said that Mr. Seabrook would state that the witness had asked him how much he was going to make of the report. The witness further stated that he left the Town House along with Mr. Seabrook. Witness had taken no note of what Mr. Stuttaford had said.

You did not think much of the new member?—No answer.

[Hopley, J.: Did you know he was one of your directors?—]—I did not know then.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: Have you ever had instructions given to you not to take notes of anything said against the "Cape Times"?—Not at all. On the contrary, it is the practice to take anything said against the paper.

You were not taking this report for the paper?—No. I never had any intention of publishing it.

Richard Stuttaford stated in September last he was elected as a member of the Town Council. He was a director, but had never been chairman of the "Cape Times." He was present at the Town House at the declaration of the poll. The Mayor invited him to the parlour to join in a refreshment. When he got to the parlour the room was fairly full. When he entered, Mr. Matthews was speaking about his defeat, explaining that he was not treated quite fairly. The health of the Mayor and other candidates was proposed. Witness then made the remark attributed to him in the "S.A. News."

Mr. Searle: Did you regard the meeting as public or private? Absolutely private. When a man asks you to go to his room to have a drink I certainly regard it as a private meeting.

Had you any idea that there were reporters present taking notes?—No.

Witness further stated that he was at a meeting of a number of the Town Councillors in the "Cape Times" Building. The meeting had nothing to do with the "Times." When the meeting was over he thought he might see Mr. Park, as he did not want the editor of the "Times" to think he would run away from anything he had said. No one had ever communicated to him the theory that the proceedings were private. He explained to Mr. Park that he might make a remark more or less in private, or to Mr. Park himself if he were present, but that he might put it in a different way if for publication. His objection to the report was not so much on the question of what he had said about the "Times," as what he had said about the Mayor. The report led one to suppose that he had said that the Mayor was practically the only possible Councillor who could be Mayor for the ensuing year. Mr. Park took up the position that as the thing had been made public he had the right to comment upon it, and witness took up the position, at any rate, that a letter should be inserted from him. In his letter he could not go into the details of a private meeting. If reporters were going to report everything that took place in a private room, he thought at any rate it should be a correct report.

Cross-examined by Mr. Mokeno: The meeting which had taken place between Mr. Park and himself was not what he would call pleasant. Mr. Park seemed to feel annoyed, as one might if it was said of him that he was wrong. Witness would say many things to a man himself which he would not say if he knew that they were to be published.

Do you say absolutely that you did not see reporters present?—The room was fairly full of men, and from what the reporter now says, he was sitting at the farthest point he could have sat, and there must have been men around him.

You see, Mr. Stuttaford, several members of the Council who were present will be called, and will say that they expected to have the proceedings reported?—I cannot help what other people say.

Witness (proceeding) said that he did not know Mr. Seabrook, but he knew the person now indicated to him by sight. He did not see Mr. Seabrook in the Mayor's Parlour on the evening in question. Mr. Seabrook might have wished witness good-night on the termination of the proceedings in the Mayor's Parlour. With regard to Mr. Seabrook's statement that he (Mr. Seabrook) had congratulated witness on his election as he was leaving the Mayor's Parlour, and that witness, in acknowledging the congratulations, said to Mr. Seabrook, "You will give us a good report, won't you?" witness did not remember a word of it.

Sir William Thorne stated that he was Deputy-Mayor of Cape Town. He had been a member of the City Council for a number of years, and had been Mayor of the City for three years. He was not present in the Mayor's Parlour on the occasion in question, because he had not been invited. He was outside on the evening of the election, and had made a speech outside after the election was over.

Mr. Searle: These functions in the Mayor's Parlour, what do you regard them—public or private?—Private, as a rule.

You regard them as private?—On these occasions, Councillors, candidates, and their friends generally were invited in the old Town House into the Mayor's Parlour. If they made any speeches, and there were reporters present there, those present were appealed to, whether they wished to have their speeches reported.

The practice has been that these functions are considered private?—Yes. I do not know if speeches on these occasions have been reported. If so, it was only on one occasion.

The Mayor's Parlour is private?—People are not admitted to the Mayor's Parlour unless Councillors or their friends, or by invitation.

By Mr. Molteno: The practice in the old Town House was to ask the consent of the speakers if their speeches could be reported. Witness did not know anything about other persons having seen reporters in the Mayor's Parlour on the evening in question.

Mr. Searle called Mr. Ball.

[Buchanan, J.: What has all this evidence to do with the case?]

Mr. Searle: It is really on a side issue. I do not think that it has anything to do with it. In view of what your lordship says, I will not take the witness's evidence. It is only to show the privacy of the proceedings.

[Buchanan, J.: Is that your case?]

Mr. Searle: I had other evidence to call as to the privacy of the proceedings, but I will not take it now. That is my case.

Mr. Molteno: I am going to make a motion—

[Buchanan, J.: You have a plea on record. Are you going to support it?]

Mr. Molteno: I do not think that the plea affects it.

[Buchanan, J.: Are you going to lead evidence in support of your plea or not?]

Mr. Molteno said that he had a lot of evidence to lead as to what had taken place on the occasion in question; but he would move at that stage for absolution from the instance. He would submit that, after hearing the evidence for the plaintiff, there was no case. He would submit that, on the declaration, there was no evidence in support of defamation. In what did the alleged libel consist? The "South African News" was trying to find an explanation for the fact that, although a reporter of the "Cape Times" was present in the Mayor's parlour, and had taken notes, yet no report had appeared in the "Cape Times," and had said merely by way of explanation of these facts, "Apparently what happened was that the 'Cape Times' thought it well to suppress this interesting expression of opinion by one of its directors, and accordingly decided to suppress the whole report of the proceedings in the Mayor's parlour, which its representative had industriously compiled." Now, even supposing that all this was not true, and supposing that no notes had been taken at all, there was no defamation in the words complained of.

Mr. Molteno: Because of the innuendo contained in the latter part of the declaration. Paragraph 6 of the declaration says: "The said words were intended to mean, and did mean, that the plaintiff company had acted in a dishonest and dishonourable manner in the conduct of its business as proprietor of the 'Cape Times' newspaper, and in its dealings with the said Richard Stuttford; that it had wilfully and deliberately suppressed its own shorthand writer's report of the proceedings aforesaid in the Mayor's parlour, because the said Richard Stuttford had during the course of the said proceedings commented adversely on the attitude taken up by the 'Cape Times' newspaper with regard to the said election, and, subsequently, in order to deceive the said Richard Stuttford, and to prevent the publication of his speech aforesaid, had falsely pretended to the said Richard Stuttford that the said proceedings were private, well knowing that they were not."

[Hopley, J.: But in argument on exception you could have brought that up.]

Mr. Molteno: Rogers deals with cases of this sort, with regard to the position taken up in refusing to submit a case to a jury. He deals with it under the head of "Words incapable of defamatory meaning."

Mr. Searle, in reply, said that if there was any ground for dismissing the action at the present stage, it could only be that the words complained of were incapable of a defamatory meaning. It was clearly laid down in English law that the assertion that a person conducted a business in a dishonest way was libellous. If it were shown that certain words were capable of injuring a person's or company's business, they constituted libel, even without showing any special damages. It was a question in the present case whether it was a proper way in which to carry on a newspaper business, to suppress what had been said by a director of the newspaper for the special reason alleged in the article in question. Mr. Searle quoted from Mr. Melius de Villiers' Commentaries on Roman-Dutch Law, from the section commencing on Voet (47-10-10), as to what constituted the grounds for an action for libel. He went on to quote from the case of the South Heathon Coal Company v. The North-Eastern News Association, Limited, reported in volume 1, 1904, Queen's Bench Division reports, 133.

In that case the alleged libel had reference to the insanitary condition of the Coal Company's premises, and judgment was given for the plaintiff. In giving judgment, the Lord Chief Justice, who had tried the case, had said that any statement calculated to bring into contempt, hatred, or ridicule a person or company was libellous, and, further, that a company had a ground for action where the management of its affairs was attacked, and that without alleging or proving special damages. It was held that the plaintiff company was injured in its credit and reputation. It was only common-sense that in such a matter a company must be treated in the same way as an individual where an assertion was made that was calculated to bring the company in its business into ridicule. If there was no law on the point, a company would be at the mercy of anyone to slander as he wished. Then there was the case of The Mayor of Manchester v. Williams (1 Q.B. 1891, p. 54), where it was held that the Mayor could not sue in respect of an article accusing some of the municipal departments with corruption, because the corporation was not a trading company. In the case of the Metropolitan Omnibus Company v. Hawkins, in which the defendant maliciously published a letter imputing to the company insolvency and mismanagement, it was clearly laid down that the reputation of a corporation should be protected to carry on its business. In Williams v. Beaumont (10 Bingham 269), where the defendant had said that an insurance company had practically defrauded a man's heirs out of a life policy by taking a certain technical exception, which they were entitled to take, Tindall (C. J.) held the action was maintainable, as it was a libel on the partnership by attacking the mode in which that business was conducted. It was not necessary, counsel submitted, to allege or to prove any special damages. Here was a newspaper, and he took it to be ordinary and proper management to supply the public with such news as was likely to interest the public in a fair and proper manner. Now, it was alleged it sent a reporter to report on certain proceedings, and, after he compiled his report in an industrious manner, and when it was found that one of the directors of the company had said something against the policy of the paper, that the editor of the paper deliberately suppressed the report, and then the editor invented and communicated to the person, who had made the speech, the ingenious theory that the proceedings were private.

Mr. Searle said it was very seldom the case that libels were stated as facts; suggestions were usually thrown out. The smallest investigation would have shown the untruth of the statement, and surely a person could not escape by the word apparently. If the company had done such a thing it could not be carrying on its business in an honest and fair manner.

Hopley, J., said he could not see how the public could expect the "Cape Times" to put in anything like that. The "Cape Times" was not up for election; it was not running for Mayor even.

Mr. Searle said the defendants stated it was of public interest and was suppressed

[Hopley, J.: What did it matter to the public whether the "Cape Times" was disparagingly spoken of at that time?]

Mr. Searle: The whole gist of the article is that it was a matter of public interest.

[Hopley, J.: I do not see anything discreditable in the "Cape Times" not reporting it.]

Mr. Searle: Well, my lord, a reporter is sent there, and no report appears. And then, whether the matter is of public interest or not, it is said that, because these things were said by a director of the "Cape Times," they were suppressed.

[Hopley, J.: What hurts you, then, is the imputation?]

Mr. Searle: Yes, the allegation of a motive.

[Hopley, J.: If we were to have all the cases where motives are imputed before us, the Court would have too much work.]

Mr. Searle: I am sorry, my lord; but the question is, When is the line overstepped? To suppress a report for the motives alleged is a discreditable way of conducting the business of the company. The whole insinuation is discreditable to the company, and to the "Cape Times."

[Hopley, J.: I can see there is an element of discredit about it, as far as regards Park—or even Stuttford, if you come to that—but I do not see how the whole company, which now claims, is affected. Can you say how the whole company is damaged?]

Mr. Searle: I say it casts discredit on the "Cape Times" to have it said that it would do such things. And, of course, if it did this to one report, why not to others? That is what the man in the street will say. The man in the street will say, "Oh, that's the way with the 'Cape Times.'" Of course, if the thing has been done once, it may be done any time. Proceeding to refer to the contention that the "Cape Times" Company was not affected, Mr. Searle said that the defendant first asserted that Mr. Park was not referred to, and now, when the "Cape Times" Company sued, said that the company had no action. Mr. Searle went on to quote from the newspaper report of the case of St. Leger v. Rowles, tried by the Chief Justice on February 17, in which the plaintiff was awarded £25 damages on account of a statement made that he had caused a garbled report to be published in the "Cape Times"; and to refer to the case of the "Cape Times" v. W. A. Richards and Company (80, Supreme Court Reports, page 15).

[Hopley, J.: But in that case (the "Cape Times" v. Richards) the whole company is referred to. In this case it is a question of whether the editor, or sub-editor, or someone on the staff took a course which he ought not to have taken.]

Mr. Searle: That is just the point. It may be the editor or sub-editor or someone on the staff, and, there being a doubt, the company must have right to sue. Proceeding, he said that a newspaper company had a special duty towards the public not to resort to the practices or methods alleged in the present case; and, when it was said that it resorted to such practices from improper motives, it injured the company. For these reasons, he submitted that the case should not be stopped now, but that the matter should be allowed to proceed, and the whole thing thrashed out. The motion now made for absolution from the instance was most extraordinary, in view of the pleadings.

Buchanan, J.: This is an action brought by one newspaper company against another newspaper company for articles published in the defendants' paper. It is what is known in law as an actio injuriarum—an action founded upon injury of the nature either to the honour, person, or property of the plaintiff. From the English authority, quoted by Mr. Searle, it would appear that the same principles of law govern such actions, no matter whether the plaintiff was a private individual or a company but at the same time, it is evident that different considerations apply when the action for damages is brought for a libel to a person than when the action is for a libel to a company. There are companies of two kinds, trading corporations and non-trading corporations, and it has been clearly shown that non-trading corporations cannot be libelled in their corporate capacity by imputing an act of the mind or intention. They cannot bring an action for libel if accused of murder or other crimes, and they cannot in the same way be honourable or dishonourable. It is no libel to say of a non-trading corporation that it is corrupt; but so to accuse any individual member of the corporation would, of course, be actionable. In this case the action is not brought by an individual member, but it is instituted by the corporate body, and being a trading company, I think the imputation of libel should be of a nature capable of injuring the reputation of the company in the conduct of its actual business, or in any way which may affect the business of the company. In this case no special damages have been alleged, and none proved, and there is nothing in the case to show that the business of the company has been in any way injured, outside what might be said to be its reputation. The charges complained of are contained in an article published by the defendant paper, and as the case now stands, we must take these charges as being entirely without foundation. The principal complaint is this: The defendant paper says, apparently what happened after the election of certain Town Councillors, that the "Cape Times" thought well to suppress this interesting expression of opinion by one of its directors, and accordingly decided to suppress the whole of the report of the proceedings in the Mayor's parlour, which its representative had industriously compiled. Now, the whole of this statement, as far as the facts are concerned, is utterly without foundation, and as the case stands, we take it, therefore, that this charge is not true as far as the facts are concerned. Then, it says it invented and communicated to Mr. Stuttaford the ingenious theory, which is not supported by men who have larger acquaintance with municipal affairs than Mr. Stuttaford, that the proceedings in the Mayor's parlour were of a private character. Again, this allegation is not founded on fact. I find great difficulty in taking these charges in saying how they can be imputed as a libel upon a trading company. None of these allegations affect the business of the company, none of them affect the trading of the company, nor can I see how these allegations can have injured the company in any way. The suppression of an interesting expression of opinion by a newspaper may or may not be discreditable to the people conducting it. There is sufficient in this article to indicate that the proceedings in the Mayor's Parlour were, in the opinion of the "Cape Times," at least, and in the opinion of a great many people, private, and should not have been made the matter of a public report, but that did not appear to be the view of the editor of the defendant company's newspaper; though it would seem that the defendants' newspaper did not consider any of the speeches made in the Mayor's parlour of sufficient interest to report; but only culled from the speakers certain remarks reflecting on the opposition paper. But then we know that newspapers are very fond of publishing private information, and when they commit a libel in so doing, they must take the consequences. The simple ground on which this case must go off is that, assuming these allegations to be untrue, they cannot be read as actionable against a trading company. In this case, sitting as a juror, on this point I would not say that the statement made by one newspaper of this nature is actionable for a remedy in damages. I will not say anything further, because it is quite possible that in the action brought by the editor for personal damages, he may succeed in showing that he personally has suffered in his reputation as an editor. He is in a very different position. In this case I do not think what was said can affect.

ness's wife, he believed, was leaving that day.

Evidence was called to the effect that the respondent and Barker had lived together as man and wife in Caledon-street.

A decree of divorce was granted.

WIGGETT V. WIGGETT.

Mr. Benjamin, for petitioner, said there was a defect in the service, and he applied for an extension of the return day until the 15th April.

The application was granted, and leave given to take the evidence of the petitioner on commission.

COURTENAY V. COURTENAY.

Mr. Benjamin applied, on behalf of the wife, Jane Elizabeth Courtenay, for an order for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The petition and supporting evidence of the plaintiff (taken on commission) showed that the parties were married at Wolverhampton, England, in March, 1886. There were two children of the marriage. Defendant came to South Africa in 1902, and the wife and children followed. They lived at Cathcart for a time, until the respondent was discharged from his situation. Petitioner was compelled to earn her own livelihood, and travelled for a time with a concert party. She now lived in Johannesburg, while respondent was at Kimberley. Her husband had written to her from Kimberley promising amendment, and in one letter he made an unfounded charge against her. He had never offered to provide her with a home, and had not contributed to the support of herself or her children. She was now in a position as house-keeper at Johannesburg. She was willing to return to her husband if he provided her with a home.

A decree of restitution was granted calling on respondent to return to or receive the applicant on or before the 15th March, failing which a rule nisi would be issued, returnable on the 1st April, calling on respondent to show cause why a decree of divorce should not be granted, why the petitioner should not have the custody of the two children, and why respondent should not be ordered to pay £2 a month for the maintenance of each of the children until they attain the age of 16 years.

LOVELL V. LOVELL.

This was a petition for an order for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which for a decree of divorce, brought by the wife.

Mr. Close was for the petitioner.

Evidence of the marriage having been given,

Elizabeth Jane Lovell was called, and said she was a widow when she married the respondent. The ceremony took place on the 23rd April, 1891, and they lived happily for ten years. On the 4th April, 1901, respondent was called out as a member of the Cape Garrison Artillery. She had never heard from him since. She had made inquiries, but could find no trace of him. He had been struck off the register of the Artillery for desertion. Before the Artillery was called out, he was working on the railway. She lost a bequest on her second marriage, but since, by the death of a child, the property had reverted to her.

By the Court: They had been living on good terms, and she had no idea why respondent left, or where he had gone to.

Mr. Close, replying to his lordship, said the defendant had not gone to the front, unless he did so under another name, and with another regiment.

An order was granted calling on respondent to return on or before the 15th March, failing which the usual rule nisi to be issued, the order to be published once in the "Cape Times."

HARRIS V. DOYLE.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff; Mr. Upington for the defendant.

Dr. Greer said he had advised his client to accept judgment for the amount tendered in the plea (£12 10s.), with costs to date of tender, and he would therefore withdraw the case.

Judgment was entered for plaintiff for £12 10s., with taxed costs to date of tender, plaintiff to pay the subsequent costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.)]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BRUCE V. KIPPS. { 1906.
Feb. 3rd.

This was an action for provisional sentence brought by Jessie Martyn Bruce, on a promissory note for £1,000, made by George Benjamin Kipps, of Kalk Bay.

The affidavit of James David Low, of the firm of Thomas Masterton and Co., stated he was agent for the plaintiff, who was at present in Europe. Negotiations were carried on between the defendant and Mr. James Bruce, husband of the plaintiff. He recollected Mr. Bruce handing to his firm the note of sale, which he stated incorporated the terms and conditions, and thereafter the defendant negotiated with witness's firm with the apparent purpose of carrying the agreement into force. Defendant did not then allege that the sale was conditional upon the plaintiff or her husband obtaining the consent of the bondholder to leaving one-half of the existing bond as a first bond on the property, but in order to assist the defendant, who stated that he had difficulty in financing the transaction, witness's firm, as an act of grace, approached the bondholder to consent to such an arrangement, but the bondholder declined to do so. In order still further to assist the defendant, the firm made several suggestions to him with a view of easing his financial position, and yet enabling him to complete the contract he had entered into. These suggestions were not alternative propositions to the contract, but schemes which would have rendered it more easy for defendant to carry out the contract. Defendant did not assume his present attitude until, in consequence of his failure after a very considerable time had been allowed him, witness's firm instructed plaintiff's attorneys to take the matter up. As defendant had never inspected the diagram, witness did not see how defendant could state that the house tendered him was not the house he would have selected.

The affidavit of George William Newitt Oldham stated that defendant told him he had bought one of plaintiff's houses, and asked him to find a tenant for same as from September 1.

The affidavit of George Edward Griffiths stated he remembered being present about August 16, 1904, when there was a discussion regarding the contemplated purchase by Kipps from Bruce of one of two cottages. Bruce made it clear that there was a mortgage for £1,000 on the villas, and he represented to Kipps that the bondholder would consent to split the bond into two, and let one half remain on each property, so that Kipps would only have to find £200 in cash, as, if he were unable to raise the balance of the purchase price on the second mortgage, Bruce was prepared to allow it to remain on the property.

A similar affidavit was made by defendant.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Benjamin for the defendant.

De Villiers, C.J., said the only way to settle this matter was to let it go to trial, and the Court would therefore make an order to that effect, costs to be costs in cause.

SAUERLAUDER V. LAZARUS.

Dr. Groer moved, as a matter of urgency, for the arrest of the defendant, failing his furnishing security. The affidavit of the plaintiff stated he was a hotel proprietor at Muizenberg, and the defendant owed him £152 for hotel board, etc., for himself, his wife, and family. He had left the hotel, and was at present residing in Cape Town, but belonged to the Transvaal. Applicant had no security, except three cases of linen and a life insurance policy, which had no surrender value until the decease of the defendant, and the premiums were in arrear.

An order for the arrest of the defendant was granted, power being given him to apply to the Court for discharge of the order.

BECKER V. WOLFAARD.

Mr. Burton moved, on behalf of Jan. A. Becker, of Ladysmith, to make absolute a rule nisi interdicting Guiliame Jacobus Wolfaard from alienating or further encumbering certain landed property pending an action to be instituted against him by petitioner to compel him to pay into the Guardian Fund the purchase money of the land transferred to him or to give security for the due payment of the money when it should become payable.

Mr. Close opposed the motion. The applicant's petition stated that by the will of Jacobus Wolfaard and his wife, now deceased, the testators, who were married in community of property bequeathed to their two sons, Guiliame Johannes Jacobus and Frederick Johannes, certain two plots of redeemed quitrent land situate in the division of Ladysmith for the sum of £1,400, subject to the condition that the survivor of them should retain a life interest in the property, and that the same should not devolve upon the sons until after the death of the survivor, when £1,400 should be paid into the joint estate of the testators. Cornelia Christina Wolfaard died on January 22, 1900, without having altered the terms of the bequest, leaving her two sons surviving. Frederick Johannes Wolfaard surrendered his estate as insolvent in June, 1900. The trustees of the insolvent estate sold to the petitioner his right to take over the half-share in the properties, as also all the insolvent's right and title to any inheritance owing to him out of the joint estate of the testator's as one of the residuary heirs. The transfer of the property had been passed to petitioner, and the purchase money due had been secured to the heirs of the joint estate by a mortgage bond passed by petitioner in favour of the estate payable after the death of the survivor of the estate. The transfer of the other half-share in the properties was passed by Jacobus Albertus Wolfaard to his son, and Guillaume Johannes Jacobus Wolfaard in November, 1904, and simultaneously with the passing of the transfer Guillaume Johannes Jacobus Wolfaard passed a mortgage bond to Heltje Johanna Rossouw for £700, hypothecating the property, and thereafter, in December, 1904, further mortgaged the property to Heltje Johanna Rossouw for £200. As far as petitioner could gather, Guillaume Johannes Jacobus Wolfaard had not either paid into the joint estate of the testators the purchase amount of the land nor had he given any valid or sufficient security that it would be paid when the same fell due. As petitioner intended instituting proceedings against Wolfaard to compel him to pay the purchase price of the farm into the hands of the Master, or otherwise, to give security for the payment, he feared that he would either alienate or further mortgage the land.

The affidavit of the petitioner stated that the applicant should have ascertained whether the bequest money due by deponent had been settled by making proper inquiries. Before the transfer of the bequeathed property was made in respondent's favour, his conveyances had to explain matters satisfactorily to the Registrar of Deeds. This was done by supplying him with a statement signed by the executors, which showed that setting off the bequest money against amounts due by the estate there remained due to the deponent the sum of £124 9s. 3d. Previous to the death of deponent's mother deponent sold certain property to Jacobus M. Crafford for £600. In order to pay deponent, the purchaser raised a loan for this amount on security of the property purchased together with the farm Kuny, purchased from deponent's father. At that time there was an existing bond for £600 on deponent's father's (the testator's) property, and it was arranged between the testator and this deponent that this latter bond should be paid off with the £600 deponent got from Crafford, and this was done. The testator was to have passed a bond for this amount in deponent's favour, but this was not done. Testator subsequently paid £100 to deponent, for which deponent gave the promissory note which erroneously figures in the liquidation account. This, together with certain small debts, amounting to £34 3s. 9d., due to testator by deponent, reduced testator's indebtedness to deponent to £465 16s. 3d., with £174 13s. interest. There would have to be a division of bequest moneys (£1,700) between the seven heirs, which would give to each £240. Therefore deponent's position with the estate on January 31 was as follows: Bequest amount due, £700; amount due to deponent by estate, £465 16s. 3d.; interest, £174 13s.; amount due, ex-division bequest moneys, £240; balance due to deponent by estate, £130 9s. 3d. It would be seen that the £700 due by deponent to the estate as and for bequest money was fully secured, and he would have to receive nearly £200 over the bequest money he had to pay. It would be injurious to deponent, and his business to be prevented from dealing with his property in a full and free manner, and either mortgaging or disposing of the land inherited from his parents if occasion arose, nor would it prejudice the petitioner or any of the other heirs in any way, if he did so.

Mr. Close argued that the proper remedy was by action. It was, he submitted, wrong that his client, whose means and position were not challenged, should have his property tied up until the hearing of the action, when, in the meantime, he might have an advantageous offer for it. His client had all the documents in his favour.

Mr. Burton said that if what the old man said was true, it was perfectly clear that the respondent did not come into court with clean hands.

De Villiers, C.J., said he did not think the learned judge would have granted the order if he had known what was to be said on the part of the respondent.

Mr. Burton said that if the respondent had a good case, it could not prejudice him to have the order made, because he could sell the property subject to the decision in the case.

The Court ordered that the rule be made absolute, the applicant to go to trial at the Circuit Court forthwith, costs of the application to be costs in the cause, the interdict to be discharged, in case the respondent gives security to the satisfaction of the Master for any sum not exceeding £700 that may be found to be due to the heirs of his father.

FINLAYSON V. FINLAYSON.

This was an application by Catherine Finlayson to have made absolute a rule nisi, dated January 22, 1906, and returnable on February 1, to operate as an interim attachment of all moneys belonging to the respondent Alexander Finlayson, in the possession of Christopher Brady, attorney, of Cape Town.

Mr. Upington appeared for the petitioner, and Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent.

Mr. Upington explained that on January 22 the petitioner (Catherine Finlayson) applied to Mr. Justice Buchanan in Chambers for an order restraining the sum of £30, or whatever amount up to £115 that might be held by Christopher Brady, attorney, Cape Town, for the respondent, to meet allowance for maintenance alleged to be due, balance of certain taxed costs, pending compliance with an order of Court, dated September 15, 1902, together with a further sum, which the Court might deem sufficient for the purpose of enabling the petitioner to defend the action for divorce, brought by the respondent, now pending, with costs.

The petition of Mrs. Finlayson, put in on that occasion, set forth that she was married in community of property to Alexander Finlayson on May 1, 1900, and there was one child of the marriage. On July 2, 1902, the petitioner applied to the Court for an order requiring her husband to pay over a sum of money sufficient to enable her to institute proceedings against him for a judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty and intemperance, and an order regarding the temporary custody of the child, and for alimony, pending the result of the action. On August 2, 1902, the Court made an order requiring the petitioner's husband to contribute £10 towards the costs of her intended action, and to pay her £2 per month for the maintenance of her child and self, pendente lite, and to restore to her the minor child. Petitioner's husband having failed to comply with the Court's order, she made further application, on September 15, 1902, to have him committed for contempt of Court, when it was ordered that a decree of attachment be made, provided that, before noon on September 16, the respondent did not deliver up the child, and pay £2 per month for the maintenance of the applicant (the present petitioner) and her child, until the further order of Court, the respondent to pay the costs of the application. The child was delivered up within the stipulated period, but the respondent failed and neglected to pay the monthly instalments, and on February 1, 1906, would be in default £82, representing 41 months at £2 per month. The respondent had further failed to pay the costs of that application, taxed and allowed at £27 os. 7d., except for £5 on account. On January 16 the petitioner was served with a summons, issued at the instance of her husband, claiming restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce, with an order for the custody of the child of the marriage, to which the petitioner had entered appearance. The petitioner had been informed that her husband had for over four years past been in the employ of the Telegraph Department, and had been drawing a fair salary, from which, if he had wished, he could have contributed the prescribed sum of £2, and made an effort to meet the costs. The petitioner had a good defence to the action commenced against her by her husband, and was desirous of being awarded the custody of the child. She submitted that her husband should be required to comply with the order of the Court of September 15, 1902, and make a deposit of a sum sufficient to cover the costs of her defence, before he was allowed to proceed any further with his contemplated action. The petitioner was desirous that the money deposited by her husband with Christopher Brady be attached, as she was apprehensive that her husband, when he ascertained that the action was to be defended, might withdraw the same, and leave her to meet the costs which had already been incurred, and such further costs as might be incurred in connection with the various applications.

Upon that application, Mr. Justice Buchanan caused the rule nisi to be issued, which it was now sought to make absolute.

Mr. Benjamin read the respondent's affidavit, which stated that he was a linesman engaged by the Postal and Telegraph Department at Oudtshoorn, and was earning £12 10s. per month. He denied the alleged cruelty and drunkenness, and said he had always been ready and willing to provide the petitioner and the child with a proper home and maintenance, according to his station and means; but his wife had wilfully and wrongfully deserted him and refused to return. He admitted the order of the Court directing him to pay £10 and £2 per month, but such order was made in his absence in ignorance. He admitted the decree of personal attachment, but had always been ready and willing to support his wife and child if they returned to him. The said attachment had never been enforced. The petitioner had never proceeded with her action for judicial separation, nor had she ever demanded payment of the £2 per month. On the contrary, she had informed him that she did not require any money from him or anyone else. His wife had left him in December, 1901, when he was ill in bed; that was the third time she had deserted him. For the purposes of the proceedings instituted by him against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, he had borrowed the sum of £25 from Mr. Roberts, of Oudtshoorn. Of that sum, he had paid petitioner's attorneys £5 and his own attorney £26, and, so far as he was aware, the whole amount had been exhausted at the present time.

Mr. Upington said that this man had set the order of Court at defiance, though for four years he had been drawing £12 10s. per month.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but if Attorney Brady has spent this money for his dient, how can the Court give an order to restrain the money?]

Mr. Upington: He says "partly." He submitted that if Mr. Brady had a balance in hand, it should be attached. The respondent's first duty was to comply with the order of the Court, before he came to the Court to ask for any further relief.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the rule nisi would be made absolute, to the extent of £10, with leave to apply for the reduction of such sum on production of proof of the amount owing to him (Attorney Brady).

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

MILLS V. CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL. { 1906.
Feb. 5th.
" 6th.
" 8th.

Damage—Negligence—Landslip.

A landslip having occurred on the side of a hill at an elevation above the plaintiff's house, there was a rush of water and mud which broke a water-pipe (which had been laid by the defendant Council also above the house) and destroyed the house.

Held, that in the absence of proof that the breaking of the pipe contributed to the damage, or was caused by the defendant's negligence, the defendant Council was not liable.

This was an action brought by Samuel S. B. Mills, to recover from the Cape Town Corporation, damages to the extent of £7,160, by reason of the defendant's negligence in improperly laying, and failing to protect a pipe at Clifton-on-Sea, the breakage of which, and the improper construction of a pathway, caused a landslip to sweep away the plaintiff's house on June 10 last.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. Plaintiff resides at Sea Point, and is registered owner of a certain property known as "Clifton," which is situated on the slope of the Lion's Head, between Camp's Bay and Sea Point; defendants are the Town Council of the City of Cape Town, as incorporated by and under the provisions of Act 26 of 1893.

2. At some time, the exact date whereof is not material to this action, defendants, through themselves, their agents, or servants, constructed and laid a line of iron piping for the purpose of conveying water from a certain pressure tank on the Kloof Nek to a certain reservoir which supplies water to the Municipality of Green and Sea Point, the said line of piping crossing a ravine running up the mountain at a spot above plaintiff's property, at which spot it was improperly and negligently constructed, and was not protected or shielded, so as to guard against the possibility of a break being caused as in the way hereinafter mentioned.

3. Defendants, through themselves, their servants, or agents, further constructed a path, or road, running round the Lion's Head in the direction of plaintiff's property aforesaid, and thence onward to the Kloof Nek, which path or road was so improperly and negligently constructed as to intercept, collect, and concentrate the rain falling over a considerable area, no means being provided for the safe conduct therefrom of the water so intercepted and collected.

4. On or about June 10, 1905, after a considerable fall of rain, the volume of water intercepted, collected, and concentrated by the said path or road, and which, but for the existence of such road, would have distributed evenly and run differently, and in other directions forced its way into the said ravine above plaintiff's property, carrying with it earth, rocky material, and other debris, and this, or some rock loosened thereby, or both of them together, broke the aforesaid line of pipes at the spot in the ravine aforesaid, and, augmented by the water escaping from the broken line of pipes, rushed down the ravine into plaintiff's property, and on or about 11th June, 1905, swept away the homestead thereon and the furniture and contents thereof, together with the garden, terraces, trees, and large bodies of soil; whereby plaintiff has suffered damage which he estimates in the sum of £7,160.

Wherefore plaintiff prays:

(a) Judgment for the sum of £7,160.
(b) An order from defendant to make provision for the safe disposal of the water intercepted, collected, and concentrated by the path or road aforesaid.

(c) A further order to duly protect the line of pipes aforesaid from liability to breakage at or above plaintiff's property.

(d) Interest a tempore morae.

(e) Such further and other relief as may seem meet.

(f) Costs of suit.

To this declaration defendants pleaded as follows:

1. The defendants admit par. 1 of the declaration.

2. As to par. 2 thereof they say that the line of iron piping carrying water from the pressure tank situate in Kloof Nek, to the Sea Point reservoir was laid about September, 1896, and was laid, with the exception of a certain portion not now in question, below the surface of the ground.

3. The defendants deny that the said line of piping was improperly or negligently laid or constructed in any manner, but say that it was laid and constructed by and under the supervision of a competent engineer, to wit, Mr. Thomas Stewart; that it was laid, constructed, protected and shielded in the best manner possible where it crossed the aforesaid ravine.

4. As to par. 3 thereof, they admit that the constructed a narrow road or path running from the Lion's Rump round the Lion's Head at the base of the crags, and thence onward to the Kloof Nek; they deny that the said road or path was improperly or negligently constructed, or that the same did in any way intercept or concentrate the rainfall over a considerable area as alleged, or that no means were provided for the safe conduct from such road of the water collected thereon.

5. As to par 4 thereof, they deny that on or about June 10th, as alleged, any large quantity of water was interrupted, collected, and concentrated by the said road or path aforesaid, which water, but for the existence of such road or path, would have distributed evenly or run differently in other directions, and that such water was forced into the ravine as alleged; but they admit that on the 8th, 9th, and 10th days of June there was a heavy rainfall at Clifton and in the neighbourhood thereof.

6. They say that, as a result of this rainfall, on the morning of Sunday, the 11th of June, the sides, as well as the centre of the ravine, situate above plaintiff's property, became thoroughly saturated with water, and that a landslip was caused along the said ravine in consequence, starting near the top of the ravine, and that the water running down the ravine and the sides thereof, together with earth, rocky material, and other debris slipping down, found its way down the said ravine from the point or points considerably above where the said iron piping crosses the ravine, and, rushing down the said ravine, scoured out the same, broke the iron piping at the point where it crossed the ravine and then swept down the said ravine on to the plaintiff's property.

7. When the said pipe was broken the water escaping therefrom did increase the volume of water rushing down the ravine, but not to any material extent which would have affected any damage done to plaintiff's property by the said landslip and rush of mud and debris from the upper portion of the said ravine above the iron piping aforesaid.

8. They admit that the plaintiff's house and the furniture, together with garden, terrace, trees, and portion of soil on his property, were seriously damaged or destroyed, but they deny that the said damage amounted to £7,160, as alleged, and they deny that the same was due to any act or negligence of their's, and say that the same was caused by the accidental landslip and rush of debris as aforesaid, and was due to vis major, or to causes for which they, the defendants, are not responsible.

9. Save as above, they deny all the allegations in pars. 2, 3, and 4 of the declaration.

Wherefore, they pray that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

The replication was general.

Sir H. Juta (with him Mr. Benjamin), for plaintiff. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C.), for the defendants.

Samuel Solomon Blumenthal Mills, plaintiff, said the stream down the ravine ran all the year round. Two masonry tanks supplied water for domestic use, and a nine-inch pipe led the superfluous water down to the sea from a catchpit. There was, in addition, a furrow made by witness, because the grating of the catchpit sometimes became blocked, and there was slight flooding. Before the occasion in question, there were just as heavy rains. The pipe constructed by the defendants was exposed to the extent of twelve or thirteen feet. Witness had experience as a contractor, and said that the pipe should not have been left exposed. It was not until after the accident he had any knowledge of the path. After that he saw furrows where the water rushed down. At the lower edge of the path, there was a quantity of debris.

If the pipe had been sufficiently protected, he thought any landslip would have spread over the pipe, and distributed itself on the terrace below. When the flood came down, witness and others did what they could to repair the furrow, and returned to the house. Later on he returned and worked under candle light, but the rush of water continued, and he sent to Sea Point for assistance. The furrow was repaired, and they went to breakfast. At breakfast they heard a rumbling noise. Witness saw the mud wall with boulders crushing through the trees. It was a rolling wall of mud, that struck the house in the middle, and swept it practically into the garden, and buried it. He actually sold the place for £8,750 in 1904, exclusive of furniture, but the sale was cancelled, witness giving the buyer a piece of land in compensation.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: There were several slips near Clifton in 1902, both along the Kloof-road and the Victoria-road. He was aware that there was a very heavy rainfall that season. The breaking of the six-inch pipe was one of the causes of this landslip. He assumed that the pipe had been broken at 10 o'clock on Saturday night, and would be surprised to learn that it was intact at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning. He could give details of the damage at £7,160.

Howard Bull, who was camping out at Clifton in June, 1905, said he was acquainted with the pipe and the ravine at Mr. Mills's place. When he saw the pipe in 1903 the pipe was exposed to the extent of eleven feet. He was not surprised at the quantity of water that came down at the time in question as he had experienced as heavy rains before. The water continued to rush for hours after the rain ceased. Witness saw the mud rush come through the house.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had seen the pipe on many occasions. It was a customary walk of his along the ravine.

James Colley, a contractor, of Sea Point, stated he knew the plaintiff's property well. He connected the water pipes to the plaintiff's tanks. The pipe in question he saw in 1898, and he was quite positive the pipe was exposed then. He had never seen any protection of the pipe. He had never come across an engineer who would allow him to run a pipe in such a condition through a ravine. The pipe put down by Mr. Mills was sufficient to carry off the water. There was evidence of a succession of dams being formed on the road.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: When he saw the pipe first, he remarked to the plaintiff that there was a risk of it being broken by falling boulders.

Alexander Tate, who was engaged at work at Clifton in 1901, stated the pipe was exposed then about a pipe's length, and eighteen inches above the ground.

Wilhelm Versfeld, Government land surveyor, who drew up a survey of the ground around the pathway, said that above the places where the land slipped there were traces of the water concentrating in breakages. If there had been no path, the water would have distributed itself as it did formerly.

S. Sassini, proprietor of the Clifton Hotel since August, 1903, said he first saw the pipe shortly after he bought the property. The pipe was exposed about ten or eleven feet, and about twelve inches above the ground. There were no traces of any protection. Between nine and ten o'clock on Saturday evening, June 10, he went up to see what was the cause of the extraordinary and sudden rush of water. He had seen as heavy rains, but never such a rush of water.

Jacobus Adrian Monson, farmer, who lived near the Lion's Head, said when the road was constructed there was no provision for taking off the water. The road was improperly made. He was there from when he was a boy, and although he had seen heavier rains, he had never seen anything like that on the mountain side. The road, he thought, was the cause of the slip.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had seen a landslip in the hollow a year before, when the road was not in existence. In the early part of 1905 there were several fires, and the bush was cleared considerably, thereby loosening the soil.

Petrus Maskew, Government land surveyor, said the effect of the path in question would be to concentrate the water.

H. H. Evans, civil engineer, spoke of visiting the place three or four days before the washaway. He could see no indications of disturbance above the pathway. He did not consider it a proper thing to expose the piping. At the present time it was by no means safe, and neither was the path.

George Lacey Good, Civil Engineer, in practice for thirty years, said he visited the scene on Thursday week, and found no provision for the drainage from the path. Witness described the effect of such a path cut on the mountain side. It would have the effect of concentrating water to some extent, and the result of water flowing over the rocks might be the starting of mischief.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He was under the impression that the pipe had broken some time before the accident.

Henry Solomon, who had known the pipe for years, said it had never been covered.

Charles E. Waite said he was residing in Mr. Mills's house during Mr. Mills' absence in 1904. Witness frequently went up the glen in the evenings, and often noticed the pipe, which was exposed to something like 12 to 14 feet.

Thomas Olive, member of the Institute of Civil Engineers, attributed the destruction of the property mainly to the breakage of the pipe. The path undoubtedly had the effect of concentrating water. The whole source of the trouble was the pipe, which had disturbed the stability of the valley. About 200 feet above where the pipe crossed, a huge boulder had recently come away, and he thought changes in the ground would continue to take place. The witness said he would make the path much wider.

Other witnesses — contractors and builders — were called to testify as to the fairness of the prices for plans and quantities put in by the architect.

Sir Henry Juta closed his case.

Thomas Stewart, C.E., stated he had had a great deal of experience of water-works. Witness had the general supervision of the laying of the pipe track to supply Sea Point with water from the mountain. The pipe was of 6 inches diameter inside, and specially constructed to resist pressure. The pipes were all tested before they were laid down. The pipe at the ravine was laid on decomposed granite. There was no masonry whatever. The pipe was covered with a bed of black soil. He saw the place after the accident, about June 22, and he had been there several times since. On plans which witness prepared, he gave evidence as to certain main slips marked above the pipe track. The pipe would have gone had it been built in with brick if a slip had occurred which witness described.

The witness said the only theory he could form was that the water came down in a large quantity from the bare granite above slip No. 1, and that the luxuriant vegetation above slip No. 1 was burnt away by the fire, and its holding power had gone. The landslide got waterlogged, and the water performed the function of grease. At No. 3 slip the fall was practically precipitous, so that the mud and stone which came down formed the mud wall. It came down until it encountered a softer material, formed by the admixture of granite and clay, and then its operations were easily carried out. The clay was wet and slippery, and the boulders and water coming down undermined and scooped out the bed of the stream from slip No. 5 downward. The bed had been deepened at the pipe about 13 feet below the old level of the ground. The same force that brought the mass down to the pipe would have carried it on without the pipe bursting at all.

Cross-examined by Sir Henry Juta: The water which came down after the rain had ceased that morning would come from the absorbent part of the catchment area. He thought the pipe was broken during the night. He considered the landslide broke the pipe. It might happen that the water had washed away the soil at the pipe and left it exposed. Probably if he had seen the pipe exposed he would have had it covered up, but he thought it was covered up. He had not seen it since two years after it was laid. There were undoubtedly heavier rains than last season.

Witness described the arrangements at the reservoirs at the time of construction. His opinion was that the landslide caused the breaking of the pipe.

By De Villiers, C.J.: If he had to lay the pipe now, he would build a large masonry dam, and put the pipe inside it, because subsidiary stuff must come down, and there were boulders in a dangerous position. When he laid the pipe first he did not adopt that precaution, because there was no evidence of boulders coming down.

Johannes Combrinck, who had resided for over thirty years at Camp's Bay, said as Field-cornet he made an investigation on the day of the accident. The mud wall was forty feet long and four feet in height. Boulders, which must have come from the top, came through the house. He went up to the pipe track and saw that the damage came from above. From the 3rd to the 11th June there was a rainfall of 8.62 inches at Camp's Bay. There were fires in the beginning of 1905, and he noticed when there were fires there were generally more slips. Last year there were more fires than any year he remembered.

Cross-examined by Sir Henry Juta: There had been fires at Clifton before, and there had been heavier rains than last year.

When the witness concluded his evidence, the Chief Justice said that the Bench did not require further evidence for the defence until they had heard Sir Henry Juta in argument.

Sir H. Juta: The pipe was in an unsafe condition from the first. It should not have been laid in the bed of a stream and padded with soil. It would only have cost about £80 to cover the pipe in properly. We have had a good deal of theory but no actual evidence to show that the damage was caused by the mud rush. At all events the pipe should not have been allowed to remain exposed, and to become more and more exposed every year. If any protection had been given to the pipe the soil would not have been washed away from under it. It is clear that the pipe had become exposed in 1905, no matter how it was originally laid. It is curious that the accident should have happened just after the road was made. The two ravines under the road have gone, but other ravines remain intact. The road was on a high gradient, and was not constructed on scientific principles; it was the real cause of the concentration of the water which caused the accident. There were no breaks above the road, but only below. Then, the water has been brought from one catchment area into another, although the defendants deny the possibility of this.

They were speaking only of the fall, not of the stream. A small quantity of water concentrated on a mountain side may have very serious effects.

[Counsel proceeded to argue further on the facts of the case.]

Mr. Schreiner was not heard.

De Villiers, C.J.: Everyone must sympathise with the plaintiff in the heavy loss he had sustained by the destruction of his property. If the Court had found evidence to sustain the theory that the Council was responsible for the loss, it would have had no hesitation in awarding full damages against the defendants. His Lordship was by no means satisfied that the road had anything to do with the accident, or that it concentrated water from any part of the catchment area, which would not otherwise have reached the plaintiff's property, and he was not satisfied that any such quantity of water as would affect the pipe below had accumulated. The main landslip was on the right ravine, and if the landslip occurred immediately before the accident above the pipe, then it would be quite sufficient to account for all the damage. He was not satisfied that if the pipe had been constructed upon a more approved principle the accident would not have occurred. The Town Council could hardly be expected to provide against emergencies like this, which could not be anticipated. His Lordship was not satisfied that if the pipe had been protected by masonry it would not have been crushed by the boulders coming down. It was just possible that the breakage of the pipe might have contributed to the accident, but it was more than probable that the accident to the plaintiff's property would have occurred even if the Council had never constructed the pathway or laid the pipe. He quite accepted the theory of Mr. Stewart that the fire on the slopes had a great deal to do with those landslips. This rainfall was enormous, and everything seemed to have been in readiness before June 10 to cause the damage, and to his lordship's mind there was no satisfactory evidence to connect the breakage of the pipe and this damage, and unless the Court was satisfied that there was such connection it was impossible for the Court to give judgment for the plaintiff. It lay upon the plaintiff to prove that it was the act of the defendants which contributed to this result, and even before the defendant's evidence had been led the Court was not satisfied that the Council was responsible, but they thought it advisable to hear, whether or not, defendant's chief witness. Certainly, after hearing the evidence of Mr. Stewart and Mr. Combrinck, the Court was satisfied that the cause of the damage was not that put forward by the plaintiff. Judgment would therefore be for the defendants, with costs, with liberty to the taxing officer to allow a reasonable amount for the preparation of plans for the use of the Court. There would be no order as to the making of the pipe safe, as it had not been made clear there was any danger at present.

Hopley, J., concurred.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

APPEALS.

REX V. THERON. { 1906.
 { Feb. 5th.

Master and servant—Act 18 of 1873, Sec. 15.

This was an appeal by Thomas Theron from the decision of the R.M. of Murraysburg, fining him £3, or the alternative of a month's imprisonment with hard labour, for contravening section 15 of Act 18 of 1873.

Dr. Greer appeared for appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Crown.

Mr. Howel Jones said before the case was gone into he would like to point out to the Court that there was an exhibit in the lower Court which was not at present in court. He believed the Court would like to see that exhibit before finally deciding on the case. The case was one in which the accused was charged with refusing to permit a servant in his employ to remove certain cattle, the property of the servant, from his kraal. The defence set up was that the servant owed the appellant a certain amount of money, and a pocket-book was produced to prove that. Although the pocket-book had been produced in the Magistrate's Court, it could not now be found.

[Buchanan, J.: Does the production of this book affect your case?]

Mr. Howel Jones: No, my lord.

[Buchanan, J.: Does it affect your case, Mr. Greer?]

Dr. Greer also applied in the negative.

[Buchanan, J.: The case can be heard, and if necessary judgment can be reserved pending the production of the book.]

Dr. Greer explained that in this matter the appellant was charged with having contravened section 15 of Act 18 of 1873, in that he refused a boy named Mdingi, in his employ, permission to remove 17 goats and 19 kids, his property, from his farm, and was fined £3, or the alternative of one month's imprisonment with hard labour. The appeal was on the grounds that the conviction was against the weight of evidence, and also that he was charged under the wrong section, in that he had lawful grounds for refusing the delivery of the goats.

The evidence of Mdingi, the servant in question, as given before the Magistrate, was to the effect that he was ill, and went to see a Dr. Heindrick, who ordered him back to Kafirland. He did not pay his doctor's fee in full. Mdingi went to Theron and asked him for his goats, which he had received as wages for services rendered. Theron said Mdingi owed him £6 2s., and on being asked how it was due, Theron replied that he had paid the doctor's account, which amounted to £6 2s. The doctor, on being asked, said Theron had only paid him 13s. Mdingi told Theron he wanted the goats, and Theron told him to bring the money he owed, and he would get the goats, but he could not do that.

Appellant's evidence before the Magistrate was to the effect that he engaged Mdingi at a monthly wage of 10s., or a goat. He elected to take the latter. On various occasions he made him advances amounting altogether to £9 7s. When Mdingi told him he had been ordered back to Kafirland, he asked for his goats, and appellant told him that when he paid him the amount due he would refund him his goats.

Confirmatory evidence was given by other persons, who saw Theron paying moneys over to Mdingi.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts, Buchanan J. said the accused was charged under section 15 of Act 18 of 1873. This Act was known as the Masters and Servants Act, and the section under which this case was brought made it a crime for a master to retain stock which belonged to a servant. The section also provided that when the criminal charge was tried, if it was proved to the Magistrate that the accused had acted without reasonable cause, the Magistrate could give a civil judgment for the delivery of the stock with costs. The servant in the present case had 32 goats running with his master's. He had been ill, and on leaving his master's service had demanded delivery. The master refused to give delivery, saying he had paid £6 2s. to a doctor in Murrayburg for attendance on the plaintiff, and would not hand over the stock until that amount was paid. The servant made a complaint at the Magistrate's office, and was sent to an agent. That gentleman, on inquiry, found that, instead of paying £6 2s. to the doctor, the defendant had only paid him 13s. The doctor gave evidence to that effect. The Magistrate, with this evidence before him, held that the master had no reasonable cause for retaining the goats. The Magistrate stated he thoroughly believed the plaintiff, and the demeanour of the defendant was not at all satisfactory. The master's story was that he had advanced £9 7s., £6 2s. of which he alleged he paid to the doctor, and £3 5s. money advanced, and that he kept the goats for Mdingi until he had paid that amount off. The case was adjourned to enable the master to prove this, and he then produced a note-book, in which he stated he kept the plaintiff's account separate from the advances to his other servants, but which book contained no entries against the complainant. He obtained an adjournment to produce another book, which showed advances only to the plaintiff and nothing to other servants. The agent, when he demanded delivery of the goats, had tendered payment of the 13s. and of the £3 5s., but the accused still retained the property. Under the circumstances, it was not for that Court, sitting as a Court of Appeal, to upset the Magistrate's judgment, and the appeal would be dismissed.

REYNOLDS V. ESTATE TANNOCK.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate at Prieska, giving absolute from the instance in an action in which the appellant was plaintiff and the respondent was defendant, and which was brought before the Court in respect of certain furniture, which was lent by plaintiff to defendant for his use, and which was valued at £6 15s., and which was sold by the trustees in the insolvent estate of E. H. Tannock.

From the evidence given by the plaintiff before the Magistrate, it appeared that he lent the furniture to Tannock. The respondent had an account with applicant's firm, but the articles of furniture referred to in the action were not mentioned. The evidence of the insolvent, who was called for the plaintiff in the lower Court, was to the effect that he got a loan of the furniture on the condition that he could buy it if he wished. He received an account from appellant's firm for £60, and asked appellant if the furniture in dispute was mentioned in it, and he replied in the affirmative.

Mr. Close appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Burton for the respondent.

Without hearing Mr. Burton,

Buchanan, J., said the defendant, as trustee in an insolvent estate, was sued by plaintiff to recover the price of certain furniture alleged to have been lent to the insolvent. If it was clearly established that that furniture was only lent, there would be no doubt of the plaintiff being able to recover from the trustee, as the trustee would have no legal right to sell it; but when the Court came to the evidence of the insolvent, who gave evidence for the appellant, it would be seen that he stated that when he got his account he asked if the furniture was included in it, and the appellant replied "Yes," and this statement was not denied by the plaintiff. Whether the furniture had been paid for or not would have to be adjusted in the insolvent estate. The Court held that the Magistrate was thoroughly justified in giving a verdict of absolution from the instance, and the decision would be upheld.

REX V. GOOLAM.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate at Woodstock, sentencing the appellant to three months' imprisonment, with hard labour, for indecently assauling a little girl.

A preparatory examination in this case had first been taken, and the accused was committed for trial. The case was remitted to the Magistrate, who sentenced the accused to three months' imprisonment with hard labour.

The appeal was based on the grounds that the conviction was against the weight of evidence, and the evidence adduced did not support the charge.

From the evidence adduced for the plaintiff in the lower Court, it appeared that the child, who was seven years of age, went into the accused's shop for sweets, and that he then committed the assault.

For the defence the crime was denied, and evidence in confirmation was given by a boy in the shop.

The Magistrate, in his reasons, said the girl gave her evidence in a very clear manner, and from what the witness for the accused said he did not believe he was present at the time of the assault.

Dr. Greer (for the appellant) having been heard on the facts, without calling upon Mr. H. Jones, who appeared for the Crown, Buchanan, J.: The accused was charged with committing an indecent assault on a little girl, aged seven years, and according to her story, there were only accused and herself in the shop at the time. Learned counsel for the appellant urged that the girl's statement should have corroboration. The circumstances were such that there could not be any corroboration, but there were surrounding circumstances by which the child was corroborated. There was the fact that the child ran away from the shop, and went home frightened. That evidence was given by the mother, who, in her evidence, did not unduly support the charge made by the girl against the prisoner. The girl said the accused, when she went into the shop, put his arm around her waist, calling her "dear," and touched her. When the girl went with the police constable to the accused's shop, the accused said he had put his arm around her, and called her "dear," and turned her out of the shop, as she was trying to get at the sweets. The accused called a boy, named Mahomed, but the Magistrate, in his decision, said he did not believe the boy was present. The Court concurred with the Magistrate's view, because if they looked at the evidence given by him it would be seen that he stated that all the accused said was "You must rot," which contradicted the evidence of the prisoner, the child, and her mother. The Court quite agreed with learned counsel for the appellant that in cases of that kind the Judge, the jury, and magistrates should act very cautiously. The Court did not see grounds for that Court, sitting as a Court of Appeal, interfering with the finding of the Magistrate, and the appeal would be dismissed.

REX V. RICHARDS.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate at Vryburg, fining the appellant £50 and one year's imprisonment, with hard labour, for committing the crime of incest.

From the evidence adduced in the lower Court for the prosecution, it was alleged that the accused committed himself with his illegitimate daughter.

The relationship was denied by the accused, who stated that the girl, who was known as Annie Richards, had been adopted by him when very young, and was not the daughter of the accused. The girl denied that accused had in any way miscondacted himself with her, and although having an illegitimate child, denied that accused was the father of it.

A considerable amount of evidence of a very contradictory nature, which was given in the lower Courts, was read by counsel.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones for the Crown.

Buchanan, J.: It would have been much more satisfactory if the Crown had exercised its discretion by sending this case to trial before a jury. It was especially the class of case that should go before a jury, but instead it was sent to the Magistrate's Court, and decided by the Assistant Magistrate. There were two matters that were necessary to be proved to substantiate the charge. It was necessary to prove the parentage of the girl and also the intercourse. On the first point, the Court had some hesitation in saying that from the records the parentage of the girl had been established, but the Magistrate went very deeply into the evidence, and he (the judge) thought there was evidence to justify the finding as to the parentage of the girl. Now the Magistrate, acting as a jury, had found that the parentage had been established on the evidence given, especially by the girl's mother. Her evidence was to the effect that when she was unmarried the prisoner had intercourse with her. The prisoner admitted this, but said it was eleven months before the birth of the child, but the woman said that no other person had had anything to do with her between that time and the birth of the child. Immediately after the birth of the child it was taken away by the accused, and the mother shortly afterwards married a man named MacPherson, or McQueen. The child was christened on the same day in the mother's maiden name. McQueen said he knew when he was engaged to Annie's mother that she was enceinte, and that he only waited for the birth of the child to marry her. It seemed hard to think that if McQueen was the father of the child and he was willing to marry the mother, that he would have let the child be taken away. Then there was the further evidence of the accused treating the child as his own child, and it calling him father. Then, again there was his conduct when the child became enceinte, of his taking her away to her sister in another colony, and the statements he made when doing so, and the fact of the permit for them to travel being made out in the name of Miss Richards. Under all those circumstances, the Court did not think it would be justified in assuming that the Magistrate was wrong in arriving at the decision he had. The conviction would have to stand, and the appeal be dismissed.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and a Jury.]

GODFREY V. FRANK. { 1906.
Feb. 6th.

Motor car — Negligence — Damages.

This was an action brought by Benjamin John Godfrey, proprietor of the Model Printing Works, against Arnold Frank, a veterinary surgeon, claiming £1,500 as damages for injuries sustained by being knocked down by a motor-car.

Mr. Burton, in opening the case for the plaintiff, said it was one for damages for injuries caused to plaintiff by a motor-car belonging to the defendant. From the declaration it appeared that on the evening of April 7 last year, plaintiff was paying a visit to his brother at Maitland, and while crossing the road at about 7.30 on his return, he was knocked down and run over by a motor-car, the property of the defendant, and which was being driven by a chauffeur. The accident was caused by the carelessness and negligence of the chauffeur, and his failure to regulate the speed, which was excessive. Plaintiff sustained severe injuries to his leg, etc., and had been prevented for some time from attending to his business. The defendant's plea set forth that plaintiff was deaf and dumb, and that it was in consequence of this infirmity that the accident occurred, and not through any negligence on the part of the chauffeur. Due care had been exercised, the hooter was constantly sounded, and two powerful lamps were burning as a warning to anyone using the road. There was no tender, and defendant denied all liability. In his replication, plaintiff admitted that he was deaf and dumb, and that the hooter had sounded once. The accident, however, was not caused through his infirmity, but through the carelessness of the chauffeur.

Mr. Burton, with him Mr. P. Jones, appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. McGregor, with him Dr. Greer, for defendant.

Evidence was given by Mr. Hudson Scott, of Maitland, who witnessed the accident. He also put in a plan of the locality taken by himself from actual measurement. The car was pulled up very quickly after it struck the plaintiff. The car pulled up about the centre of Essex-street. The occupants looked round, and again drove off. Witness ran after them, but did not catch up with them. Dr. Pears then attended Godfrey, and the defendant returned and looked at him. Witness asked him to take Godfrey to the hospital, but he refused. The hooter was blown just before the fourth milestone. Witness only heard the hooter sounded once. The car must have been travelling about 12 miles an hour. There was no slackening of speed before Godfrey was struck. Witness felt when he saw the man stepping off the footpath that there was going to be an accident.

In cross-examination, witness said he had been a builder, but was now a broker. He did not own a motor-car, but he could form a very fair idea of the speed a conveyance would attain.

At the time the accident occurred it was fairly light, but not as light as daylight?—The sun was not shining.

I put it to you that however fairly one may try to judge it would be very difficult to place the distance on this occasion. There might easily be a margin of error?—I have travelled the road for the last three years, and know every inch of it, and I will say I am not a foot out in my measurements.

In further cross-examination, witness said that when he heard the hooter, he looked round and saw the car about 30 yards away.

I believe you say the sound of the hooter was not very melodious?—No.

In fact it had a jarring sound, and I put it to you that you might have heard a second hoot without observing it?—No. I only heard it once.

Why are you so very emphatic on the position of the car when the hooter was sounded. Many cars pass through your village?—If you had a car pass you like that one passed me you would remember the position.

But what makes you so clear on the position?

In further cross-examination, the witness said the car was travelling on the left-hand side of the road when it passed him. The car swerved when it passed the three women, and went to the wrong (right) side of the road. The car might have had lights.

You know it had?—No, I do not. I saw it had lights after the accident, but I did not notice them before.

I put it to you, that two bright lights like one sees in a motor-car will involuntarily interest the eye?—I cannot say if it had lights.

Had the driver the car under proper control?—I cannot say, but after he struck Godfrey, he pulled up very quickly.

Witness (continuing) said he saw Godfrey step off the pavement, but did not see him again before he was struck. He had only just stepped off the pavement when the car struck him.

You told us you did not see him on the road before he was struck?—As a matter of fact, I saw him in the air. According to your plan, how far from the path was the car when it struck Godfrey?—About 6 feet.

Well, it would take more than two steps to take Godfrey from the path to the road?—I don't think so.

How far from the accident did the car stop?—About 33 feet.

It stopped twice, and the first time Franks got out, did he not?—No. I had called Mussett out and got the doctor before Franks turned up.

You have said something about the defendant refusing to remove Godfrey; as a matter of fact, didn't he send a cab for him?—I have since heard that he sent a cab about nine o'clock.

Didn't he tell Godfrey's brother that he could not take him in the motor-car?—That I cannot say.

Leslie Scott, son of the last witness, and who was accompanying his father along the main road on the night in question, gave corroborative evidence. He saw Godfrey step off the footpath, and the next thing he saw was Godfrey up in the air. The car was travelling very fast. He had heard what his father said about calling on Franks, and corroborated him.

In cross-examination, witness said the hooter was blown when the car was near the fourth milestone.

Mr. McGregor: I suppose the milestone has now become an historical matter in the village?

Witness: As far as I know, it is a well-known spot.

Witness (further cross-examined) said the car got up speed after being called on to stop.

Mr. McGregor: How do you know that?

Witness: It started slowly, and gradually went faster.

Mr. McGregor: But motor-cars, when starting, generally start slowly, and get up speed.

Arthur Mussett, broker and estate agent, of Maitland, stated he was sitting in his office, which fronts the main road, when he heard a hooter sounded. Immediately after Scott shouted "Mussett," and he also heard him saying, "You can go on; I know you."

Witness immediately went for the doctor, and ran up to the car, which had stopped, and he met the occupant getting out. He knew the defendant, and said, "Hello, Dr. Franks, it's you!" Defendant was surprised at being identified.

Mr. Burton: Who is Dr. Franks?—He was then Veterinary Inspector for the German Government.

He is well known?—Oh, yes.

Witness (continuing) added that he asked Dr. Franks to take Godfrey to hospital in his motor-car, but he refused, and after some time promised to send a cab from Salt River, which arrived about nine o'clock. The road is very quiet at night-time, and the hooter was plainly heard.

In cross-examination, witness said Dr. Franks's hooter had a distinctive noise, which was easily distinguishable from others.

In reply to the jury, the witness said it was quite light when the accident occurred.

In cross-examination, witness said the speed at which motor-cars travelled affected his nerves.

Charles William Fisher, detective in the Maitland Police, recollected the accident being reported to him. There was a prosecution before the Magistrate, and at witness's request, Scott drew a plan of the place. The marks on the ground were quite clear when witness saw it.

Mr. Burton called the plaintiff, and, addressing the jury, said every effort had been made on both sides to get an interpreter for him, as he was both deaf and dumb, but the efforts had been unsuccessful. The only way they could solve the difficulty was to get his brother to interpret. The defence agreed to this course.

Buchanan, J., said that was the course adopted in the Magistrate's Court.

The plaintiff, Benjamin John Godfrey, was then sworn, and in reply to Mr. Burton, through his brother, said he was born deaf and dumb. He was proprietor of the Model Printing Works, and was a married man with four children. He always went about unattended, and had cycled many thousands of miles without an accident. How do you manage to avoid accidents?—I keep my eyes open.

The witness then detailed the visit to his brother, and stated that he left there to catch the 7.35 p.m. train to Cape Town. Before crossing the road, he looked up and down to ascertain if any traffic was approaching. Not seeing anything approaching, he essayed to cross the road, but just as he did so he saw a motor-car almost on top of him, and endeavoured to get back to the path, but the car caught him in the side, and he was knocked down. If the car had gone straight along the road, he might have been able to save himself, but the car crossed the road in his direction. When witness was knocked down, he felt a sharp pain in his leg, and, after twisting his leg round, he became unconscious. The next thing he remembered was being taken to his brother's house. He was taken home to Salt River that night, where he was attended by the doctor for two months. Witness had to use crutches up to November last. He had had to give up cycling, as the leg was weak. As witness had been suffering acute pain recently, he went and consulted Dr. Fallon. Witness had had to pay Dr. Pearce £40 for medical attendance, about £5 for medicines, drugs, etc., and a nurse £4. Witness was away from his business for two months, during which time he got a man to look after it at a cost of £18. Witness, when he returned to business, was unable to attend to it properly. He could not use his bicycle to get about to get orders. He had not been able to use the treadle machines in the course of his work. He submitted an extract from his books showing how his business had fallen off. From May, 1903, to May, 1904, there was a credit balance of £294. From May, 1904, to March, 1905, there was a credit balance of £326, or an average of £29 per month, whereas from March, 1905, to the end of the year his average takings were £9 10s. The month before the accident he took over £120, and during the months he was away the takings only amounted to an average of £23 a month. He had also started a small dairy business before the accident, but had had to give it up. Prior to the accident he had been in very good health.

In cross-examination, the plaintiff said he had not tried to ride his bicycle since the accident, and Dr. Pearce told him he would not be able to do so for another two years.

When you showed the jury a few minutes ago how the accident occurred, you moved about very well?—I took care to keep on one leg.

Haven't you been walking without your stick recently?—Only for a short distance in the office.

This accident will not interfere with your general health, will it?—It does now.

But it is all going to pass away?—Let us hope so.

In further cross-examination, the witness said that at the time of the accident it was twilight. The motor had strong lights. In the dark those lights could be seen a mile away. In the twilight they could be seen about a hundred yards away.

Dr. Pearce said that when called to Godfrey he found him lying in the road near the footpath. On examination he found that Godfrey's right leg was broken, and a black bruise about two inches in width, running from the outside of the right calf down to the inside of the right ankle. After five weeks' confinement to bed, the plaintiff was allowed to get up and ambulate by means of crutches. It was about three months after the accident ere the plaintiff could use his right foot. On September 29 a "skyograph" was taken of the leg.

Mr. Burton: That's the "X" ray.

Witness: Yes, "skyograph" is synonymous with photograph.

Continuing, witness said that the skyograph revealed a fracture of a small bone in the ankle joint, and that would affect him for one or two years.

[Buchanan, J.: He must have suffered a considerable amount of pain?]

Witness: Yes.

Mr. McGregor: The fractures have mended well, and that leg is now as sound as the other, eh?

[Buchanan, J.: I suppose you mean to say that the leg is stronger now than it was before.]

Mr. McGregor: No, my lord.

[Buchanan, J.: But it might be like that. It is very unusual to get a fracture in the same place again.]

Resuming, the doctor said that there would be always a certain amount of neuralgic pain experienced by the plaintiff, for mutes were usually of a neurotic temperament. The damage had been caused by impact.

Further medical evidence was given by Drs. Richards and Fallon.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

For the defence, Dr. Simpson Wells, F.R.G.S., said that he had examined the plaintiff at the wish of the defendant. He found a thickening of the fibula, about three or four inches above the ankle on the outer side, indicating the site of a fracture, which had healed, and there was also a slight thickening of the shin bone, indicating that a small chip of bone had been broken off, which was common in such accidents. The unions were perfect, but he thought that the plaintiff should be precluded from cycling for a considerable time to come. In such circumstances the plaintiff might be able to cycle again, but he would have to be careful.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The plaintiff might suffer from neuralgic pains in the fracture.

Nicholas William Rory, the chaffeur, said that at one time of his career he had driven a Harbour Board traction engine, and had worked for a cycle company, and several private individuals as a chaffeur. On entering the village he slowed down to from 8 to 9 miles per hour and sounded his hooter frequently. He avoided two men and three women, and presently he saw a man tacking across the road. Witness altered his course, sounded his hooter, and tried to clear the man, but the latter swerved round, threw up his arms, and fell under the car. Witness applied his brakes, and drew up within two and a half lengths in the centre of the road. Mr. Franks shouted, "Hi, man! What want you there?" and soon after dismounted.

Witness then formed ahead a little, in order to enable a cart, showing no lights, that he had passed, to have plenty of room. If Godfrey had continued on his course, the accident would not have occurred.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He slowed down again in the village, after passing the women, to about 8 or 9 miles an hour.

Yet, you entered at that rate?—I slowed down again.

Why?—Because it was dark there, through the trees overhanging the road.

Trees, eh! That's strange. I cannot see any trees shown on the plan.—There were trees, sir.

The attorney for the plaintiff informed Mr. Burton that there were no trees in the vicinity.

Continuing, the witness admitted having been convicted for negligent driving in connection with the case. The plaintiff rolled for some time after being struck.

Counsel having addressed the jury, his lordship summed up, and the jury, after a short consultation, brought in a verdict for plaintiff for £550 damages.

Mr. Burton moved for judgment, with costs.

[Buchanan, J.: Any objection, Mr. McGregor?]

Mr. McGregor: No, my lord.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ESTATE GOUWS V. ESTATE (1906.
MARAIS AND OTHERS. { Feb. 7th.

Will, joint — Fidei-commissum residui—Interpretation.

P. G. and his wife G. G. executed a mutual will, whereby they bequeathed to one H. G., married in community to one W. F. M. the sum of £400 and to the child of H. G. £350. H. G. had more than one child when the will was made, and the name of the child was left blank. The survivor was appointed sole heir, with the proviso that he or she should have power on the death of the first dying to sell the estate by public auction. It was directed that on the death of the survivor the entire estate should be sold by public auction and that the proceeds should be divided into two equal portions, whereof the one should go to the brothers and sisters of the testator and the other to the brothers and sisters of the testatrix, with right of succession to their descendants. On the death of P. G., G. G. adiated and sold a bond with secured value of £750 to one H. M. for £100. The plaintiff now sued for (a) a refund of the said £750 (less £100), or (b) of half that amount (less £50), being a portion of P. G.'s estate.

Held, that as the terms of the will did not contemplate any diminution of the joint estate during the life time of the survivor, it was not the intention of the testators to constitute a fidei-commissum residui, and that judgment must be given in terms of prayer (b).

Held further, that the bequest to the child of H. M. was null and void on the ground of uncertainty, and that parol evidence of the testators' intentions was not admissible.

This was an action in which Daniel Mills Dyason, in his capacity as the executor dative of the estate of the late Pieter Johannes Gouws, of Fraserburg, sought an order against Hebbegge Johanna Christina Marais (born Jooste), in her individual capacity and as executrix of the estate of the late Willem Francois Marais and as mother and natural guardian of her minor child, Pieter Johannes Gouws Marais, and Antonie Johannes Botes and Christian Frederick Klem, as executors testamentary of the late Gertruida Rachel Anna Gouws (born Maritz), to have certain rights declared.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows: (1) The plaintiff is Daniel Mills Dyason, of Fraserburg, who sues in his capacity as executor dative in the estate of the late Pieter Johannes Gouws. (2) The defendants are (1) Hebbegge Johanna Christina Marais (born Jooste) in her individual capacity and as executrix in the estate of the late Willem Francois Marais, and as mother and natural guardian of her minor child, Pieter Johannes Gouws Marais; (2) Antonie Johannes Botes and Christian Frederick Klein in their capacity as executors testamentary in the estate of the late Gertruida Rachel Anna Gouws (born Maritz), all of the district of Fraserburg. (3) Pieter Johannes Gouws and Gertruida Rachel Anna Gouws hereinafter called respectively the testator and testatrix, being married in community of property executed a mutual will on October 22, 1893. (4) By the terms of the will the testators bequeathed to the first defendant, married to the said Willem Francois Marais the sum of £400, and to the child named — the sum of £350, and to the youngest daughter of the late P. B. Rossouw named Marie Louise the sum of £300; the said bequests being subject to the conditions that they should be paid out after the death of the survivor. (5) After making the bequests the testators appointed each other reciprocally heirs of everything, and further provided as follows: That the survivor shall further have the right in case he or she shall so elect to sell everything or to have same sold by public auction—when the survivor dies a public sale of the entire estate movable and immovable shall be held the proceeds of which after deduction of the costs and bequests shall be divided into two equal parts, of which one part shall be divided in equal shares amongst the brothers and sisters of the testator, and the other half amongst the brothers and sisters of the testatrix, and in case of the predecease of such brothers and sisters to their lawful descendants. (6) The testator died on May 10, 1900, without having revoked the said will and there were no children of the marriage. (7) The testatrix thereafter took out letters of administration as executrix testamentary of the testator's estate, and an inventory of the joint estate was framed showing it to be worth £6,621 9s. 9d., including a certain farm called Matjes Vallei, and thereafter, on June 6, 1901, a first liquidation account was filed with the Master, showing a balance of £6,219 18s. 5d. for distribution, but no further liquidation account was filed or any distribution made. (8) Thereafter, on October 24, 1902, the testatrix passed transfer of the immovable property, including the farm, from the name of the testator into her own name as sole heir, subject to the conditions of the joint will; copies of which are also hereunto annexed; and she adiated and accepted the benefits conferred by the said will and remained in full enjoyment and possession of the whole of the joint estate, save with regard to the bond hereinafter referred to, up to her death. (9) Prior to, and at the date of testator's death, one Willem Francois Marais was indebted to him in the sum of £750 upon a mortgage bond dated November 3, 1891: the interest on the bond was paid up to October, 1902. Marais died subsequently to testator; the property specially mortgaged under the bond was at the time of passing the bond and still is of the full value of £750 and upwards. (10) After Marais's death, on January 12, 1903, the testatrix purported to sell the bond to the first defendant for the sum of £100, and endorsed upon the bond "settled, January 12, 1903 (sd.) G. R. A. Gouws": the sum of £100 was paid by the defendant to the testatrix, but the bond has not been cancelled, and still remains registered against the W. F. Marais: the first defendant was fully aware of the provisions of the mutual will. (11) On November 24, 1902, the testatrix made a further will confirming the mutual will, and stating that the heirs therein named should be considered as heirs under this last will. On the same date the testatrix made a declaration attached to the will of November, 1902, wherein she stated that the child of the first defendant to whom the £350 was bequeathed, should have been and was intended to be Pieter Johannes Gouws Marais (who is a son of the first defendant); the defendant has had several children who are still living. (12) Thereafter, on November 16, 1903, the testatrix made a further will appointing one G. Visser as her executor, and confirming the mutual will and thereafter, on May 4, she made a codicil appointing the second defendants as executors: copies whereof are annexed. (13) The testatrix died on October 24, 1904, without having re-married, and leaving no issue. (14) Thereafter the second defendants took out letters of administration as executors testamentary of the testator's estate; and in or about January 10, 1905, the plaintiff was appointed executor dative of the testator's estate.

The plaintiff claimed: (a) That the joint estate of testator and testatrix was massed or consolidated by the mutual will, and that the testatrix, having adiated and accepted benefits thereunder could not in law dispose of the mortgage bond for the sum of £100 to the first defendant, to the prejudice of the heirs of the testator, to wit, his brothers and sisters, who were entitled to half of the joint estate after the payment of the legacies. (b) That the first defendant, in her capacity as executrix of the estate of the said W. F. Marais, be ordered to pay into the joint estate the sum of £750 (less £100 paid on account), with interest from October 7, 1902, at 5 per cent. Or in the alternative to (a) and (b) should the Court be of opinion that the mutual will did not mass or consolidate the joint estate, an order that the first defendant pay the one-half of the bond (less half the sum paid on account) to the plaintiff. Or, in the alternative, as against the second defendant, that they bring up and account for to the testator's estate the full half-value of the said bond, to wit, the sum of £375 (less £50). (c) That the farm Matjes Vallei and the other landed property registered in the name of the testatrix as aforesaid be declared to form part of the joint estate, and to be distributed in terms of the mutual will. (d) That the bequest of £350 be declared void and of no effect, for uncertainty; or not binding in any manner against the testator's estate.

The defendants' plea was as follows: (1) The defendants admit paragraphs 1 and 2 of the plaintiff's declaration, save that the name of the second executor in the estate of the late Gertruida Rachel Anna Gouws is Christian Frederick Klem, and not Klein, as stated. (2) They also admit paragraphs 3, 4, and 5, save that they crave leave to refer this Honourable Court to the terms of the will itself for greater certainty. The word "the" at the end of the second line of paragraph 4 should be "her," and "P. B. Rossouw" should be "P. D. Rossouw." (3) The defendants admit paragraphs 6 and 7. (4) They admit paragraph 8, and say that the testatrix enjoyed possession of the said estate as the sole heir thereof, under the said mutual will and subject to the conditions thereof. (5) They admit paragraphs 9 and 10, save that they say the said bond was actually sold to the first defendant for the sum stated, and that the first defendant bought and paid for the same bona fide, for the above consideration, and without knowledge of the provisions of the mutual will, except in so far as she was aware that she and her minor son, Pieter Johannes Gouws Marais, were to be legatees thereunder. The fact that the bond has not been cancelled in the Debts Registry is due to the parties concerned not having been aware that such cancellation was necessary. 6. The defendants admit paragraphs 11, 12, 13, and 14, and say that the declaration referred to in paragraph 11 correctly sets forth the intention of the testators in respect of the child of the first defendant, to whom the bequest was made, and that there is no uncertainty as to the identity of the legatee. The said P. J. G. Marais was the grandson of the testators, and lived in their house for several years. (7) The defendants contend that there was no massing of the joint estate, but that, even if there was, the true construction of the mutual will is that the survivor was appointed sole heir, with the right to deal with and dispose of all the property of the joint estate during her lifetime at her pleasure, and that only such balance of such joint estate as should be left at her death was to be divided in equal shares between the brothers and sisters of the testators respectively. (8) They contend, therefore, that the testatrix had the right to dispose of the bond as she did, provided only that the legatees mentioned in the mutual will were not prejudiced thereby, and they say that the plaintiff is not entitled in any case to recover any sum in respect of the said bond from the first defendant. But if this Honourable Court should find that the testatrix exceeded her powers by disposing of the said bond as aforesaid, and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover one-half of the said bond (less half the sum paid), then the second defendants are willing to acquiesce in the second alternative to claims (a) and (b) of the declaration. (9) As to claim (c) thereof, the landed property in the joint estate has been sold, with the acquiescence of the heirs and part of the purchase price thereof has been paid, and is deposited to the credit of the estate in the bank, while the remainder falls to be paid at divers dates in the near future. The second defendants are willing that the said proceeds should be distributed according to the terms of the mutual will. Subject to the above, the defendants pray that the plaintiff's claims may be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Py-mont), for plaintiff; Mr. Van Zyl for defendants.

Daniel Mills Dyason, attorney, practising at Fraserburg, and plaintiff in the action, stated he was executor dative in the Gouws' estate. In the inventory of property filed by Mrs. Gouws shortly after the death of her husband, he found a bond by W. F. Marais in favour of Mr. Gouws for £750. He made inquiries, and found that the bond was in the possession of the widow Marais. He made application to her for it, and she referred him to her attorneys. He communicated with them, and they replied that he could inspect the bond at their office. Witness replied stating that as he might have to institute an action in the matter, he warned them not to cancel the bond. Witness subsequently inspected the bond. The interest on the bond was paid up to October, 1902.

To the Court: The bond was released on the payment by the widow Marais of £100.

Witness, continuing, said it was agreed to bring the different questions in dispute before the Supreme Court for settlement. William F. Marais died in May, 1902, leaving eight children, all minors. The late Peter Gouws and his wife went to reside in the village of Fraserburg early in 1900.

The assets of the joint estate after the death of the survivor had been sold by public auction. Witness was satisfied with the sales. As regards the bond, it was sold privately, and witness understood that the amount realised was used privately by the testatrix.

Cross-examined by Mr. van Zyl: The testatrix used other moneys out of the estate. Witness did not know of her selling any other property privately.

In re-examination, the witness said the testatrix was of unsound mind shortly prior to her decease.

In reply to the Court, the witness said the estate at the time of the death of the testatrix was considerably reduced from what it was when the inventory was made.

Replying to Mr. Searle, witness said that the inventory showed a valuation of over £6,000, and now there was not more than £4,000. All the immovable property mentioned in the inventory was still to be found, but certain things—such as horses and carts, goats, etc.—were missing.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

A clerk from the Deeds Office submitted certain deeds of transfer in the estate.

R. du Bois Steyn produced the mutual will made by the testator and testatrix.

J. J. Botes, attorney, of Fraserburg, said that after the death of Mr. Gouws he transacted all the business for the widow, who was residing in Fraserburg. Witness drafted the will for her, and drew her attention to the blank left for the child's name. She asked witness to fill in a name, but witness replied that he could not do that.

Maasdorp, J., intimated a wish to hear counsel in argument as to whether the blank in the will could be filled in.

Mr. Searle: The will is vague. There is no Roman Dutch law on the subject, but the English law is perfectly clear. Theobald on Wills (5th edit., p. 241); Wynn v. Littleton (1 Vernon Ch., p. 241); Bayliss v. Attorney-General (2 Atkinson, 239); Re Bacon's Will (31 Ch. D., 460); Hurt v. Hort (3 Brown, 311). The Court will not admit parol evidence to supply blanks in a will, save where it is a mere question of a christian name. Taylor v. Richardson (2 Drury, 16). Stephen on Evidence (Art. 91 (7)); Jarman on Wills (5th edit., 340 and 412). The only case bearing on the point in our Courts is In re Herold (1 Juta, 159). There there was a latent ambiguity, and extrinsic evidence tendered on behalf of the claimant was not admitted. See also Re Bacon's Will (31 Ch. D., 460) and the Encyclopedia of the Laws of England (p. 237), on patent and latent ambiguity, and when parol evidence is admissible to explain each. Gord v. Needs (2 M. and W., 129); Hiscocks v. Hiscocks (5 M. and W., 386). 4 Burge, p. 539.

Mr. Van Zyl: The cases cited on the other side are not in point. Here there is no question of a blank, for some child of Mrs. Marais is clearly indicated. In most of the cases cited there was no indication as to how the blank was to be filled in, but here we have an indication.

[Maasdorp, J.: You admit that when the testator died there were more children than one?]

Yes, but we say that the evidence would show that there was one specially favoured child. This was not Mrs. Marais' will, but a mutual will, and her statement is therefore admissible to show the intentions of the joint testators.

[Maasdorp, J.: You want to bring the unsworn testimony of one person to prove the intention of another person.]

It may be that the will is void for ambiguity, but I submit that we can call evidence to prove the intention of the testators. In the case of In re Herold parol evidence was admitted, but the will was thrown out because that evidence did not clearly show the intention of the testator. We only ask to be allowed to put our facts before the Court. See the judgment of Dwyer, J. in Herold's case.

Mr. Searle was not heard in reply.

Maasdorp, J., said the question had been raised whether a blank could be allowed to be filled up on evidence of the intention of the testator. It must be pointed out that if the proposed evidence were admitted, the Court would go much further than the cases which had been cited would warrant. It was proposed to prove what statement was made by the wife—that meant a double difficulty, the proving of what somebody else had said in reference to the intention of the testator. They had no declaration of the testator himself. If it was taken that the statement of the wife could prove the intention, then the cases were very clear. In cases where the intention was doubtful, the Court would admit evidence. Here, however, there was a latent ambiguity through the description being applicable to more than one legatee. The testator might have been in doubt, and although he at one time had an intention, he had no intention of filling in until he had given the matter further consideration. The Court would not rectify the will upon evidence of declaration of the circumstances, but in so far as that particular bequest was concerned, the provision would be regarded as void for uncertainty. He now held that the evidence which was tendered was not admissible.

Mr. Botes (recalled) stated that Mrs. Gouws had dealt with the estate as though she had full powers—she had lent money on bills and on bonds. On the death of Mrs. Gouws the property was sold by public auction, as authorised by the will.

Christian Frederick Klein, executor with the previous witness under the will of Mrs. Gouws, gave similar evidence as to Mrs. Gouws having lived on the capital of the estate, thus reducing its value. It was at the instance of this witness that Mrs. Gouws was declared of unsound mind. Witness did not know that the bond on the Marais estate had been settled for a hundred pounds—that did not transpire till the death of Mrs. Gouws.

Mrs. Marais, who was an adopted daughter of Mrs. Gouws, also gave evidence. She had paid the interest on the £750 bond up to 1902, but her mother was so sorry for her, she having been ruined by the military, that she sold witness the bond for £100.

Under cross-examination, witness said she was always in the house with Mrs. Gouws, and was under the impression that she was to receive half the estate on the death of her mother, Mrs. Gouws.

Frederick Stainbridge, sheep inspector in the district of Beaufort West, who witnessed the release of the bond for £750, stated that the £100 was counted out in his presence in settlement.

Mr. Van Zyl closed his case.

Mr. Searle: In opening the case I said that there were only two points to consider; but now, since the legacy cannot stand, there is only one: whether the testatrix could deal with the whole estate or whether she was a mere usufructuary. In the first place, the survivor was empowered to sell everything in the estate, but only by public auction. On the death of the survivor the whole of the property was to be sold by public auction. Clearly, then, this was not a case of a fidei commissum residui.

Of course only what was saleable had to be sold. One does not sell cash by public auction.

The fact that she is ordered to sell by public auction goes to show that she could not sell for her own benefit. Had she been empowered to do this, it could not have mattered to anybody else how she sold. Then on the death of the survivor the entire estate is to be sold by public auction; therefore she must have been bound to keep the corpus of the entire estate together and so was only a usufructuary. True, she was appointed sole heir but so was the survivor in Strydom v. Strydom's Trustees (11 S.C.R., 423), and yet the survivor was declared to be only a usufructuary. So in Klopper v. Smit (9 Juta, 167) the heir was held to be a usufructuary. In Brown v. Rickardt (2 Juta, 314) the heir was allowed to alienate the whole estate, inter vivos, and only what was left at the death of the survivor was to go to the further heirs. The cases of Strydom and of Klopper apply in this case rather than that of Brown, which is the leading case on fidei commissum.

residui. In 1903 the survivor makes over a bond for £750 for £100, thus practically making a present of £650 out of the estate. This bond, however, was never cancelled by her as executrix. The position of the defendants in that she had a right to do as she liked with the bond, and might have done what she liked with the land, and have given that to Mr. Marais. If the survivor was a fiduciary she could not make a present out of the estate to Mrs. Marais, a fidei commissary.

It might have been difficult to have impeached the transaction, if consideration had been given, but such stranger would have been put on enquiry. In Lange v. Liesching (Foord 55) the rights of fidei commissaries in case of alienation of the fidei commissary property were discussed, but the case is not quite in point; Lange v. Scheepers (Buch., 1878, p. 92) is much more so. There the sale by a fiduciary to an outsider was set aside. See also Oosthuizen v. Oosthuizen (Buch., 1868, p. 51). As Mrs. Marais was one of the beneficiaries under the will, she cannot get benefits to the detriment of other beneficiaries. If Mrs. Gouws did a wrongful act her heirs must suffer.

She left no heirs of her own. Where an heir knows that she is an heir she should not be allowed to accept a present from the executrix out of the estate.

Mr. Van Zyl: In our plea we deny that there was any massing of the estate. I do not press that point, but our position is that by the joint will a fidei commissum residui was created, and that that is clear from the whole tenor of the will. Mrs. Gouws, as executrix, had a right to sell for the purpose of paying the debts of the estate; hence when the will gives her power to sell after the death of the first dying that provision must have conferred upon her some special power in addition to that which she possessed in common with every executrix. Then again we cannot admit that there was any vesting before the death of the survivor, since it was only then that it became clear who the heirs were.

[Maasdorp, J.: In the case of a fidei commissum there never is a vesting in the fidei commissaries till after the death of the fiduciary. If she was a mere usufructuary the property must have vested in somebody else.]

The case of Brown v. Rickardt (2 Juta, 314) is similar to this Klopper v. Smit (9 Juta, 167) does not apply. In all the cases quoted on the other side some specific bequest (often of a farm) has been made. Here there was a bequest of the entire estate. Then it must be remembered that the testators had no children, and so would not be so very anxious to keep the property together, and would not improbably leave the survivor all possible freedom by imposing only a fidei commissum residui. If there was not a fidei commissum residui Mrs. Gouws had a right to deal with her half share of the common estate. As to the rights of creditors, see Haupt v. Van der Heever's Executor (6 Juta, 49) and Oosthuizen's Testatrix v. Moffat (5 Juta, 319). Haupt v. Van der Heever shows that should the surviving spouse sell to a bona-fide purchaser, the sale cannot be set aside. The sale, at all events as to half of the joint estate, must stand good unless it can be shown that the purchaser bought with knowledge of the terms of the will.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (February 26).

Maasdorp, J.: Pieter Gouws and his wife Gertruida Gouws executed a mutual will on the 22nd October, 1898, among the provisions of which we find the following as being material to the issues raised in this case:—"And now as if making a new disposition and before proceeding to the election of heirs we bequeath to Hebrege Jooste, now married to Willem Francois Marais, the sum of £400 (four hundred pounds sterling) and to her child called — the sum of £350 (three hundred and fifty pounds) upon this understanding, that these bequests shall only be paid out after the death of the survivor of us. Now proceeding to the election of heirs, we nominate and appoint the first dying the survivor of us (as heir) of all our property to be relinquished by us on demise, moveable as well as immoveable, nothing whatever excepted to be possessed by him or her during his or her lifetime, without contradiction of anyone whatsoever; the survivor shall further have the right, in case he or she so elect, to sell everything or to have it sold by public auction. When the survivor also dies, a public sale of the entire estate, of moveable as well as immoveable property, shall be held of which the proceeds, after deduction of the costs and bequests, shall be divided into two equal parts, of which the one part shall be divided in equal shares amongst the brothers and sisters of us the testator, and the second part amongst the brothers and sisters of us the testatrix, it being hereunder understood that in case the same should be deceased those portions shall then be paid out to their lawful descendants."

The testator died on May 10th, 1900. The testatrix, as executrix testamentary, framed an inventory of the joint estate, bringing it up to the value of £6,621 9s. 9d., and upon the liquidation account which she filed subsequently it was stated to be worth £6,219 18s. 5d. She adiated under the will, and took transfer of the land belonging to the estate in her own name, subject to the terms of the will. Portion of the estate consisted of a debt due by one Willem Francois Marais, husband of Hebrege Jooste, mentioned in the will, upon a mortgage bond made in favour of the testator for £750, mortgaging a farm worth fully the amount of the debt. This bond the testatrix sold to Hebrege Jooste for the sum of £100, endorsed the settlement upon the bond, and delivered the document to Hebrege Jooste on January 12, 1903. The bond has, however, not yet been cancelled. It is said by the plaintiff in his declaration that when the transaction took place Hebrege was fully aware of the provisions of the said mutual will, but this last allegation is denied by the defendants. The testatrix died on October 24, 1904. The plaintiff in this case is the executor dative of the testator's estate, and he sues Hebrege Marais as executrix of her husband's estate and natural guardian of her child Pieta Marais, and the two other defendants as the executors testamentary of the testatrix, in an action wherein he claims from Hebrege the payment into the joint estate of the sum of £750, the amount of the bond delivered to her by the testatrix, less the sum of £100, which was paid by her; or, otherwise, the payment to plaintiff of half that amount, less half the sum paid, as belonging to the testator's estate; or, otherwise, he claims the payment of the latter amount from the executors testamentary of the estate of the testatrix. The plaintiff further claims that the bequest of £350 be declared void and of no effect through uncertainty. The plaintiff bases his first claim upon the ground that the joint estate of the testator and testatrix was massed and consolidated by the will, and consequently the testatrix, having adiated under the will, could not in law dispose of the mortgage bond for the sum of £100 to the prejudice of the heirs of the testator. The defendants meet this contention by saying that there was no massing of the joint estate, but that even if there was, the true construction of the mutual will is that the survivor was appointed sole heir with the right to deal with and dispose of the property in the joint estate during her lifetime at her pleasure, and that only such balance of the joint estate as should be left at her death should be divided in equal shares between the brothers and sisters of the testators respectively. They proceeded, however, to state that if it be found that the testatrix exceeded her powers, the executors of her estate are prepared to pay to the plaintiff, as executor of the testator's estate, half the amount of the bond, less £50. The first point to dispose of is the counterclaim of the defendants that the testatrix had full power to alienate the estate, with the obligation to account only for the residue. This contention would place the will in question upon the same footing as the kind of will mentioned by Voet (36.1.56), where the spouses make their will in the same instrument, and therein institute each other heir, with power to alienate, but subject to the proviso that at the death of the last-dying the residue of the estate shall be equally divided between the heirs-at-law of the first and of the last dying. The gist of this passage lies in the proviso; thereby the fidei commissum is constituted, and therein it appears that a diminution of the estate is contemplated by the alienation provided for in the will. But these are the very words which are wanting in the will in question. In this will the right to sell is given to the survivor, and this right may be one either to sell for her own account, in which case the sales would be in diminution of the estate, or to sell on account of the estate, when there would be no diminution. It is quite conceivable that it might be very convenient for the survivor to dispose of land, and have the proceeds as part of the joint estate, and without leave granted by will, the survivor would have no right to sell the entailed property. It seems to me that this was the difficulty the testators intended to obviate. It also seems to me that the passage of the will immediately following shows that no reduction of the estate by the sales was contemplated; where it is provided that when the survivor also dies a public auction of the entire estate shall be held and the proceeds of the entire estate shall be divided amongst the heirs. Then, again, it is provided that the sale by the survivor shall be by public auction: which provision is evidently for the protection of the joint estate, and would have been unnecessary if the survivor could deal with the property as she pleased. This case seems similar to that mentioned by Voet (36-1-63), where he says, "In addition to this, in cases where the testator has given the fiduciary the power to alienate, the alienation which has taken place holds good, and the fidei-commissary heir cannot revoke the alienation, but has to content himself with security for the due restitution, after the vesting of the right or the fulfilment of the condition, of the value of that which has been alienated, so that the value is substituted for the thing." In this case I am of opinion that the power was given to the testatrix to sell the property in the estate by auction and to account for the proceeds as portion of the estate. Upon the widow's death the entire estate had to be accounted for in accordance with the inventory or liquidation account; or, as far as the plaintiff is concerned, in the interest of those who take the testator's half, half of the entire estate has to be accounted for. No question is raised in the case except as to the amount of the bond, and in all other respects the parties are satisfied to regard the estate as intact. The transaction in respect of the bond is called a sale for the sum of £100, but it is quite clear that, considering the value of the security, it amounted to neither more nor less than a gift of £650 to the estate of Marais, of which Hebregge Marais was executrix. As such the transaction cannot be regarded as protected by the provision in the will giving the testatrix the right to sell the property. The plaintiff contends that as there was a massing of the estate the entire estate must be accounted for and dealt with in terms of the will, but he only raises that contention in the interest of the heirs succeeding to the testator's estate, and it seems to me that that object is gained without holding that such a massing took place. It is quite clear that the testator instituted his wife fiduciary heir to his half of the estate, with direction to leave that half upon her death to his brothers and sisters in equal shares, and that half must now be accounted for to the fidei-commissory heirs. Amongst other things, half the value of the bond must be accounted for. In the first instance, the amount is claimed from Hebregge Marais, to whom the alienation was made, or, in the alternative, it is claimed from the executors of the testatrix, who made the alienation. Now, it is quite clear that the estate of the testatrix is liable for the amount claimed, and her executors possess the means, and have expressed their willingness to pay it, in case the Court should find that the alienation was wrongfully made. It is therefore unnecessary to enquire into the liability of Hebregge Marais in this respect. Nor is it necessary to decide whether or not there was a massing of the estate, because the question does not affect the issue raised in this case, it being clear that the testatrix was fiduciary heir to her husband, and had to account to the fidei-commissory heirs for his estate after adiating under the will. The plaintiff's claim, that the bequest of £350 be declared void and of no effect through uncertainty, was virtually decided when the Court rejected, as inadmissible, the evidence which was tendered by the defendants to show that it was the intention of the testators to bequeath the amount to Pieter Johannes Gouws Marais, one of several sons of Hebregge Jooste, who was married to Marais. The defendants tendered evidence to prove that the testatrix, after the death of the testator, had made a declaration to one of the witnesses as to the intention of the testators when making the bequest. It appeared from the authorities cited at the Bar that where in a will the name of a person intended to be benefited had been left totally blank, the Courts in England have invariably refused to admit evidence to supply the omission. The authorities were so clear upon the point that I had no hesitation in rejecting the evidence. It consequently remains uncertain for whom the bequest was intended. The bequest will therefore be declared void and of no effect on the ground of uncertainty, and the executors of the estate of the testatrix are ordered to pay to the plaintiff half the amount of the bond less £50: that is the sum of £325. The Court also declares that the landed property mentioned in prayer (e), or the proceeds thereof, form a portion of the joint estate. Costs to come out of the estate. Parties to the suit who have given evidence are declared necessary witnesses. Executors of the estate of Mr. and Mrs. Gouws to have taxed costs as between attorney and client allowed out of the estate.

VUSS V. VUSS. { 1906.
Feb. 7th.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce on the ground of the defendant's malicious desertion.

Mr. Lewis was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default. Counsel said plaintiff obtained leave on the 16th November to sue his wife by edictal citation, and personal service was ordered, if possible, failing which publication. There was an affidavit that personal service was impossible.

The defendant was ordered to return to co-habitation by the 1st May, failing which to show cause why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with costs, by 1st June, the rule to be personally served if possible, failing which, publication in the same manner as before.

ZERF V. FAGAN.

This was an action brought by Adam Jacobus Zerf, and Marthinus Johannes Zerf, against Henry Allan Fagan, to recover sums of £69 10s. 9d., £12, and £50, for wages due to workmen, wages due to the plaintiffs, and damages respectively, in respect of a building contract. The plaintiff's declaration was as follows: The plaintiffs carry on business in partnership as builders at Somerset West and elsewhere; the defendant is a landowner, residing at Somerset West. In or about February last the plaintiffs and the defendant entered into an oral contract, whereby the plaintiffs agreed to give their services to the defendant as foremen in and about the building of a certain house at Somerset West, and to engage workmen for the said work; and the defendant agreed to pay to each of the plaintiffs respectively the sum of 10s. per day, payable weekly, for their said services, and also to furnish the plaintiffs weekly with money wherewith to pay the wages of the said workmen, and also to supply all the materials necessary for the building of the said house; and the defendant further agreed that if the total cost of the said house on completion should be less than the sum of £1,745, he, the defendant would pay to the plaintiffs the difference between the said cost and the sum of £1,745. Thereafter the plaintiffs duly rendered their services to the defendant, and carried out their part of the said contract until the 15th July last. On the 8th July, and also on the 15th July, the defendant wrongfully refused and failed to pay to the plaintiffs the moneys necessary for paying the wages of the workmen employed on the said building during the weeks ending on the said dates respectively, amounting altogether to the sum of £69 10s. 9d., for which sum the plaintiffs are liable to the said workmen. There is also due to the plaintiff the sum of £12, being the wages due to them as foremen for the weeks ending on the 8th July and 15th July respectively. By reason of the defendant's default in paying the said sums, the plaintiffs have been unable to pay the said workmen, have been unable to proceed with the said building, have been deprived of the wages which they would otherwise have earned as foremen under the said contract, have been threatened with lawsuits by the said workmen, have been injured in their credit and reputation, and have thereby and otherwise suffered damage in the sum of £50. Wherefore they pray: (a) Judgment in the said sums of £69 10s. 9d. and £12 respectively, with interest a tempore morae. (b) Judgment in the sum of £50 as damages. (c) Alternative relief. (d) Costs of suit.

In reconvention, the defendant claimed £116 18s., due to him, being an amount overdrawn; £223 15s., an expenditure which he incurred; and £252 6s. 6d., as damages for breach of contract.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for plaintiff; Mr. Burton for defendant.

Evidence having been given, and counsel for the plaintiff heard in argument on the facts, Hopley, J., said he regretted very much that the parties should have come to the Supreme Court, and incurred such a large expenditure in such a case. He believed the defendant's version of the contract, and gave judgment for the defendant with costs, and for the plaintiff in reconvention for £500, with costs.

ILLIQUID CASES.

MAKWA V. BABA. { 1906.
{ Feb. 8th.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment, in default of plea, on an amount of £73, wages due.

Granted.

WALKER AND CO. V. VAN DER MFRWE.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £26 9s., amount due on goods sold. Since the summons had been served, the amount had been paid, less 10s. He now applied for judgment on that amount, with costs.

Granted.

CLARKE AND CO. V. THOMAS.

Mr. Lewis moved, under Rule 329d, for judgment for an amount of £33 13s. 11d., due for goods sold, less £26 5s. 5d. paid on account.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan, who appeared for defendant, said an appearance had not been entered, as it was understood the case was settled. The amount claimed, it was contended, was due for the cost of carriage from Worcester to Cape Town.

Mr. Lewis said they had not had a copy of defendant's affidavit.

Mr. Buchanan said his client had only heard the previous afternoon that the case was to be heard. It had been hanging over from January 12, and consequently they had not much time to get the necessary affidavits together.

Buchanan, J., said the defendant would have to pay the costs of his default.

Mr. Lewis said his clients had given credit for the value of the goods, but they were now charging for freightage, insurance, etc.

Mr. Buchanan contended that the plaintiffs should have withdrawn their summons, and have issued a new summons. He asked the Court to reserve to defendant the right to claim back the costs.

The case was adjourned to enable an action to be brought by the plaintiffs.

FRIEDLANDER AND ANOTHER V. DE HETON.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £23 6s., amount due for professional services rendered and moneys dispersed on defendant's behalf.

Granted.

GUTHRIE AND ANOTHER V. SWANEPOL.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £60 9s., amount due for professional services rendered.

Granted.

LIBERMAN AND ANOTHER V. NELSON.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment under Rule 329d on a sum of £39 7s. 6d., less £31 17s. paid on account.

Granted.

ABDURJAH V. PEREGRINO.

Mr. De Waal moved under Rule 329d for an order compelling the defendant to hand over to plaintiff an account and all documents and receipts in the plaintiff's estate.

Granted, the defendant to file the account and deliver the documents within seven days.

MILLS V. McMULLEN.

Mr. Du Toit moved for judgment under Rule 329d on an amount of £215, rent due.
Granted.

TRUTER V. LOUW.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea. The amount involved was £54.
Granted.

REHABILITATIONS. { 1906.
Feb. 8th.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the discharge from insolvency of Samuel Blatt. The estate was sequestrated on the 31st August, 1901. The liabilities were £1,114, and he paid 1s. 3d. in the £. The reports of the trustees were favourable.
Granted.

Mr. Bailey moved for the discharge from insolvency of Johannes Bernhardt Hambroek. The estate was sequestrated on June 30, 1898. The reports of the trustees were favourable.
Granted.

Mr. Swift moved for the discharge from insolvency of Hosias Hosiasohn. The estate was sequestrated four years ago. The reports of the trustees were favourable.
Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

McKILLOP'S CURATOR V. McKILLOP.

This was an application for the confirmation of the sale of certain property, situate at Green Point.

The affidavit of the curator bonis (Arthur Kilwarden Wolfe), stated that on taking charge of the estate he found that there were many liabilities to meet, and although he had not as yet discharged these liabilities he had succeeded in reducing them to a considerable extent, so that at the present moment, exclusive of the bond debts of the estate, there only remained due to the concurrent creditors something like £260. The assets of the estate consisted exclusively of immovable property, amongst others, there was a property at Green Point, registered in the name of Jas. Henry McKillop. On August 31 petitioner obtained an order from the Court confirming the sale of certain other property, situate at Newlands, and the proceeds of this property after deducting the bond, with interest, had been and still were being appropriated towards payment of the debts of the estate and the upkeep, and McKillop and his wife, who had been living apart for the last twelve months. There was still £205 to come in from the property, of which £72 was due in respect of interest on bonds. About the 18th January, petitioner obtained an offer of purchase for Coleraine Lodge and sold it for £2,000 provisionally. As additional security for the second bond of £600 to be passed by the purchaser, on the property, he was giving other property at Green Point registered in his name. The sale of this property would relieve the estate of its largest liability a bond of £1,400, and would enable the petitioner to wipe off all the concurrent debts, and leave him with a fairly substantial balance in hand. The price at which the property had been disposed of was £300 in excess of the price originally paid for it. The concurrent creditors had lately been pressing for payment of their claims, one of whom had already issued a summons, and at a meeting of creditors the condition of affairs having been presented to them, they signified their consent to wait until April 1, on or before which time petitioner hoped to be able to satisfy their claim.

The affidavit of the respondent stated he was desirous that the landed property in his estate should not be disposed of. It appeared from the curator's petition that he intended selling Coleraine Lodge for £2,000, the property was of considerably more value, and would realise a better price if sold at a more opportune time. If the property was sold, no portion of the purchase money should be allowed to remain on a second mortgage even though further security was given. He held that the interest payable was amply covered by the present rental of the premises, and the rental (£120 a year) was very low, as it had been reduced by the curator from £252 per annum. If the balance purchase of his Newlands property had been paid in cash, and not allowed to remain on mortgage, there would have been sufficient funds to settle the major portion of the claims due at the present time. Therefore, he was desirous that no application for the confirmation of the sale of his property should not be granted. In a replying affidavit the curator bonis said it was necessary in view of the pressure brought to bear on all sides to sell the property. The property had been let at £10 a month, because it was all the curator bonis could get for it. It had been vacant for two months at the time it was let.

Mr. McGregor for applicant; Mr. W. P. Buchanan for respondent.

Buchanan, J., remarked that he felt that Wolf was acting, as he thought, in the best interests of the estate.

Mr. McGregor said that, perhaps, there might be a disposition on the other side to accept an arrangement.

Mr. Buchanan said it was true that Mr. Wolf might be doing everything he thought correct, but he did not feel that he could enter into any arrangement.

Buchanan, J., said that he felt a great difficulty as to the order applied for. It was not as if the Court had any control over the persons or property concerned. There would be no order made on the application, but Wolf would have his costs out of the estate. He thought that McKillop would be very wise in accepting Wolf's suggestion, but the Court could not force him to do so.

Ex parte ERASMUS.

Mr. Gutsche made application for an order authorising the payment of certain moneys, to be expended on the education of three minor children. The Master had reported favourably on the application.

Order granted, in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte MARAIS AND ANOTHER.

This was an application by Gerhardus Schoeman Marais and Elizabeth Maria Marais (born Kotzee) for an order confirming the purchase of certain property.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the petitioners.

The petitioners' affidavit set forth that they had been married out of community of property, and the Court had previously issued an order authorising the sale of their one-seventh part of certain farms in the Bedford district at £2 per acre in satisfaction of a bond. That property had been sold at £2 5s. per acre, and after the payment of the bond and legal expenses, there would be a balance over of £750, wherewith to purchase other property. The petitioners had entered into a deed of sale for the purchase of certain residential property in the town of Bedford for £550, subject to the approval of the Master of the Supreme Court as to the property being worth that price. The petitioners intended to use this property as a boarding-house for children attending Bedford Public School, and persons coming into the town for Nachtmal, and for that purpose would require furniture to the value of £60. Further, they were desirous of erecting on the property a stable and shed, at a cost of £90. They, therefore, prayed for an order authorising the Master to confirm the purchase of the town property, the expenditure of the sums mentioned in furnishing the house, and the erection of the stable and shed, costs of the application to come out of the balance of £750.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan said that the Master seemed to think that the petitioners would not carry out their proposals as regards the establishment of a boarding-house.

Buchanan, J., said that an order would be granted confirming the purchase of the town property for £550, the balance of the £750—£200—to be paid over to the Master, who would be authorised to pay out therefrom sums for the purchase of the furniture and the erection of the stables, as he might deem fit.

Order made accordingly.

Ex parte DAVIES.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan applied, on behalf of Sarah Jane Davies, in her capacity as executrix testamentary to the will of George Paine Davies, her husband, for leave to execute a certain bond. The petitioner's affidavit set forth that her husband died on July 28, 1902, leaving six children. The most important of the assets in the deceased's estate was a tobacco-growing business. For the conduct of that business, the petitioner required to make purchases of tobacco leaf; but she was not able to do so, as the Standard Bank declined to give her an overdraft on the account in the estate. The petitioner now asked for an order authorising her to execute a general covering bond, to enable her to overdraw the account with the Standard Bank to the extent of one-half the amount of the security to be given against the bond. There was property in the estate to the value of £6,000, which the petitioner offered as security.

Order granted as prayed, the security against the bond to be the property valued at £6,000.

BERRANGE V. BERRANGE.

Mr. Russell, for the petitioner (Mrs. Berrange), moved for leave to sue the respondent (Daniel Frederick Berrange) by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Counsel explained that the parties were married at Grootfontein in 1882, and the respondent was now in Heidelberg, Transvaal, and without the jurisdiction of the Court.

Leave granted, as prayed, citation returnable on March 31.

GORDON V. GORDON.

Dr. Greer applied for the petitioner (Mrs. Gordon) for an order calling upon the respondent, her husband, to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay the respondent £50, to enable her to proceed with an action for judicial separation, on the grounds of violence, and to hand over a sum of money for the petitioner's maintenance pending the suit.

The petitioner's affidavit set forth that the respondent was in receipt of a salary of £15 per month, besides which he was in receipt of an income from a boarding-house which he conducted. The parties were married out of community of property.

The respondent appeared in person. Questioned by the Court, he said: I am penniless, my lord. She wants £50—I have not got fifty shillings in my possession to-day. I am willing to take her back.

The Respondent: Only of taking liquor from her at six o'clock in the morning. I have only £12 10s. per month. I have no boarding-house now, and I have to support my two children.

At the request of Dr. Greer, the respondent was put in the witness-box and examined. He stated that his salary was £12 10s. per month. He had no boarding-house now. He had had a few lodgers living with him, but had to give them up at the time his wife left him, on January 3. He had also had to give up his house and store his furniture. He did not think that the value of the furniture was more than £50. He now lived with his mother, to whom he had to pay £6 per month for his own board and lodging and £3 per month for that of the children.

Buchanan, J., said that the parties were married out of community of property, and the case was not one in which any order could be made.

KOTZE V. PARTRIDGE.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation for the payment of the capital amount of a certain mortgage bond passed by the petitioner in favour of the respondent, with interest, and for an order to attach the mortgaged property ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Counsel explained that the respondent had disappeared from Cape Town some time ago, without leaving anyone in charge of his affairs. It was now believed that Partridge was employed in London in a motor-car business.

An order was granted to attach the property ad fundandam jurisdictionem, with leave to sue by edictal citation, personal service to be effected, failing which publication in the "Daily Telegraph" (London) and the Government "Gazette," citation returnable on June 1.

STEVENS V. STEVENS.

This was an application for an order on the respondent, George Henry Stevens, for the payment of alimony, pending an action for the restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

The petitioner's affidavit set forth that she had previously instituted proceedings against the respondent for restitution of conjugal rights, but the case was withdrawn, on condition that the respondent would live with the petitioner. The respondent, after that, offered the petitioner 10s. per month, on condition that she would live apart from him. She refused the offer. The respondent declined to live with her because she was coloured, and he was of European extraction.

The respondent's affidavit stated that he had never lived with the petitioner as her husband. She was a Matabele native. After marriage, she lived in his father's house in the capacity of servant. He had not undertaken to live with her as a condition to the withdrawal of the proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights previously instituted, but withdrawn. The respondent was only a labourer, employed at the Rochester Brickworks, Salt River. His pay was only 5s. 9d. per diem, plus £36 per annum, which his father gave him. He could not afford to pay more than 10s. per month.

The replying affidavit of Susan Stevens asserted that she had not been in any sense a hired servant in the respondent's father's house. She believed that her husband had taken work as a labourer only as a subterfuge.

Dr. Greer was for the petitioner, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for the respondent.

Buchanan, J., said that it was clear that the applicant had a good case; but it was not, on the other hand, denied that the respondent had provided her with a respectable place in which to live, which she had left. In these circumstances, he would make no order for alimony, but would order that the respondent pay to the applicant's attorney £5 forthwith, and £10 on the applicant's suit for restitution of conjugal rights being set down for hearing.

Ex parte VAN DER MESCHT.

Mr. Gutsche applied for leave to pass transfer of certain property to the Colonial Government, the petitioner being the guardian of a minor child. The Master raised no objection.

Order granted.

LOUBSER V. ESTATE BOTHA.

Mr. Sutton, for the petitioner, made application for leave to sue, in forma pauperis, the executors in the Estate Botha for the transfer of certain propperty. Petitioner's affidavit set forth that she was engaged by Mr. Botha as housekeeper, on condition that her board and lodging were provided, and that, on her master's demise, she was to receive from the estate £500, or a certain cottage. Mr. Botha was now dead, and the executors repudiated liability.

Buchanan, J., granted a rule nisi, subject to the certification of donation, calling upon the respondents to show cause why an order for the transference of the property should not be issued, the rule to be returnable on February 27.

Ex parte THE EXECUTORS OF THE LATE DEAN.

Mr. Watermeyer applied for leave to mortgage certain property in the estate of the late Mr. Dean. The affidavit of the petitioners, Mr. Gus Trollip and Mr. E. R. Syfret, set forth that, last year, the roofs of certain cottages in the estate at Newlands, were blown off in a storm. In order to prevent further damage by rain, it was found necessary to replace the roofs immediately. There being no available cash in the estate, the executors had paid for this work themselves, and now sought to mortgage the property to the extent of £180 to obtain repayment of the money expended by them.

[Buchanan, J.: The only question is whether they ought to be paid out of the income in the estate.]

Mr. Watermeyer: The income is only £200 per annum, out of which the widow has to support herself, and her children.

Order granted.

Ex parte WALLIS.

Mr. Van Zyl applied, on behalf of the trustee, in the insolvent estate of J. Fcurie, C. son, for the appointment of a commission for the examination of certain witnesses. It was suggested that the Assistant Resident Magistrate, Calitzdorp, should be appointed commissioner.

Order granted, the A.R.M., Calitzdorp, to be the commissioner for the examination of the witnesses.

Ex parte VAN BENSBERG.

Mr. Bailey moved for an order authorising the amendment of a certain deed of transfer. It appeared that the amendment was made necessary by an error in the conveyancing.

Order granted.

Ex parte REID AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Payne moved for an order, authorising the issue of the copy of a certain bond. Counsel stated that the notice of the application had been duly advertised, and no objections had been lodged. Notice had also been served on the Registrar of Deeds, who had called for a declaration from the attorney, in whose hands the bond had been. The attorney had, however, left Cradock, and was now in Johannesburg. He had declined to give assistance in the matter, unless on conditions, which were not acceptable to the petitioners.

Order granted.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. ROSENBERG.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to sue the defendant by edictal citation for £4, amount of quitrent due on a farm, and for the attachment of the farm.

The application was granted, the return day being fixed for March 1.

FOORD V. FOORD.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of Edith Foord, for leave to sue her husband (Charles Foord) for restitution of conjugal rights.

The petitioner stated that the parties were married in Cape Town, and he left for Kimberley, where he joined an irregular corps. In 1902 she went to England. Her husband also went to England, and then went to Canada. She heard from him in 1905, when he asked her to join him. She replied, consenting, but had not since heard of him. There was one child of the marriage.

The application was granted, June 1 being fixed as the return day.

Ex parte HENNING.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the appointment of a curator.

The affidavit of the petitioner stated that her husband had been curator to his brother, who had been declared a lunatic. The husband had since died, so petitioner asked for the appointment.

The application was granted.

Ex parte STRACHAN AND WIFE.

Mr. Sutton moved for the registration of an ante-nuptial contract.

The affidavit of the petitioners stated that they did not think it necessary to have the signatures appended to the contract previous to the wedding. No creditors would object to the course. The signing of the contract would be to the benefit of the wife.

The application was granted.

Ex parte SWART.

Mr. Jones moved for leave to pass transfer of certain property to the Colonial Government.
Granted.

Ex parte STEYTLER, EXECUTOR DATIVE IN THE ESTATE OF THE LATE WASSERFALL.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for the cancellation of a certain bond.
Granted.

Ex parte CLAASSENS.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to pass transfer of certain property.
Granted, in terms of Registrar of Deeds report.

Ex parte GOODMAN.

Mr. Paine moved for an order authorising the attachment of certain property.
The application was granted, personal service to be effected if possible.

Ex parte PETERSEN.

Mr. Swift moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to amend a certain deed of transfer, in which the third Christian name of the applicant had been omitted.
Granted.

Ex parte THE EXECUTORS TESTAMENTARY IN THE ESTATE OF THE LATE OWEN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order authorising the cancellation of certain sales. In none of the cases had transfer been passed, whilst in some cases part of the purchase money had been paid.

A rule nisi, returnable on April 1, calling on all persons interested to show cause why the application should not be granted, was made.

Ex parte ZIETSMAN.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register certain property in petitioner's name.
Granted.

Ex parte EDRIES.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to mortgage certain property. He stated that the petitioner was the sole surviving grandchild and heir to the property in question.

Order granted.

Plottel v. BURMAN.

Mr. De Waal moved for an order for the removal of the respondent, Harry Burman, from the office of executor testamentary in the estate of Hyman Plottel, with costs of the application.
Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte KRUGER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for an order cancelling the appointment of Hendrik Jacobus Gerhardus Kruger, as joint executor testamentary in the estate of A. M. Kruger, and for leave to act as sole executor, with costs of the application. He said that Hendrik Jacobus Gerhardus Kruger had become insolvent and insane since his appointment.

[Buchanan, J.: Has Kruger been declared insane?]

Mr. Van Zyl: No, my lord.

[Buchanan, J.: Has notice of these proceedings been served on him?]

Mr. Van Zyl: It does not appear so from the papers, my lord.

[Buchanan, J., allowed a rule nisi, calling upon the respondent to show cause why the petitioner should not be allowed to finish the administration of the estate alone, the rule to be returnable on February 22.

Ex parte THE ESTATE OF THE LATE VAN ZYL.

Mr. De Waal moved for leave to pass transfer of certain property.
Order granted.

Ex parte THE EXECUTORS ESTATE BEVERN.

Mr. Struben moved for the amendment of a certain order of Court. No objection was raised by the Master.
Order granted.

Ex parte GIERKE.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to amend a certain deed of transfer. The amendment sought for was in the direction of having the petitioner's full and correct name placed on the deed, in substitution for the incorrect name appearing thereon at present.

Buchanan, J., asked if the Registrar of Deeds had reported on the application.

Mr. Watermeyer replied that he had not.

Buchanan, J., said that no order would be made, pending the production of an affidavit showing that the property was not mortgaged, and that no one else beside the petitioner had an interest in it, and the production of the report of the Registrar of Deeds.

Ex parte THOMPSON.

Mr. Percy Jones moved for leave to execute certain powers of attorney, etc., on behalf of a minor son. The Master had reported favourably on the application.

Order granted.

GERMAN GOVERNMENT V. STOLL-REITHER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved to have the award of the arbitrators in this matter made a rule of Court, in terms of a consent paper put in.

Mr. Payne appeared to give consent on behalf of the respondent.

In reply to the Court, Mr. Van Zyl said that the award was for £6,789 7s. 6d.

Award made a rule of Court, in terms of the consent paper.

LESTER V. LESTER.

Mr. Watermeyer moved to amend a certain rule of Court. Counsel explained that a previous application for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation had been refused on the grounds that he was in Cape Town. Since then a letter had been received from the respondent, addressed to the petitioner, through her attorneys, in which he stated that he had gone to England. His address in England was not known, and the petitioner now sought to have the existing order of Court amended, and for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation.

Granted, personal service of the citation to be effected, failing which one publication in the "Daily Telegraph" (London) and the Government "Gazette," the citation to be returnable on March 31.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

TRIAL CAUSE.

HEATHCOTE V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1906.
Feb. 9th.

Materials for railway—Compensation—Act 19 of 1874—Works in connection with railway.

The Colonial Government, in constructing a railway under Act 19 of 1874, took materials from the plaintiff's quitrent land, not only for the purpose of constructing and maintaining the railway itself, but for works in connection therewith; such as the building of railway stations, labourers' cottages, schools for their children and hospitals.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to compensation for materials used for the railway itself, including bridges and culverts, over which the line of railway passed, but that he was entitled to compensation for materials used for building railway stations, labourers' cottages and other works in connection with the railway.

This was an action brought by Charles Heathcote, a farmer, residing in the Cradock district, to recover £1,000 damages in respect of certain stone taken from his farm for certain purposes, for which he said he was entitled to compensation. The declaration set out that in 1881 the Act 14 gave the Government authority to construct a railway through the Cradock district. In 1889, without notice to the plaintiff, the defendant came to the land, which was not being used for the line of railway, and opened a quarry, and took stone, not only for railway purposes, but for extraneous purposes. The land consequently had depreciated in value. The defendant offered to pay £25, which the plaintiff refused to accept. The plea set out that the tenure of the land was subject to the ordinary conditions. The quarry was opened with the full knowledge of the plaintiff, who had never objected. It was not necessary by law to obtain the consent of the plaintiff. They now tendered £50, with costs to date, for stone unlawfully taken.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan), was for the plaintiff; and Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Howel Jones), appeared for the defendants.

Charles Heathcote, the plaintiff, stated when the railway was completed, the quarry was not open. In 1889 the Government opened it, without giving him any notice. In 1891, when the Government got beyond the limit, he made application for compensation. At that time he was not in a position to go to law, and he left the matter in abeyance. There were about ten houses at the quarry, in which families resided, and plaintiff had been occasioned great inconvenience.

Wm. John McWilliam, architect and Civil Engineer, of Port Elizabeth, said he surveyed the quarry in October last. He made a rough estimate of the amount of stone taken from the quarry at between 11,000 and 12,000 cubic yards. The stone was a good building stone, being slightly harder than the Queen's Town stone. In the rough, in the quarry, it would be worth about 2s. a cubic yard. Fifty per cent. of the stone had been used for quarters.

Joseph McKillop, stone and marble merchant, of Cape Town, said that from 1s. to 1s. 6d. per cubic yard would be a fair price for the stone in the quarry. He considered it quite as good as the Queen's Town stone. If business was good, he had no doubt there would be a market for the stone in Cape Town.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had only seen the samples; he had never been to the quarry.

Witness: Very well, indeed, my lord.

Charles Magee, stone merchant, considered two shillings a cubic yard a fair price for the stone in the quarry.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He had not seen the stone worked, but he could tell what it was worth by looking at it.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Walker Bruce Brown, district engineer, said the stone was taken because it was the most convenient to hand. The portion of the farm from which the stone was taken was worth about £5 a morgen. The Government had erected buildings with the stone at Aliceedale, about 150 miles away. There was no market for the plaintiff's stone.

Another witness stated that stone was a most expensive one to work. The stone was more adapted for rough work.

Mr. Searle (for plaintiff) cited Logan v. Colonial Government (11 C.T.R., 114, and 13 C.T.R., 607). It has been contended for defendants that Act 19 of 1874, and not Act 14 of 1881 governs this case: but the terms of these two Acts are identical. The Divisional Council has a right to take materials for the purpose of making roads. The Government may take land for railways, and then they expropriate it: if they take materials they do not expropriate. Had the Divisional Council taken materials for other purposes than road-making or repairing they would have been bound to compensate. Wallace v. Randall (3, E.D.C., 87), and Landmark v. Van der Walt (3 Juta, 300). In Logan's case it was argued from Landmark's case that land would be expropriated for railway purposes without compensation, but see the Privy Council judgment (13, C.T.R., 607), also sections 11 and 12 of Act 9 of 1858. In Logan's case the Privy Council held that under section 11 the Government could not take land unless they gave compensation. In Slabber v. Bell the main question was as to the right to enter on the property. Here that question does not emerge. The defendants have given up a great part of their case, and now the whole question between us is as to their right to take materials wherewith to build stations. Plaintiffs are clearly entitled to compensation.

Mr. Schreiner (for defendants): The important point in this case is the right of the Railway Department to take material from quitrent land. The leading case on this point is De Villiers v. Cape Divisional Council (5 Buch., 50), where see the judgment of De Villiers, C. J. The argument on the other side does not notice the difference between the right to take materials and the right to expropriate land. See Slabber v. Bell. The Act of 1904 says nothing about stations, but the expropriation of land for stations and the taking of materials for stations stand on different grounds. In Logan's case the judgment of the Privy Council went far beyond that of Buchanan. A. C. J. A station is necessary for railway purposes, a railway school (I must admit) is not. A bridge is part of a railway and so is a station, but it is urged that although the Railway Department may take stone for the former, they may not for the latter. No doubt Logan's case was a bad case for the Government, but the doctrine laid down in that case should not be extended. I submit that the doctrine stated in De Villiers v. Cape Divisional Council is the law of this Colony.

Mr. Searle was not called upon in reply.

De Villiers, C. J.: In the case of De Villiers v. Cape Divisional Council (5 Buch., 50) it was decided by a majority of this Court that lands held in quitrent tenure are not subject to the rights reserved to Government under Sir John Cradock's Proclamation of 1813, of taking materials thereon for the purpose of making or repairing public roads, but the judgment was reversed on appeal. Considerable reliance has now been placed on my remarks as the dissenting Judge in the original case as to the Common Law, independently of the Proclamation, in regard to the rights of the Crown in respect of quitrent lands, but the context shews that those remarks did not form the grounds of my decision, which was based upon the terms of the Proclamation. It is impossible to hold that rights beyond those specifically mentioned in the Proclamation were intended to be reserved to Government in the face of the distinct language of the fourth section: "Government reserves no other rights but those on mines of precious stones, gold, or silver; as also the right of making and repairing public roads and raising materials for that purpose on the premises." In the subsequent case of Stellenbosch Divisional Council v. Myburgh (5 Juta, 8), it was held that the right to take gravel from uncultivated quitrent land for the repair and maintenance of roads extends to all roads beyond the limits of such land, and it is now contended that if the wide interpretation of the powers of the Government which was adopted in that case be applied to the present case, the right of the Government to take building stone from the plaintiff's land for the purpose of building railway stations, schools for the children of railway employees, cottages for railway employees, and so on, without compensation, should be upheld. The plaintiff's counsel has admitted the right of the Government to use the stone for building culverts and bridges all along the line of railway authorised by Act 19 of 1874. These culverts and bridges form part of the railway, and although they are not in immediate proximity to the plaintiff's land, their construction falls within the principles laid down in Stellenbosch Council v. Myburgh. The defendants' counsel, on the other hand, has admitted that labourers' cottages, hospitals, and schools are not such railway purposes as would justify the use of the plaintiff's stone for their construction without compensation. The chief question, therefore, which remains for consideration is whether railway stations may be so constructed.

The decision of this question depends upon the construction to be placed on the 11th section of Act 9 of 1858 and the 3rd section of Act 19 of 1874. The 4th section of Sir John Cradock's Proclamation had reserved to the Government the "right of making and repairing public roads, and raising materials for that purpose"; and the question is, whether the subsequent railway legislation extended that right to other purposes than "the making and repairing of railways" without compensation. The judgment of the Judicial Committee in Colonial Government v. Logan (13, C.T.R., 607) appears to me to be conclusive on this point. It is true that the question in that case was whether the Government could take land for works in connection with the railway then in question without compensation, whereas the question in the present case is whether materials can be taken without compensation, but the reasons for holding that compensation was there payable would be equally applicable to the present case. The 11th section of Act 9 of 1858 places the taking of land and the raising and carrying away of materials on exactly the same footing. The 3rd section of Act 19 of 1874 enacts that "all and singular the powers which are by Act 9 of 1858 bestowed on the Commissioners of Roads in regard to taking or acquiring lands and materials necessary for the making or repairing of any such main road as in the Act mentioned, or of any works in connection therewith, are hereby bestowed upon the Governor . . . as if the said railways were public roads." The Judicial Committee held that where land is taken under this section for works connected with the railway, and not for the construction and maintenance of the railway itself, the Government must pay for the land thus taken. In the absence of any distinction taken in the Act between land and materials, I am of opinion that materials taken for works in connection with the railway other than construction and maintenance of the railway itself must also be paid for. The building of a railway station is a work in connection with the railway; but the station is not part of the railway. This point was expressly decided in Slabber v. Bell (4 Searle 3), and I see no reason for dissenting from the judgment in that case. The result is that there must be judgment for the plaintiff for the value of materials used for other purposes than the construction and maintenance of the railway. The quantity of stone thus used is 8,693 cubic yards, and as I value the stone at the rate of sixpence per cubic yard, the judgment must be for £217 6s. 6d. with costs.

WEBB V. ANDERSON AND CO. { 1906.
Feb. 9th.

Negligence—Contributory negligence—Damages.

This was an action in which Alfred Webb, a painter, of Cape Town, claimed the sum of £100 as damages for injuries alleged to have been caused through the negligence of the defendant's servants.

The plaintiff, in his declaration, stated that late in the afternoon of the 24th August he went to the defendants' premises in Strand-street for the purpose of making some purchases, and while there he fell down an open, uncovered, and unlighted staircase, of the existence of which he was not aware. He received injuries by reason of which he was confined to his bed for several days under medical treatment, and he was still suffering from the injuries. He alleged that the fall was occasioned by the negligence of the defendants' servants.

The defendants, in their plea, stated that plaintiff came to the shop after the hour of closing. In order to oblige him, one of the salesmen proceeded down the cellar by means of the staircase in question, to which neither plaintiff nor any of the public had access. The plaintiff voluntarily offered to accompany the salesman, which he did at his own risk. Plaintiff was aware of the existence of the stairs, and received warning. Defendants said that the fall was due to plaintiff's own carelessness and negligence.

In his replication, plaintiff said he followed the salesman at the latter's express invitation, and he denied that the existence of the stairs was mentioned to him.

Mr. Lewis was for the plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C., with him Mr. Benjamin, was for the defendants.

Dr. Frank M. Morris described the injuries received by the plaintiff, and said that for three months, the plaintiff was unable to follow his occupation. He was still in a nervous condition, but witness believed he would in future be able to work as usual.

Alfred Webb, the plaintiff, said that at the time of the accident he was carrying on business as a painter in Cape Town and the suburbs. He was in August foreman to Mr. Angus, of Wynberg, and he earned between £12 and £14 a month. On the 24th August he was sent in by Mr. Angus to purchase some white lead from the defendants. He reached the shop at 5.55 p.m., at which time there was no sign of the shop being shut. It was then getting dark. There were no lights in the shop, and it was darker in the shop than in the street. Witness went to the counter, and saw a salesman named Barnett, to whom he gave a card from Mr. Angus. Witness asked for half a hundredweight of white lead. Barnett asked witness if he wanted to take it with him. Witness replied, "Yes," and Barnett said: "Stop this way." Witness followed him behind the counter towards the back of the shop. Witness had never been behind the counter before. It was dark in the shop, but witness could see the shelves projecting. They turned to the right, and it became suddenly very dark. Barnett was walking a yard and a half ahead of witness, but as soon as they turned the corner witness lost sight of him. Just as they turned witness fell down a hole into the cellar. Before this happened witness did not know of the existence of stairs, and Barnett did not mention them to him. He did not lose consciousness, but was suffering great pain, and was unable to rise. Barnett could not get witness out, and some other assistants came and helped him. They had to strike a match in the cellar to see. They put witness in a cab, and Barnett took him home to Hope-street. Barnett helped to put him to bed, and afterwards went to fetch Dr. Morris. Witness was in bed for ten days. Even now, when witness tried to go up a ladder, he became sick and dizzy. He had not been in any employment since the accident. He had a job at Sea Point in September, but he had to give it up. He still suffered pain.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness had not seen the lift in the shop. He had been with a Mr. Richardson to the defendant's shop, but he had never gone down into the basement with Richardson. He did not collide with Barnett. It was not true that he followed Barnett down the steps, knowing they were there, and that he slipped. He did not tell Mr. Angus that he said to Barnett, "Tell me where it is, and I will get it."

Phineas Friedman, an auctioneer, said the plaintiff was living at his house at the time of the accident. On the 24th August, Barnett came home with Webb. The former afterwards went for Dr. Morris. Barnett said, "I don't know whatever possessed me to ask him to come down 'there.'"

Hudson Scott, broker, builder, and contractor, gave evidence as to certain plans put in. The part of the shop near the stairs was very much darker than the rest. Witness had been behind the counter to purchase goods, and he had seen people at the far end. He was at the shop at noon the previous day. He walked to the stairs, and if he had not stopped for a moment he would not have seen the stairs, it being very dark there.

Herbert Evans, private detective, Percy Hunter, agent, and Thomas Herbert, solicitor's clerk, gave evidence as to the darkness at the head of the stairs, and as to seeing customers behind the counter.

Mr. Lewis closed his case.

Frederick G. Richardson, painter and decorator, said he was formerly in partnership with the plaintiff. On one occasion, in March last, he went down these stairs into the basement with plaintiff. They followed the shopman down out of curiosity. Witness commented upon a machine which stood in the basement. Anyone near the stairs must hear the sound of a person walking down the stairs. He considered the stairs were easily visible to anyone walking along.

Gustav Anderson, the defendant, said that the clerks and the boys employed in the shop were constantly using these stairs, and no accident had ever happened to them. Occasionally a customer was asked to go round the counter if something special were required to be seen, but they very seldom went down the stairs. There were two flights of steps leading down. Each comprised eight steps, and were divided by a four-foot landing. A man going down the steps could be easily heard some distance away.

Joseph Hy. Barnett, salesman in the employ of the defendants, said that Webb came in as they were preparing to close the shop. Webb said he wanted the lead that night, and witness thereupon went to the basement to get it. He did not ask Webb to go with him, and the only reason he could suggest why Webb should follow him was that they were on rather intimate terms. Before he went to the basement, witness and Webb were together behind the counter, looking to see if there was any white lead there. When Webb fell, witness was about half-way down the second flight of steps. With ordinary care and caution, a person would not fall going down the steps.

(Cross-examined by Mr. Lewis: Witness knew Webb was following him. When witness started, Webb said: "I'll come with you.")

Wm. Angus, the plaintiff's previous employer, said that after the accident Webb told him that the way the accident happened was that two shopmen were quarrelling as to who should go to fetch the lead, and that he (Webb) then said: "Tell me where it is, and I will get it myself."

Sir H. Juta closed his case, and counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

Maasdorp, J., said that, while not finding it proved—it might be so, or it might not—that plaintiff had been down the stairs, or knew of their existence, he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff showed negligence in having proceeded so hurriedly, when, under the circumstances, he should have stopped or proceeded slowly. If plaintiff had proceeded slowly, he (the learned judge) thought there was sufficient light for him to have seen the stairs. Judgment must therefore be for the defendant, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

MOTIONS.

KING BROS. V. WASSER- { 1906.
FALL'S ESTATE. { Feb. 10th.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the applicant, and Mr. Burton was for the respondent. This was an application on notice of motion, calling on the respondent, the executor in the estate, to show cause why a writ of execution should not be issued against the goods of the estate, for an amount of taxed costs.

Hopley, J., said it seemed to him that the executor adopted a prudent, and not a negligent, course in going into the case. The application would be refused, with costs.

ESTATE VAN DER BYL V. BAILIE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Gutsche was for the applicant, and the defendants were in default. This was an application for a variation of the previous order on the arbitrator, so that he be ordered to award to the plaintiff his three-tenths share, and to one of the defendants one-tenth share of a certain farm, and for an order on the Registrar of Deeds to pass to transfer certified copies of diagrams and other documents necessary for the purpose.

Order as prayed.

DARROLL V. DUGGAN.

Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant, and Dr. Greer was for the respondent.

This was an application to make absolute a rule calling on the trustee in the estate of Humphreys and Turkington to show cause why he should not pay over to the applicant a certain dividend in the insolvent estate, which was due to the respondent Duggan.

Dr. Greer pointed out that it would be manifestly unfair to pay over the money, when there might be a good defence put up by Duggan. The money, he thought, might be interdicted pending the hearing of a suit in the Magistrate's Court.

The matter was ordered to stand over sine die the interdict on the trustee to continue until the matter is decided in the Supreme Court.

GORDON V. UNITED PROVIDENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. Watermeyer was for the applicant, and Mr. Gardiner was for the respondent. This was an application for an order on the respondents to pay the cost of an application in this matter. The petitioner sued the respondents to compel them to allow him to inspect the share register, but before the petition was heard the respondents complied. An affidavit was put in on behalf of the defendants, denying that the inspection was refused.

Mr. Gardiner read a long affidavit by the secretary of the company.

Hopley, J., remarked that there was a great deal of argumentative matter in it. Whatever way the costs went, the costs of such an affidavit would not be allowed. People must be taught what to put in affidavits.

The defendants had no right to demand what reasons the applicant had for demanding to see the share register. When the inspection was tendered, the company ought to have paid any costs incurred. The respondents would be ordered to pay the costs.

HEYDENBYCH V. STANDARD { 1906.
BANK AND OTHERS. { Feb. 12th.
" " 21th.

Insolvency—Preference—General covering bond—Future advances—Tacking incumbrances—Privity of debt—Privity of registration—Cession of bond.

C., being a customer of the respondent bank, ceded to the bank, as security for promissory notes of M. & Co. in his favour discounted and to be discounted for him by the bank, a duly registered general covering bond for £5,000, passed in his favour by M. & Co. Upon the insolvency of M. & Co., the respondent trustee awarded to the bank a preference over the morables in respect of debts incurred by M. & Co. to C. after the date of the cession.

Held, that it was no valid ground of objection on the part of the appellant, in whose favour a special covering bond, with the general clause, had been passed after C.'s bond, that the debts proved by the bank were incurred after the date of the cession.

Held, however, that inasmuch as a mortgage under a covering bond only takes effect as the debts thereby covered are incurred, the bank was not entitled to a preference over the appellant in respect of debts incurred by M. & Co. to C. after the date of debts incurred by M. & Co. to the appellant under his duly registered covering bond.

This was an appeal from a judgment given by the Hon. Mr. Justice Buchanan in an action brought in the Supreme Court by the present appellant, Benjamin G. Heydenrych, financier, Observatory-road, against the respondents, for an order for the amendment of a certain account and plan of distribution in the insolvent estate of Mackie, Young, and Co. Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) was for appellant; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), was for respondents.

Mr. Burton said that in his account the trustee distributed the proceeds of the estate among certain of the preferent creditors, and he gave the Standard Bank a preference upon certain bonds, which were in their possession, as against the applicant's bonds. The original application called upon the respondents to show cause why the account and plan of distribution should not be amended as to a sum of £2,603 1s. 1d. awarded to the Standard Bank upon a proof of debt for £6,000 odd, on the ground that the claim made by the said bank was in respect of liabilities incurred by the respondents subsequent to the cession of the bonds to the said bank, and that the said amount be awarded to other bondholders in their order of preference.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There are no facts in dispute; it is a simple question of law.]

Mr. Burton (proceeding) said that the applicant had certain special bonds over the insolvent estate, viz., May 17, 1902, £500; January 7, 1903, £600; and May 8, 1903, £500. There was also a bond dated June 11, 1904, which did not come into the case at all.

[De Villiers C. J.: Those were special bonds, but a question arises under the general clauses?]

Mr. Burton acquiesced. Continuing, counsel said that the bank held two bonds, of £5,000 and £3,000 respectively, but the latter might properly be dismissed from the case, as the preference was eaten up by the first bond. Now, the first bond was dated the 23rd April, 1901, but it was passed by Mackie, Young, and Co. to Creswell, Sons, and Co., who were the supporting firm in England of Mackie, Young, and Co.'s business in South Africa. With the bond was an agreement between the parties for advancing certain sums of money, and the bond was to be given in order to cover the advances. On the 12th December, 1902, or prior to the two bonds of the applicant in 1903, the original bondholders or mortgagees ceded out and out that bond of April, 1901, to the Standard Bank, and the question now was whether, in respect of any advances made in the first bond of £5,000, after the date of the cession, the bank could claim preference as against the bonds of the applicant, which were passed subsequently to the cession to the bank.

This appeal is brought on the grounds

(1) that the preference claimed by the Standard Bank under a certain general mortgage bonds is in respect of liabilities incurred by the insolvents subsequent to the cession of the bonds to the Bank by virtue of which they claim and they ask that the amount awarded to them be awarded to other bondholders in order of preference. (2) The charge of £1 10s. 4d. made for collecting rents should be met by the trustee as he charged commission on these rents. The appellant had certain bonds passed to him on May 17th, 1902, January 7th, 1903, and March 8th, 1903. In 1901 there was a bond for £5,000 passed by Mackie, Young and Co., and bonds were also passed on April 23rd, 1901, and December 12th, 1902. Before December 12th, 1902, the advances to the firm did not amount to anything like £5,000. After the cession Creswell and Co. made further advances, and the question now is whether the claim of the appellant is not preferent to claims in respect of these further advances. A bond is only a security for a debt which exists at the time it is passed.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Cannot a covering bond be ceded as security for a future debt?]

Creswell and Co. made advances after they had ceded to the bank. They can have no preference in respect of these. All the bills enumerated at pages 23 and 45 of the record were subsequent to the date of the cession. Most of these bills were given to Mackie, discounted by Creswell and then ceded to the bank. A mortgagor cannot cede greater rights than he himself possesses. If he cede a bond it only carries preference up to the date of cession. The bank denies that the bond was ever ceded out and out, and says that it was merely deposited as collateral security. If the bond was ceded out and out they could have preference up to the date of cession. If it was a mere security the bank has no locus standi, and it is for the bondholder to sue. The relations between Creswell and the insolvents are very different from those subsisting between the bank and the insolvents. As to the rights of a cessionary, see Van Zyl's Judicial Practice (p. 570, 1st edit.). A bond is only a security for advances already made, Burge's Colonial Law (vol. 3, p. 218).

[De Villiers, C.J.: What law is he there speaking of?]

The Roman Dutch Law. He cites Dig. (20.4.12) and Carpovius.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was the cession to the bank absolute?]

Yes, see p. 27 of the record.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But would not the Court read that cession as having been by way of security?]

He cannot both retain a right and cede it.

[Maasdorp, J.: The original creditor does not necessarily lose all his right because he has ceded his bond.]

No doubt he may cede it as collateral security, but that must be clearly expressed, and such a cession gives the cedent no preference.

[Maasdorp, J.: Suppose a creditor advances money on a bond which has been pledged, cannot he get preference?]

There would be no preference if a third creditor were prejudiced. Our point is that possibly Creswell may have been satisfied by Mackie. Creswell has transferred his bond to the bank.

Buchanan, J., found that there was no debt due from Mackie to the bank. A bank may hold documents as security, but that does not make it a legal holder and would give no preference. Either Creswell or the bank has a preference for advances exceeding £1,500; both cannot have it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The bond was passed to Creswell for advances both past and future. He cedes this bond to the bank. Cannot that bond ceded stand as security for future advances? What has been ceded?]

Certainly no preference for future advances.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why not? If a bond covers future advances, why cannot the right to these be ceded?]

There is no privity of contract between Mackie and the bank.

See p. 26 of the Record for the terms of the bond.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The bond ceded was an obligation for future debts to Creswell. Under a covering bond one cannot recover more than the sum actually advanced. A document like a bond may secure future rights.]

For similar cases I refer to Trustees of Western Province Bank v. Horack (5 Searle, 122). There the Western Province Bank was in the same position as the bank here. In no case like this has a claim for a preference ever been allowed.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Has it ever been made?]

Presumably.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is there any decision to show that a first mortgagee would have preference over a second mortgagee in respect of debts incurred by an insolvent after a cession of the mortgage?]

I cannot contend that there is.

Mr. Searle (for the respondents): In this case the terms of the bond have not been complied with. The Standard Bank hold the bond and are the persons who have advanced money. At

p. 26 of the record the other side would wish to read into the bond the words "as long as Creswell is owner of the bond," but these words are not there. Our law allows almost any rights to be ceded; see Burge's Colonial Law (Vol. 3 p. 218). If in that passage the words "assignee of the first mortgagee" are in the nominative case, the reference to "tacking" gives no sense. Ord. 24 of 1846 (p. 411 in Vol. 1 of the Statutes) gives the conditions as to general bonds and was applied in Hare v. Heath's Trustee (3 Juta, 32). Heydenrych cannot be prejudiced by the arrangement between the bank, Creswell and Mackie, Young and Co.; see Maasdorp's Colonial Law (Vol. 2, p. 271). It is immaterial whether there was an out and out cession of the bond to the bank, or whether it was held as security. Trautman v. Imperial Fire Co. (11 S.C.R., 38). The passage of Burge cited on the other side is made clear by the reference given to Pothier's Pandects 20-4-1 to 32), Netherlands Bank v. Frank's Liquidators (Trans. Sup. Ct., 1904, p. 554).

Mr. Burton (in reply): This bond states an obligation on the part of Mackie, Young to Creswell; if it is made to mean anything more than this personal contract we shall have departed from the terms of the bond. The bank cannot have greater rights than Creswell had. As to accessory obligations see Voet (20-1-18).

Postea (February 24th). Mr. Burton argued on the question of preference granted to a covering bond and cited the case of In re Carter (2 Menz, 341), and Van Zyl's Judicial Practice (p. 568, 1st edit.), Hollandsche Consult (Vol. 1, Num. 291, p. 469). There it was held that preference dated only from the time the money was advanced. See also Vol. 4 (Num. 134, p. 228). Maasdorp's Institutes (Vol. 2, p. 272); Voet (20-1-20) and (20-4-30). The practice of this Colony is clearly opposed to both Voet and the Consultations. A general bond has no validity, unless consideration has been given.

Mr. Searle (in reply): The point now raised is very important inasmuch as it affects our whole practice. See The Discount Bank v. Daves (1 Menz, 380); see the passage of Voet cited by Maasdorp.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That is quite in accord with our Ordinance.]

It is now sought to upset the Colonial practice during the last 60 years. The point has never been definitely decided, but the established practice has always been upheld, and if the opposite principle should be now adopted general bonds would be so much waste paper.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it not the practice of houses who accept covering bonds to expressly stipulate that the person who gives them shall pass no further bonds without their consent?]

Yes, but our whole practice will be upset should it be held that the preference on such a bond dates only from the time an actual advance is made. Hure v. Heatlie's Trustee (3 Juta, 32), S.A. Loan and Mercantile Mutual v. Cape Bank (6 Juta, 184), Brink, N. O. v. High Sheriff (12 S.C.R., 414), Burge, Vol. 3 (216-217), Act 19 of 1871, Sec. 9, Pothier (24-15), In re Rousseau (1 Menz, 479).

De Villiers, C.J.: At the date of the insolvency of Mackie, Young and Co., the respondent bank was the holder of a general bond passed by the insolvents in favour of Creswell, Sons and Co., on the 23rd of April, 1901, and by them ceded to the bank on the 12th of December, 1902. The bond was for £5,000, but it was really a covering bond for past and future advances, and the amount was fixed, not as showing the actual indebtedness at the time of the passing of the bond, but in order to fix the amount, in compliance with the 4th section of Ordinance 28 of 1846, beyond which future advances should not be deemed to be covered. The cession to the bank purported to be an absolute one, but it is clear from the dealings between the parties that it was the ordinary case of a bank discounting the bills of its customer, and receiving, as continuing security, a bond passed in favour of such customer by his debtor. The bank, therefore, if it recovered from the debtor more than the amount due to it by such customer, would be bound to account for the difference to the customer. The bank proved on the insolvent estate for the sum of £8,000, and stated in the affidavit of proof that it held as security for the debt certain covering bonds including the bond now in question. Annexed to the proof was a statement showing that the amount of the debt was made up of promissory notes endorsed by the insolvents, and, lastly, by Creswell, Sons and Co., for whom they had been discounted by the bank. The first of these notes was dated the 20th of July, 1903, and the last on the 15th of December, 1904. The trustee, in his distribution account, awarded a preference to the bank, under the bond, in respect of the impledged moveable assets of the insolvent, over general bonds passed by the insolvent after the registration of the bond now in question. The appellant, who had proved on the estate under the general clause of certain bonds passed in his favour by the insolvents, objected to the award. The bonds in his favour were bonds for £500, £600, £500, and £600 passed and registered on May 17, 1902, 7th January, 1903, 8th May, 1903, and 11th June, 1904 respectively, mortgaging certain immovable property, but containing the general clause. These bonds were also covering bonds for past and future advances. The debts covered by the bonds and proved in the insolvent estate by the applicant were made up mainly of promissory notes made by the insolvents in his favour. The date of the first of these notes was August 1, 1902, and the last June 15, 1904. The ground of the objection was that, although the applicant's bond was of a later date than the bank's bond, the latter could not claim a preference inasmuch as the liabilities thereby secured had been incurred subsequent to the cession of the bond to the bank. An application to a Divisional Court for an amendment of the account having been refused, the present appeal has been brought before a full Court.

I must say at the outset that I fully agree with the learned Judge in the Court below that the bank was entitled to the same preference as the firm of Creswell, Sons and Co. would have had upon the insolvent estate if they had not parted with the bond. The contract between that firm and the insolvents was that all debts which should thereafter be incurred by the latter to the former should be secured by the continuing bond, and the contract between the bank and the firm was that whatever rights should from time to time accrue to the firm under the bond should enure to the benefit of the bank in security for its claim against the firm. The firm if it had retained the bond, would have been entitled to any preference thereby conferred in respect of debts incurred at any time after the registration of the bond, and, by ceding the bond to the bank as a security, it ceded to the bank the right to such preference even in respect of debts incurred after the date of the cession. In support of the contrary view, reliance has been placed upon the following passage in 3 Burge's Commentaries, page 218: "A third mortgagee succeeding to the place of the first mortgagee, or an assignee of the first mortgagee, would not obtain a preference over the second mortgagee for any debt except that of the first mortgagee. He could not, therefore, tack his third to the prior mortgage." The passage, however, cited by Burge from the Digest (20-4-12, sec. 4), shows that he was contemplating a very different state of facts from the present, and it certainly does not support the inference drawn from it on behalf of the appellant. Under the law of England, if a third incumbrancer by mortgage, without notice of a second incumbrance at the time of lending his money, purchases the first legal mortgage, even after notice of the second mortgage, equity will tack both incumbrances in his favour; so that as the report in the old case of Marsh v. Lee (2 Venta, 337) has it, "the third mortgagee shall thereby squeeze out and gain priority over the second mortgagee." The passage cited by Burge makes it clear that under the Roman law the third mortgagee, by acquiring the first mortgage, could acquire no greater rights, as against the second mortgagee, than those enjoyed by the first mortgagee, but it makes it equally clear that the third mortgagee, by stepping into the shoes of the first mortgagee, would enjoy the same rights as the latter would otherwise have enjoyed. I am unable, therefore, to agree that the mere fact of the debts proved by the bank having been incurred after the date of the cession of the bond deprives the bank of the preference to which the firm which ceded the bond would have been entitled.

Strangely enough it appears to have been at first admitted on behalf of the appellant that Mackie, Young and Co. would have been entitled, but for the cession, to preference in respect of debts incurred to them by the insolvents subsequent to the date of debts secured by the applicant's bond. These debts, it is said, relate back to the respective dates of the registration of the bonds and their relative preference must be regulated by the dates of priority of the bonds. I cannot, however, find any authority for such relating back, but, on the contrary, the opinion expressed in the Dutch Consult (1.291) is an express authority to the contrary. It is there laid down that where a bond is passed to secure future advances there is no mortgage until the debt is actually incurred and the jurisconsult adds that so far from the creation of the debt being drawn back to the date of the bond, it should rather be held that the creation of the mortgage is deferred to the date of the incurring debt on the principle that an accessory obligation follows the principal, and not the reverse. A similar doctrine is even more emphatically laid down by three eminent Dutch lawyers in a consultation reported in 4 Dutch Consult, 134, and their opinions are cited with approval by Voet (20-4-30).

During the re-argument on appeal a passage was cited by the respondents' counsel from Chief Justice Maasdorp's excellent "Institutes of Cape Law" (Book 2, ch. 33) to the effect that "a bond in security of future advances dates, not from the day when the advances were actually made, but from the date of the registration of the bond." If this passage was intended to mean that the date of the registration of such a covering bond fixes the date when, in competition with other preferent creditors, the mortgage operates upon all debts subsequently incurred by the mortgagor to the mortgagees this view would be in direct conflict with part of a passage from Voet's commentaries immediately before cited by the learned Chief Justice himself. In that passage, Voet (20-4-30) points out, among other things, that a mortgage may be constituted for a debt which is suspended by a condition, and he holds that when once the condition is fulfilled the bond will have the same effect as if no condition had been inserted. He adds, however, that if the nature of the obligation to which the condition is attached be such that it depends upon the mortgagor whether or not the condition takes effect, it must on the contrary be held that he must have the preference in whose favour a later bond was passed for an unconditional debt before the condition of the first obligation took effect. Further on Voet proceeds thus: "It is upon this ground also that certain Dutch jurists advised that where a house had been mortgaged coram lege loci by an innkeeper for such ale or wine of uncertain quantity as might in future be sold and delivered to him by a brewer or wine merchant, the mortgage and preference did not take effect until the date of the sale and delivery of the wine and beer (Dutch Consultations 1. consult. 291, and part 4, consult. 134). Although according to more recent ordinances of Holland such a mortgage for an uncertain debt still to be incurred would not bind immovable property unless the amount to be brought within the obligation were fixed and the fortieth part of the amount" — being the Government revenue for the registration of the bond — "were paid into the Treasury." The inference drawn by the respondents' counsel from this last sentence that the Legislature of Holland had altered the rule previously laid down by Voet is not justified by anything said by the author. The sentence begins with the word "quamquam," which Berwick translates by "but," whereas the more correct rendering would be "Although." The requirement that the bond should be for a definite amount can have no bearing on the question whether the mortgage takes effect before the debt under a covering bond is actually incurred. It is admitted that if debts of a less amount than the stipulated sum are incurred the mortgage would only operate upon the sum total of the debts thus incurred, although duty had been paid in respect of the full stipulated sum. In the same way there is no inconsistency whatever in holding that the mortgage only arises as the debts are respectively incurred. If any of the debts are paid off the amount of the debt for which preference can be awarded in case of the debtor's insolvency is, pro tanto, diminished, and if fresh debts are thereafter incurred the preference, in competition with other creditors, must be regulated by the dates when those fresh debts were incurred. No case has been cited from any of the South African Courts that is inconsistent with the Dutch law thus laid down, and the remaining question is whether the Ordinance 28 of 1846 in any way modified the law. That Ordinance required that a covering bond should state that the same is intended to cover and secure future advances, and should express the sum beyond which such future advances should not be deemed to be covered, but the Ordinance in no way recognised the existence of any debt as a preferent claim until the debt was actually incurred. The proviso to the fourth section expressly provides that nothing therein contained should be construed so as to give validity or effect to any instrument or any part of any instrument which before the Ordinance would have been invalid or ineffectual. Van Zyl, in his Judicial practice (page 569), recognises the continued existence of the Dutch law on the point, for he says: "A bond may be passed for debts not yet or to be incurred, but it cannot give jus prioritatis, until the debt has actually been incurred, from which date or dates only the preference begins. For instance, take the case of what is commonly called the ordinary covering bond. The accounts between the parties should show what is due from time to time and the dates on which the various transactions took place. The bond should be for a maximum sum for the purpose of registration, but the mortgagee is always liable to prove what is due to him and from when." If a different doctrine has been followed by many trustees in the distribution of insolvent estates, such a practice cannot, in the absence of any judicial recognition of its legality, be binding in this court. A practice of this kind would not be such a "reasonable custom" as to justify the Court in declaring that the Dutch Law had been abrogated by disuse, in terms of Seaville v. Colley (9 Juta, 39). In my opinion the question of preference between two competing creditors under registered covering bonds does not depend merely upon the priority of registration of the bonds, but upon priority of the respective debts themselves. The dates when the respective debts were incurred are the dates when the respective bonds begin to operate in respect thereof. The bond of which the bank was the holder was registered before the bond in favour of the applicant, but if any of the debts secured under the bank's bond were incurred after the applicant had made advances under his duly registered bond, such advances should be paid in preference to subsequent credits given to the insolvents by the firm of Creswell, Sons and Co.

under their prior bond. Three of the applicants' bonds, amounting together to £1,600, had been registered and debts to the amount of £1,500 appear to have been incurred thereunder before any of the debts proved by the bank appear to have been incurred. It is possible, however, that some of the promissory notes proved by the bank may have been renewals of previous notes made by the insolvents in favour of the firm, in which case the dates when the debts really originated should be regarded as the date when the bond began to operate in respect thereof. Upon this point there is not sufficient information to enable the Court to give a definite decision. Upon the information now before the Court it appears to be extremely probable that it will be found that a larger preference has been awarded to the bank than it is entitled to, but the ground of the objection has been wrongly stated by the applicant in his original notice to the trustee and his subsequent motion before the Court. To save the costs of a further reference to the Court, a direction will now be given that a fresh distribution should be made according to which preference under the different covering bonds must be awarded according to priority of the dates when the debts respectively proved were originally incurred. As the judgment now proceeds upon grounds which were not urged in the Court below and not even on the first hearing of the appeal. I am of opinion that the costs in this Court, as well as in the Court below, must be paid by the insolvent estate, and that to this extent the judgment of the Court below should be amended.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp and Mr. Justice Hopley concurred.

REX V. DE KLERK.

1906.
Feb. 12th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of Gordonia, who had convicted the appellant (David F. de Klerk) of wrongfully and unlawfully selling or dealing in intoxicating liquors without a licence, and had sentenced him to pay a fine of £50, or, in default, three months' imprisonment with hard labour.

The grounds of appeal were: (1) That the summons charged the accused with contravening section 75 of Act 18 of 1883, there being no section 75 of the said Act, and that the summons was, therefore, vague and bad in law; and

2) that the conviction was contrary to the weight of evidence.

The record showed that one Jacobus Benadie said that he bought two cases of beer, each containing three dozen bottles, from the accused, and paid him £5 5s. The transaction took place at Narangas. The defence was that the beer was left by accused, who was a transport rider, with Benadie for storage.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the accused was correctly charged at the hearing under the Act 28, and not Act 18, as set out in the summons, but no exception was taken at the trial, and he submitted that the point could not be raised in appeal. As to the case itself, he came to the conclusion that the story told by the defendant was an invention from beginning to end. The only reason he could offer as to why Benadie should make these damning statements was because he had drunk the beer.

Dr. Greer was for appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Dr. Greer said that it was not proposed to press the first ground of the appeal. He went on to comment on the discrepancies in the evidence for the prosecution, and argued that the Magistrate had drawn the wrong deduction from the evidence.

Without calling upon Mr. Jones,

Maasdorp, J.: I don't think the Court can interfere with the finding of the Magistrate in this case. As to the first point, it appears to have been merely a clerical error, and it was set right before the accused was called upon to plead, and, furthermore, there does not appear to have been any prejudice to the accused in consequence of this mistake, and its subsequent correction. The second ground of appeal is that the conviction was contrary to the weight of evidence. Now, it seems that there is a very clear and positive statement made by the purchaser of the liquor to prove the sale of the liquor, and the Magistrate has accepted his evidence as reliable, and taken it in preference to the evidence in contradiction of it given by the accused. I can find nothing in the proceedings which would lead me to believe that the Magistrate has acted wrongly in the view he took as to the credibility of the purchaser of the liquor. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

JOOIAMSIEN V. STIGANT. CHANTREY AND CO., LTD.

This was an appeal from a judgment given by the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg in an interpleader suit, to which the present appellant was claimant and the respondents were defendants.

From the record it appeared that certain goods were attached by respondents under a judgment for £18 8s. 11d. and costs, which they had obtained against one S. A. Esop. Esop had carried on business as a shopkeeper in Broad-road, Wynberg, and an agreement was entered into between him and the appellant whereby the stock and business was sold to Joolamsien for £199 17s. 11d., against which £15, due to appellant for wages, was set off, and the balance was to be paid off at the rate of £4 a month. The appellant claimed that the goods were his bona fide property, but the Magistrate, after hearing one side only, gave judgment, declaring the goods executable, with costs.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that he was unable to accept the claimant's version of the transaction. His evidence appeared to be wholly unreliable. The man Esop a few days after the summons was issued against him mysteriously disappeared. The whole matter was so suspicious, and the evidence of the claimant was, to his mind, so unreliable, that he (the Magistrate) felt justified in considering that the contract between Joolamsien and Esop was not bona fide, but was entered into with a view of defeating the latter's creditors.

Dr. Greer was for appellant; Mr. Benjamin was for respondents.

Dr. Greer argued that the evidence and the agreement showed that the appellant had acted bona fide in purchasing the stock and business, that the goods were the appellant's, and that the Magistrate's decision was therefore wrong.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the whole transaction between appellant and Esop was of such an extraordinary character that the Magistrate was quite justified in holding that it was not bona fide. A strange feature of the business was that Esop, who was supposed to be the creditor of Joolamsien, should have mysteriously disappeared.

Dr. Greer having been heard in reply,

Maasdorp, J.: "At the interpleader proceedings before the Magistrate, there was no evidence given by the respondent in this case to meet the evidence given by the claimant. As a matter of fact, this shop did at one time belong to Esop, and the burden of proof was therefore thrown upon the claimant that, after these debts had been contracted, he did become the bona fide purchaser of Esop's shop. It appears that nothing was really paid by the claimant to Esop. On the whole of the transaction, there does not appear to have been any consideration paid at all. It is stated that there was a sum of £15 for wages due by Esop to the claimant, but it is really a question whether there was any debt due at all by Esop to claimant. It seems to me that the Magistrate has taken a correct view in this case, and that there was not sufficient evidence before him to show that this was a bona fide transaction. Bona fides would have been proved by the fact that something had passed between Esop and claimant, but not one single sixpence had passed, except that doubtful statement that there was a release from a claim for wages. Under all these circumstances, the Court cannot interfere with the finding of the Magistrate, and the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

MUZLAK V. DONNITHORNE.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of the Cape, sitting at Woodstock, in an action brought by the appellant against the respondent to recover certain articles, or their value. In the Court below, an exception, taken by respondent, that the wrong party had been sued, was allowed.

It appeared that the plaintiff claimed in the Court below for the return of certain granite pillars, step-ladders, iron railings, etc., or payment of their value, £5 5s. Plaintiff had had certain property in Victoria-road, Woodstock, and the defendant had carried out certain repairs there, the property having been sold to one Chapman. Donnithorne had built in the granite, broken the ladders, and deprived plaintiff of other property.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that he granted absolution from the instance, because it was not clear from plaintiff's evidence whether Donnithorne or Chapman, or both, trading as Donnithorne and Co., were liable.

Dr. Greer was for appellant, Felix Muzlak; Mr. Burton was for respondent.

Dr. Greer submitted that the case should be sent back to the Magistrate to be tried on its merits, because clearly, whatever his position, Donnithorne was the proper person to be sued. It was not denied that the articles were the plaintiff's, but he was knocked about from pillar to post, and kept out of his remedy. Plaintiff had a prima facie ground for suing Donnithorne, and Donnithorne had not shown that he was not liable.

Mr. Burton said that Donnithorne had been sued individually. The contractors for the alterations were Donnithorne and Co., of which Chapman is a sort of partner. According to the evidence, either Chapman or Donnithorne and Co. should have been sued.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case sued for the return of certain property belonging to him or its value. It would be very difficult to gather from the evidence what case it is that the plaintiff contends he has made out, because it would appear that plaintiff had lived in this house first, and afterwards sold this house to Mr. Chapman, and at the time of the sale some of the articles were left upon the premises, and consequently upon the premises of Mr. Chapman and in Mr. Chapman's possession. Mr. Chapman had improvements made, and some of these articles seem to have been used by the workmen for the benefit of Mr. Chapman. Under these circumstances, unless some responsibility can be fixed upon some other individual, the claim for the things would be against the person who possesses them. A claim is made against defendant, and in what particular capacity he is sued does not appear, because at one time he is treated as having acted merely as foreman of Chapman, and then he is taken to be a member of the firm. Under these circumstances, if his workmen did wrong, the responsibility would be upon the firm, but not upon the individual personally. The difficulty is to find out that the defendant has made himself responsible in this case. I think that the Magistrate was quite right in saying that he found it impossible to fix any direct responsibility upon the defendant in this case. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

{ 1906.
Feb. 12th.

Magistrate's jurisdiction — Counterclaim — Costs — Circuit Court.

In a Magistrate's Court the appellant had been sued for a certain debt and put in a counter-claim for £10 10s. 6d. as witness expenses at a certain Circuit Court trial. The Magistrate dismissed the counter-claim, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to tax costs in the Circuit Court.

Held, that the matter of counter-claim must be remitted back to the Magistrate to decide on the merits.

Semble, in his decision the Magistrate should allow costs on the Circuit Court scale.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Prince Albert in an action brought by the respondent against the appellant to recover a sum of £70, less £35 paid on a promissory note, with interest. The appellant put in a counter-claim for £10 10s. 6d., for his expenses as a witness for the plaintiff (Marks) in a case heard at the Circuit Court at Oudshoorn. The Magistrate gave judgment for plaintiff as prayed, with costs, and disallowed the counter-claim. Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for appellant; respondent was not represented.

Mr. De Villiers said that the Magistrate seemed to have dismissed the counter-claim because, as he understood, it had been disallowed on taxation, but in that he seemed to have been in error, as a witness's expenses as against the party by whom he was subpoenaed were not liable to taxation.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case it would appear that the counter-claim made by the defendant is within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, and it is one which would have to be proved by the defendant by evidence to be adduced. The Magistrate in his judgment says that no evidence was tendered in support of this claim, but I think that there must be a mistake there, because it would appear from the record—and the Court must be guided by the record—that a postponement was asked for to enable the defendant to adduce the necessary evidence, but the Magistrate did not entertain that application, because he ruled that he had no jurisdiction in the matter, because it was a question of costs in the Circuit Court, and he refused to proceed with the hearing of the counter-claim. The case ought to go back to the Magistrate to enter into his counter-claim on its merits, and I have no doubt that in considering the reasonableness of the demands of the defendant in this case, the Magistrate may be guided by what is allowed to witnesses under the tariff of the Circuit Court. But that is a matter which is within the discretion of the Magistrate, and he must go into the case and hear evidence upon the defendant's counter-claim. The case is referred back to the Magistrate to try defendant's counter-claim on its merits, respondent to pay costs of appeal.

Ex parte READ.

Mr. Benjamin moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of William George Read, for the attachment of certain funds standing in the Bank of Africa to the credit of Joseph Reesman, pending an action to be instituted by applicant. Petitioner said that he entered into a deed of sale with Reesman whereby he sold to the latter a cafe and tea room known as the "Corner Tea Rooms," in Oxford-street, East London, for £475, to be paid as to £400 in cash, and the balance of £75 to be secured by promissory note, due on the 1st March, 1906. Possession was to be given to Reesman of the cafe on the morning of the 12th February. This morning petitioner had received a letter from Reesman, declining to keep to his bargain. Petitioner, on making inquiries, from the stationmaster and some friends of Reesman, found that he had left by that morning's train for Johannesburg, and had thus removed from the jurisdiction of this Court. Petitioner desired to enter an action to compel Reesman to carry out the terms of the deed of sale. From the unexpected and suspicious way in which Reesman had left the Colony, petitioner had reason to believe that he had done so to avoid the consequence of any action taken against him. Respondent had a sum of £287 10s. standing to his credit in the Bank of Africa, Cape Town, and petitioner desired an order for the attachment of this money, or any other sum not exceeding £500 standing to respondent's credit.

Mr. Benjamin informed his lordship that inquiries at the Bank of Africa showed that there was £286 2s. 6d. standing to Reesman's credit.

An order was granted for the attachment of £286 2s. 6d., pending an action to be instituted by petitioner forthwith, with leave to respondent to move to have this order set aside.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

KRYNAUW V. DE BEER. } 1906.
Feb. 12th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved, as a matter of urgency, for a rule nisi, to act as an interim interdict restraining the respondent, Johannes J. de Beer, from acting on a certain power of attorney.

A rule nisi was granted, calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not deliver up the power, the rule to act as an interdict in the meantime, restraining the defendant from acting on the power, the rule returnable on the 22nd inst.

MCKAY V. MCKAY AND BISCHOFF.

This was an action for a declaration of rights under the will of the late J. T. McKay, that the defendants were bound to pay plaintiff a salary at the rate of £20 a month from March 1 to March 17, 1905, and thereafter £22 10s. a month from the next year, with an increase of £30 per annum, until his salary reached £30 a month, as long as the business was carried on, he tendering to render his services in the business, and for sums of £101 9s. 2d. and £25, with interest and costs.

The declaration set out that the plaintiffs and defendants carried on business in co-partnership in Cape Town, under the style or firm of McKay and Co., in terms of the will of the late Mr. John Thomas McKay, who died on March 17, 1902.

Under the will the plaintiff was entitled to an increase of salary amounting to £30 per annum from the date of his father's death, the said increase to continue until plaintiff was in receipt of a salary of £30 a month. The amounts due from the said business to Oreste Nannucci, and referred to in the will, were paid to him during the year 1902, within a period of two years from the date of the said J. T. McKay's death. In terms of the will plaintiff had no control of the business, the whole control being with the defendants; plaintiff continued in the business until March 13th, 1905, when he was forcibly prevented from performing his duties therein, and was ejected from the business by the second defendant. The defendants, from time to time, had disputes with plaintiff with regard to the amount of salary due to him, and other matters connected with the said business, and the defendants constantly refused, and still continue to refuse, to pay plaintiff the correct amount of salary to which he is, and has been, entitled since his late father's death. Plaintiff had received certain amounts from the defendants, on account of salary due to him, and he has also received cash and goods from March 1st, 1901, to December 31, 1904, out of the business, and paid into the said business certain sums. The plaintiff had framed a correct account of the above transactions from March, 1901, up to December 31, 1904, showing the amounts which should have been paid to him as salary, and there was a balance due to him of £101 9s. 2d. There was also due to the plaintiff £25, balance of salary for the months of January and February, 1905. The plaintiff contends that the defendants acted wrongfully and illegally in preventing him from continuing his services in the business, and ejecting him from the business. He was willing, and has tendered and hereby again tenders, to continue to render his services as before in the said business, but if defendants refuse to accept his services he contends that they were nevertheless bound to pay him the amount of his salary at the rate of £20 a month from March 1 to March 17, 1905, and thereafter £22 10s. a month for the next year, with an increase of £30 per annum until his salary reached £30 a month; the defendants dispute the above contentions.

Plaintiff claimed: (a) A declaration of his rights in the said business under the said will; (b) that the defendants are bound to pay him salary at the rate of £20 a month from March 1 to March 17, 1905, and thereafter £22 10s. a month from the next year, with an increase of £30 per annum until his salary reaches £30 a month, so long as the aforesaid business is carried on, he tendering to render his services in the said business; (c) the sums of £101 9s. 2d. and £25; (d) interest a tempore morae; (e) alternative relief; (f) costs of suit.

The will was as follows: I desire that the said business shall be disposed of as follows: One-half (½) share to my said wife Eliza Ellen McKay; one-quarter (¼) share to John Peter Asland Bischoff; one-quarter (¼) share to my son Clarence Albert McKay. And, further, that the whole control of the business shall remain with my said wife and the said John Peter Asland Bischoff, my son, the said Clarence Albert McKay, not having any control over the management thereof. It is further my desire that, until the amount due to Oreste Nannucci is fully paid off, none of the said partners shall draw any amount beyond their stipulated salaries, viz.: My said wife a sum not exceeding twenty-five (£25) per month, the said John Peter Asland Bischoff, twenty pounds (£20) sterling per month, provided that should he wish to marry at any time after the expiration of two years after my death, his salary shall be increased to thirty pounds (£30) per annum until he is receipt of a salary of thirty pounds (£30) sterling per month, my said son Clarence Albert McKay the sum of ten pounds (£10) sterling per month, with an increase of thirty pounds (£30) sterling per annum for two years after my death, when the same shall cease, provided that as soon as the amounts due to the said Nannucci are paid off such increase shall recommence and continue until my said son receives a monthly salary of thirty pounds (£30) sterling. I wish it clearly understood, however, that such salaries are not to be drawn in prejudice to the instalment due to the said Nannucci.

The defendants, in their plea, denied the construction put upon the said will by the plaintiff. They state that the true construction of the said will was that the plaintiff was to receive an increase of salary amounting to £30 per annum, beginning after the expiration of one year from the date of his father's death, the said increase to continue until the plaintiff was in receipt of a salary of £30 a month, provided he continued to be employed in the said business. They admitted that they dispensed with the services of the plaintiff, and say that they were entitled so to do, but they denied that they used any force. They stated further that the plaintiff misconducted himself in and about the discharge of his duties in the said premises, in manner hereinafter set forth and in other ways, and prejudiced the welfare of the said business, and caused the said business to lose customers. The plaintiff did not devote proper attention to the business, absented himself from business, treated certain customers with incivility, and persuaded and induced certain customers to patronise rival businesses, to the prejudice of the business of McKay and Co. They state that they owe the plaintiff the sum of £10 11s 9d., which sum they tender to the plaintiff, with costs to date. They denied that they acted wrongfully or illegally in dispensing with his services. They denied that the plaintiff was willing to continue to render his services, and state that the tender set forth was not genuine or made bona fide. The plaintiff was about to start business in competition with the business of McKay and Co. at certain premises in Longmarket-street, Cape Town, and had publicly advertised his intention shortly to open a music warehouse at the said premises.

The defendants claimed in reconvention: (1) A declaration of their rights in relation to the plaintiff in the said business. (2) An order dissolving the partnership and appointing a receiver to wind up the partnership. Or, in the alternative, in case this Honourable Court should not order the partnership to be dissolved, but not otherwise, then an order declaring that the plaintiff is not entitled to come on to the premises where the business of McKay and Co. is carried on, or to interfere with the conduct of the said business, the defendants being willing, in the event of the Court refusing to dissolve the said partnership, to give the plaintiff reasonable access to the books of the partnership and to pay to him from time to time his share of the profits, if any, of the business. (3) £100 damages. (4) Alternative relief. (5) Costs of suit.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Dr. Rainsford) for plaintiff; Mr. Gardiner for defendants.

[Buchanan, J.: The defendants should have been sued as executors under the will, as well as in their private capacity.]

Mr. Gardiner said that no objection would be offered by the defendants.

Clarence Albert McKay, plaintiff, stated his father carried on business in Church-street as a music warehouse. Six months before his father's death witness received a salary of £10 a month, which went on by increases to £15, until he left in March, 1905. Witness protested against the defendants not allowing him the increases he was entitled to. Witness, when he attained his majority, was told by Mrs. McKay that he was a partner in the business. There was no trouble until his mother returned from England in 1902, and took objection to witness's engagement to a certain lady. If he persisted in the engagement, she said she would refuse to recognise him as a son. The defendants objected to him being over an hour at his lunch. It was impossible for him to get his lunch at Rosebank in that time. Witness came into the business as early in the morning as the rest of the employees.

Witness, under cross-examination, admitted having said he did not mind whether his mother had to beg her bread. He usually arrived at the warehouse about 8.30 or 8.45 a.m., although the ordinary time for starting was at 8.15. He never persuaded people not to book at McKay's. At present he was earning £3 a week at the Tivoli, and his wife and himself did other work by way of teaching.

By Buchanan, J.: He repeatedly disobeyed the order of Bischoff.

William D. Gourlay, partner in the firm of Gourlay and Cavanagh, said prior to last July he had a music warehouse in Adderley-street, which, however, was not a success. About May he entered into negotiations with the plaintiff to open a music shop in Longmarket-street. The plaintiff was getting £12 a month as manager. Witness was satisfied with the way the plaintiff conducted the business.

Professional musicians who had had dealings with the warehouse for years said the plaintiff was always obliging and courteous.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

John A. Robertson, an accountant, stated that in January, 1905, he was called in to look after the financial affairs of the firm. Witness considered a reduction of the staff was absolutely necessary. The plaintiff was no aid to the business, owing to the friction between his mother and himself. He treated customers in an off-handed manner. Any sale at present would be prejudicial to the partnership.

By Mr. Searle: If there was a forced sale at present there would be a great loss; it would not realise the amount of the debts.

John P. A. Bischoff, partner in the firm, said he carried on the partnership under the terms of the will. Witness always had trouble with the plaintiff, who was rather rude to people he did not care about. He (witness) had to complain of the plaintiff coming late to business. He knew that there was strong objection on the part of the mother to the plaintiff getting married.

Eliza Ellen McKay said it was utterly impossible to get on with the plaintiff. It was a daily crucifixion to attempt to work with the plaintiff.

By Mr. Searle: She did not approve of the plaintiff's marriage.

This closed the evidence.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, J.: The will must be taken to mean that the plaintiff was entitled to the increase from the first month after his father's death. There would be judgment on prayer (a) for an amount of £125. It was clear that the plaintiff disobeyed orders, which, under the will he was bound to obey, and his lordship thought the conduct of the plaintiff would have justified his dismissal by any ordinary employer. There could be no judgment in his favour in regard to prayer (b). The application for a dissolution of partnership had been withdrawn, and no judgment was asked for in reconvention. Costs would be ordered out of the estate against the defendants in their capacities as executors, and also their individual capacities. The plaintiff, being a partner in the business, would not be entitled to press his claim in competition with other creditors in the estate.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REX V. DIERGARD, ALIAS { 1906.
RAAP. { Feb. 13th.

Maasdorp, J., said that, as Judge of the week, he had before him the case of Rex v. Diergard, which had been heard by the Magistrate of Van Rhyn's Dorp. Accused had been charged with contravening sub-section 12, section 7, Act 27, 1882, by wilfully trespassing in a house. He pleaded not guilty, but was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of £10, or, in default, three months' imprisonment with hard labour. The section only provided for a maximum penalty of £5, and the fine would, therefore, be reduced from £10 to £5, and the sentence amended accordingly.

Ex parte TROMP.

This was an application by Tromp, who was charged with murder, to be admitted to bail. Tromp had been charged before the Magistrate of Calvinia, and in December last he was committed for trial. An application made for bail was postponed on the Attorney-General representing to the Court that further evidence was to be led, and leave was given to petitioner to renew his application later. Further evidence had now been led, and the Attorney-General's Department consented to bail in two sureties of £1,000 each, and a personal bond of £2,000.

On the motion of Mr. Burton, order granted in terms of consent, sureties to be to the satisfaction of the Magistrate of Calvinia.

On the application of Mr. Burton, his lordship authorised the terms of order of Court to be telegraphed to Calvinia.

BRADLEY AND CRAVEN V. { 1906.
RANER. { Feb. 13th.
" 14th.
" 15th.
" 16th.
Mar. 14th.

Sale and purchase—Article guaranteed for a specific purpose—Acceptance.

This was an action brought by Bradley and Craven, machine makers, Wakefield, England, against W. Raner, builder and brickmaker, Woodstock, to recover balance of purchase price of certain brick-making plant supplied to defendant.

Plaintiffs, in their declaration, said they supplied a brickmaking plant through their representative in South Africa, Robert A. Telford, to the defendant, in June, 1903, the purchase price to be £1,700. The arrangement was that part of the price was to be paid when the machinery was delivered, and the balance upon the machinery working satisfactorily. The defendant was to put in the foundations, and do the necessary brickwork and woodwork. Plaintiffs delivered the machinery on November 21, 1903, although on that date the engine contracted for had not arrived. Defendant paid £340 on account. The machinery was in good and satisfactory working order, and was being worked on December 8, 1903. From and after that date defendant proceeded with the manufacture of bricks from the said machine. Plaintiffs admitted that there was delay in the erection of the machinery, but said that it was due to circumstances beyond their control, and they deducted £530 as and for damages sustained by defendant by reason of the delay. Defendant had remained in full possession of the said machinery from the 8th December, 1903, and had manufactured bricks, but he neglected and refused to pay the balance of the purchase price. Plaintiffs claimed £1,360, balance of the purchase price, less £530 deducted as stated, interest on the sum of £830 from December 8, 1903, and costs of suit.

Defendant, in his plea, denied that the machinery had ever been in good or satisfactory working order, and said it was a condition of the contract that the plaintiffs should work the machinery for at least ten days, and that it should turn out a minimum of 20,000 bricks a day. The machine had never turned out anything like the number of bricks contracted for, and the quality of the bricks was also defective. After December 8, 1903, the machinery was worked, but only experimentally, Telford being engaged in endeavouring, but unsuccessfully, to make the machine work. Defendant had never accepted the machine at any time as being satisfactory. After January 16, 1904, the machine ceased running, and no bricks had since been manufactured from it. He prayed that the claim be dismissed, with costs. In reconvention, defendant said that by reason of plaintiffs' breach of contract the machinery had been wholly useless to him, and he had suffered considerable loss and damage in consequence. He claimed judgment for the sum of £340, paid on account of purchase price; £1,526 10s., expended in making foundations, brickwork, and woodwork to receive the said machinery; £1,100, as and for damages caused by the failure of the plaintiffs to get the machinery to work satisfactorily, and costs. He also tendered to redeliver the machinery to the plaintiffs.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Gutsche) for plaintiff; Mr. Burton (with him Dr. Greer) for defendant.

Mr. Gardiner informed his lordship that plaintiffs admitted that the supply of 20,000 bricks a day for ten days had not been actually put out under Mr. Telford, but their evidence would go to show that that was due to the fact that defendant had not performed his part of the contract, because, among other things, he had not supplied the clay in the proper condition, the labour was defective, and the foundations he put in were not in a proper state.

Mr. Burton said that defendant's case was that he was not an expert in brick-making machinery, and that the plaintiffs' contract to supply 20,000 bricks a day had never been fulfilled, or anything like fulfilled. As to the quality of the bricks, when the smaller quantity was being turned out, 3,000 or 4,000 a day, there was no reason to complain of the quality; but afterwards, when the output was augmented, the bricks were too rough for use.

Mr. Gardiner intimated that a considerable amount of evidence had been taken on commission, including that of his principal witness, Mr. Telford.

Maasdorp, J. said that, as there would be a good deal of verbal evidence to be led, it might save the time of the Court a good deal if he read as much of the evidence taken on commission as he possibly could while he was out of court. He would endeavour to read over the evidence on commission privately.

Mr. Gardiner then proceeded to call witnesses.

David McPherson, brickmaker, in partnership with Mr. Cameron, at Walmer, explained the principles of construction and working of the machine supplied by plaintiffs. The clay on his brickfields was, he said, similar to that on the defendant's ground, and he considered that the machine supplied by plaintiffs was the best machine with which to treat that kind of clay. His firm had a similar machine, although only part of it had been supplied by Bradley and Craven. He thought a dry pan would be better than a wet one for dealing with clay of that kind. He was of opinion that the machine was quite capable of producing 20,000 bricks a day; in fact, under favourable conditions, it would turn out 30,000 a day. He had timed the machine and found that it turned out 220 bricks in a period of five minutes. He had seen stones and weeds going into the machine that ought not to have been allowed. Telford was at that time superintending the running of the machine, but he was inside the shed, and the machine was fed from the outside. He did not think the stuff put into the machine was clean. The clay was also utilised in an unfit condition, and should have been allowed to lie about for a few days to "weather." The elevator pit was damp, but should have been dry. When the clay and elevator pit were damp or wet, the result would be that the buckets would corrode and clog, and would not pick up fresh material. He had seen the elevator pit choked up owing to the dampness. He did not think the labour employed by Mr. Raner was efficient for the work. The machine turned out first-class bricks, fit for the best buildings in Cape Town.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness considered that the machine in question was quite suitable for making bricks from such clay as was found on defendant's ground. He was not aware that any other wire-cut brickmaking machine made by Bradley and Craven was in operation in the district.

Thomas Rushford gave similar evidence.

Edward Thomas Ashley, brickmaker, said that with the scraper in the position where he found it to-day, the pan could not turn out 10,000 bricks a day. It was possible that the scraper might have been shifted into its present position by reason of feeding the machinery with stones, or throwing too much material into the pan. He found ashes, glass, and a piece of slipper, which had evidently been intended to be mixed with the clay; the stuff was lying on a high platform. As to the brick produced in Court by defendant, he considered that its rough and soft condition was due to the ash having been introduced into the clay at the wrong stage. The machinery was now in a disgracefully neglected condition. In December, 1903, bricks were about 72s. 6d. per 1,000; in January, 1904, they had dropped to 48s. or 50s., and the price had been dropping ever since. Under proper conditions, with suitable labour and the cleaning of the machinery, the plant would easily be able to turn out 20,000 per day.

Cross-examined: Witness had been interested in brickmaking about 14 years. He was formerly an attorney, but he did not see how that affected the question.

[Maasdorp, J.: If you were an attorney, you would make a better brick-maker.]

Mr. Burton (to witness): I am not suggesting anything wrong, you know.

By the Court: Witness could find nothing wrong with the machinery supplied by the plaintiffs. He thought any brickmaking plant would work the clay on defendant's ground.

John Auchterlonie, builder, said that he saw Raner's brickworks just before Christmas, 1903. He found that the yard was wet, and that no attempt had been made to dry it. The machine was turning out a first-class brick. The labourers employed in taking away the bricks from the machine at times did not keep pace with the output.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: Witness did not say that the wetness of the yard would affect the clay.

John S. Cameron, of the Walmer Brickworks, said that if the machine had been kept going and had been fed properly, it would have turned out the minimum quantity of 20,000 bricks a day. The fault was that defendant employed inexperienced men in running the business, both in regard to feeding and tending the machine, and taking away the bricks. He did not blame the supervision.

Cross-examined: Witness had been engaged in brickmaking about four years, and, like his partner (McPherson), had previously been a plumber. He had been in the brickmaking trade less than a year, when he made the inspection at defendant's works. He did not find fault with the quantity of labour employed in off-setting the bricks, but rather with the quality. He thought that an ordinary experienced off-setter would be able to deal with about 5,000 bricks a day. He believed that about seven labourers were employed by defendant. Witness did not see any barrows go off the iron plate track, or be upset when the bricks were being taken to the hacks.

By the Court: Witness's firm were making 15,000 or 16,000 bricks a day, but they had a reason for not exceeding that output. With full steam power, he believed they could produce by their machinery about 35,000 bricks a day. In his opinion Raner's machine was equal to that of his own firm.

Theo. C. Rogers, formerly a brick-maker, at Sea Point, having given evidence,

James D. Treadway, brick-setter, formerly in defendant's employ, said that in the summer of 1904 he took a contract in partnership with one Williams to make certain bricks. The scraper of the machine seemed to be too high, and they threw stones into the pan to keep the clay loose. He thought the perforated grates must have been broken by those stones. The clay was very damp; they did not "weather" it, but simply put it into the machine as it came from the bank. The elevator pit was wet; the buckets came down without clearing their contents, and they had to strike the buckets to get the clay off. After a week's work, they gave up the machinery, because it did not pay, the output being 4,000 or 5,000, and one day 9,000.

Mr. Gardiner: This is the man they employed to make an experiment with the machinery.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness had not previously had charge of a machine. He thought he could manage a machine. He thought the machine at defendant's brickyard was out of order, or he should have got better results. The engineman told him that they had done better with the machine than anybody else had done, and that there had been a good many trying it. Williams took him in as a partner, and he was to share any profit. Williams paid him 30s. at the end of the week. Williams was trying the machine to see if it could turn out 20,000 bricks a day. The trial was made in October, 1904. The stones were thrown into the pan from a bucket, and would be about the size of his fist.

Richard C. Broughton, builder and contractor, Cape Town, having given evidence, Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

John Stotter described the labour employed at Mr. Raner's works up to the time when the machine in question was stopped at the end of January, 1904. He stated that the burners and off-setters and others were all experienced and suitable men for the work. The first bricks were made by the machine on the 8th December. Mr. Walker, representing the plaintiffs, superintended the laying of the foundations and other arrangements for receiving the machinery. Mr. Walker erected the machinery. The machinery commenced running under his supervision, and continued for some days, until Mr. Telford came, and the operations were continued under their joint control. Witness had had 25 years' experience of brickmaking machinery. This machine worked all right as a machine, but the output at first was only 4,000 or 5,000 up to about 8,000. Subsequently the figures ran as follows: 9,600, 9,200, 13,300, 11,100, 8,000, 11,000, 8,700, 9,000, 6,000, 13,000, 17,500. The last day of working was January 12, 1904. When the output was about 7,000 or 8,000 a good brick was produced. The whole fault, to his mind, was the construction of the pan. Witness suggested to Mr. Telford that the best pan to deal with soapy clay such as they had would be a wet pan. Mr. Telford thought they should have a dish pan, but when it came it was found to be an open base pan. Witness considered that with that clay it was quite impossible to put through the grates anything like 12,000 or 13,000 bricks per day on the average. With some kinds of clay the grates would pass through 30,000 or 40,000 bricks a day. The grates (produced) were drilled afresh after they had been in use a little while, with the result that matters were made worse, the holes being plugged immediately. Fresh grates were tried with large slots, but the result was that the elevators became choked. Telford told him on the 12th January that he was disgusted with the products of the machine, and that he was done with it. The bricks when the higher output was reached were unsuitable for use. They all did their very best on the 12th January to see if it were possible to get 20,000 bricks out of the machine. The machine ran a few days after the 12th January, but witness did not again see Telford at the brickfield. No more work was got out of the machine. Witness remained with Raner until February, 1905. In the meantime they went on making bricks by hand. Witness went to Johannesburg about 12 months ago. There was a good demand for bricks at the time the machine was being tried. They could have got a fair margin at 40s. a thousand bricks. Witness was a contractor under Raner, and he was to receive 25s. a thousand.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Witness had a three years' contract to produce bricks on defendant's field. He did not know that the Pole whom Raner was getting out in 1904 was to be manager of the brickfields. He knew that Raner made an application to the Supreme Court in consequence of the action of the Immigration Officers, but witness never regarded this man as in any way manager of the brickfields. He would probably be foreman of the stables. Witness admitted that he had handed a statement (produced) to one Sykes in Johannesburg of evidence which he might give. He did not write out the statement, but he had read it over. The statement was written out for a consideration for Mr. Thornton. He admitted that the document contained the following passage: "I was repeatedly warned by Raner not to hurry on the starting of the machine." Raner, however, never interfered with him.

Mr. Gardiner: In order to help Thornton to get a consideration from Sykes, you handed him personally that statement as a statement of evidence which you might give, and you then led Sykes to believe that you might say that Raner repeatedly warned you not to hurry on the starting of the machine, and you were warned, as you say, by Mr. Raner, not to show your hand, and you were hindering the working of the machine, but were compelled to do so?

Witness: I was never interfered with by Mr. Raner. While I am here, I defy anyone to contradict anything I have said.

Mr. Gardiner: What do you mean by "while I am here"?

Witness: While I am in this dock.

Mr. Gardiner: Box, Mr. Stotter, not dock at present. You mean to say that when you are not in the box you are not a truthful man.

Witness: I meant to say that I could say what I thought I would without injuring myself in any way.

Mr. Gardiner: Then, again, you say that the machine, as fixed and arranged at that time, or now, would turn out 30,000 first-class bricks in one day of ten working hours, provided she were manned by a full staff of average workmen, and that, as a test, you would undertake to do it?

Witness: Yes, with good clay, so I would; but not with that clay.

Mr. Gardiner: Furthermore, "At this time, to my disgust, Mr. Raner had come to the conclusion that there was more in trying to claim £10 a day than there was in working the machine." Is that so?

Witness: He never interfered, and he never said anything about what he would get for his time. I worked the machine for all it was worth. In further cross-examination, he said that he had been subpoenaed to give evidence by both sides, and he had drawn travelling expenses from both. He had received £10 from plaintiff's solicitors in Johannesburg.

Re-examined: He made the statement in question in order to assist a man in getting work in Johannesburg. Sykes was the Johannesburg manager for Bradley and Craver, and after the statement had been made, Sykes got work for Thornton to look after an American machine on one of the mines. Sykes approached witness in the first instance.

Thomas Laws gave evidence as to the stoppage of the machine and the rough bricks it produced. Some of the bricks were wheeled back to the clay-pit, as they were not fit to burn.

Postea (February 14th):

Mr. Burton said that at the last hearing he had practically concluded the examination-in-chief of the defendant, but the Court asked for fuller particulars as to the claim in reconvention, which had now been prepared.

Nathan Raner (the defendant) said that he claimed in reconvention a refund of £340, money paid upon delivery of the plant. He had incurred expenses in preparing the foundations, brickwork, and woodwork for receiving the machine to the amount of £1,526 15s. He had heard the evidence of Mr. Mousett, quantity surveyor, who estimated the wasted construction at £946. He was prepared to accept that figure. Mousett, however, did not take into account the cost of off-loading and erecting the machinery. Witness had prepared a statement showing how the money was spent. The cost of off-loading and erecting machinery, including barrows, hacks and boards, was £159 15s. If the machinery were removed, he would have to return the ground to the lessors—the Roodebloom Estate—in its former condition. This would cost him £30. His expenditure on account of labour, coal, oil, etc., for working the machine was £315, at the rate of £10 10s. a day, reckoning up to the time of Mr. Telford's departure. He had had to pay interest on an overdraft from the bank at the rate of 7 per cent. on the instalment of purchase price paid, and cost of brickwork, foundations, etc., and off-loading and erecting machinery, the interest amounted to £232 13s. He also claimed in respect of rent he had had to pay for the ground. Witness had pug mills running, and if he had only been making bricks by hand, it would not have been necessary for him to take a lease for six years, as he could have got clay elsewhere at so much per 1,000.

[Maasdorp, J. (to Mr. Burton): That is rather a remote ground of damages.]

Mr. Burton: It was absolutely necessary expenditure for the purpose of receiving this machine.

[Maasdorp, J.: Yes, but it is too remote. It was not in contemplation. You claim for damages for the whole of the six years?]

Oh, no; it is only to the present date from the time we have been there. We say we have had to pay rent for ground which was useless to us.

Witness (continuing) said that the rent of the ground was £500 a year. He claimed damages on the basis of half the rent, the amount being £458. Other items included in his claim for reconvention were: £134, wages of watchman; £46 2s. 6d., insurance premiums on machinery and shed; £28 2s. 6d., steel plates for barrows. The total amount of witness's claim was £2,708.

Mr. Burton informed his lordship that, in view of the intimation from the Court, they had given up the claim for loss of prospective profits.

Defendant (continuing) said that he did not now make any claim for prospective profits; he only claimed actual out-of-pocket expenses in connection with the machinery. Against his claim he allowed to plaintiffs in respect of 135,000 bricks made and sold, a sum of £210 5s., calculated at £3 per 1,000, less 29s. for packing, burning, and loading, and £13 10s. in respect of 30,000 bricks, made during the trial of Williams, in October, 1904. Witness also allowed £7 for the wheelbarrow on the ground, £40 for hack boards, brick boards, etc., and £100 for the material, if left on the ground. After making the foregoing deductions, the net amount of his claim in reconvention was £2,337 5s.

In cross-examination by Mr. Gardiner, witness denied that he had prevented the machine from having a fair trial, or that he told Charles Stotter or others that he did not intend the output to be 20,000 a day. He had not withdrawn Kafirs from the clay bank, so as to prevent the machine from being properly fed, and, in fact, had never interfered with Telford, who was superintending the machine at the beginning for the plaintiffs. He had not delayed the machine by failing to supply sufficient labour. He had never told Treadway to throw stones into the pan. He had not, as far as he was aware, caused any serious stoppages through insufficient water supply, or shortage of clay. Witness used about 40,000 bricks made by the machine for building his Scotch kilns.

Mr. Gardiner: What is your great complaint about this machine?

Witness: They are talking about having a different pan altogether. In further cross-examination, on his claim in reconvention, witness said that he could not use the Scotch kilns for hand-made bricks. He had credited the plaintiffs with all the bricks made by the machine.

Charles Stotter (called by Mr. Gardiner) said that Mr. Rainer told him that he did not intend the machine to produce 20,000 bricks a day.

This concluded the evidence.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J., said that it was an essential part of the conditions of the contract that plaintiffs should work the machine satisfactorily for at least ten days of ten working hours, turning out a minimum of 20,000 bricks a day, which bricks were to be of good shape and quality, suitable for the best buildings. It was admitted that the machine had not produced that number on any working day. Then the point arose as to whether the failure of the machine to comply with the conditions of the contract was due to the default of the defendant. The default of the defendant was in no way responsible for the failure of the plant. The failure, he considered, was due to the changes which had been made in the gratings in the pan. Another agent of the plaintiffs, on coming to the machine, found that the gratings were of such a nature that they were not suitable for the clay in the condition in which Telford (who made the contract for plaintiffs) had seen it. The gratings were changed on two occasions, the holes being enlarged. When the holes were enlarged, the effective character of the plates was diminished. The plates were then put into the pan, with large slots, which enabled the clay to pass very freely, and it seemed to him that when that was done the whole nature of the machine was altered. It was then reduced to such a condition that it would not produce the fine bricks which it was intended to produce. He questioned whether with such gratings in the machine it could be made to work successfully. The defendant was entitled to damages. He paid on account of the purchase price £340, and that he was entitled to recover. Then it appeared that he went to the expense of £864 in erecting the premises, which were necessary for the machine. The work upon the erection of the machine itself cost him £63, and the labour of working the machine during the 30 days, when attempts were made to produce 20,000 bricks a day, cost him £315. He (the learned judge) was prepared to allow the whole of these items. With reference to the claim for rent, he was not satisfied, upon the evidence, that a case had been made out upon what should be allowed. He was inclined to think that the damages in that respect would be rather too remote. Then there was a large claim for interest. Defendant said that he incurred damages as far back as two years ago in large amounts, and that he was entitled to claim interest on the damages then suffered by him. He was disinclined to allow that part of the claim, on the ground that a man could not lie by when he had suffered damages, and allow the interest to accrue in that way so as to increase the damages. The claim also for insurance must be disallowed. Then there was a claim in regard to wheel-barrows and hack-boards. Defendant made a claim on that, and he was also prepared to make an allowance. The damages allowed in this case to the defendant would be £1,682, and from that amount must be deducted £223 for bricks made and sold by the defendant, and £100, the estimated value of the material which the defendant still held. Judgment would be given for the defendant on the claim in convention, with costs, and for the plaintiff (Raner) on the claim in reconvention for £1,359, with costs. Bradley and Craven declared to be entitled to possession of the machine.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ESTATE HARTLEY V. MOOL- { 1906.
LAH AND HEYDENRYCH. { Feb. 13th.

Mr. Benjamin was for the plaintiff. Counsel said there were two defendants; the first one, Moollah, failed to enter an appearance, and he applied for judgment under Rule 329d. The second defendant entered an appearance, but now he consented to judgment being entered against him personally. The action was for delivery of a mortgage bond.

Judgment as prayed against the first defendant, and as against the second defendant judgment in terms of the consent paper.

READ V. ROSSMAN.

Mr. Benjamin mentioned the matter of Read v. Rossman, and asked his lordship to add to an order granted on the previous day by allowing the applicant to sue the respondent by edictal citation and to fix a return day.

Application granted, citation and notice of intent to be served together personally, return day 28th inst.

DRUMMOND V. WOOD.

The plaintiff appeared in person, and Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan) appeared for the defendant. The action was brought by Hildyard Home Drummond, newspaper editor, against John William Wood, a broker and printer, to recover £1,000 damages for an alleged breach of contract in the printing of the paper "South African Truth."

The paper ran to four issues, and publication then ceased. The plaintiff, in his declaration, alleged that the defendant then refused to print any more issues, and that he unlawfully deleted certain matter without the consent of the editor, and declined to print other paragraphs. The defendant admitted the omission of certain matter through lack of space, and the deletion of certain paragraphs, because he thought they were libellous, and in reconvention claimed £83 5s. 5d. for printing and work done.

Mr. Benjamin said, after the pleadings were filed, certain letters were disclosed by the plaintiff to the defendant's attorneys, which were alleged to have been sent by the plaintiff to the defendant, but which the defendant denied ever having received one of these letters. The contract sued upon had been assigned by the plaintiff to a certain Mrs. Leeson, and if that were so the plaintiff had no locus standi. Counsel moved for leave to amend his plea by inserting a plea in abatement, that the plaintiff had duly ceded his interest under the contract to one Mrs. K. T. Leeson, and, therefore, the plaintiff was not the proper party to sue, and the declaration should be quashed.

The plaintiff said the contract had been assigned as was stated, but that it was re-assigned prior to the proceedings. The defendant, his lordship would see, held the plaintiff liable by the whole of the correspondence, and surely, if he was liable, he was the proper party to sue.

Plaintiff: I was the person who entered into the contract, and for certain reasons I temporarily assigned it to Mrs. Leeson in consideration of her promising to advance certain moneys to pay the defendant. The plaintiff was heard at some length on the legal point, and referred his lordship on the question of contract to the case of "The Topical Times" v. "The Mirror of Life." He further urged that the defendant refused to recognise Mrs. Leeson in any way.

Hopley, J., drew the plaintiff's attention to a letter in which he stated he assigned his interests under the contract to Mrs. Leeson.

The plaintiff said that the defendant replied that he would not accept the assignment. When the plea was filed in July or August no exception was taken. Supposing Mrs. Leeson had sued the defendant he would have turned round, and said that he had no contract with Mrs. Leeson.

Plaintiff: It ran four issues, and then broke down. Producing some of the copies of the paper, the witness remarked to his lordship: "I don't know whether your lordship will be able to read the printing in any of the copies."

The plaintiff then replied to the plea in abatement as follows: Plaintiff says that although the contract was assigned as alleged in the said plea, it was duly re-assigned to the plaintiff by the said Leeson before action, and for a further answer to the plea the plaintiff says that the defendant at all times refused to recognise or be bound by said assignment to the said Leeson, and the defendant is thereby estopped from now setting up the same in abatement to the plaintiff's claim.

The plaintiff, in giving evidence, said he could not give the exact date of the re-assignment. Practically it took place on June 30, the day after the last issue of the paper. The object of the assignment was to enable him to meet a bill, and when the object no longer obtained, the contract was immediately re-assigned. It was re-assigned verbally, when defendant declined to publish any further issues. Plaintiff would like to call Mrs. Leeson, an old lady of 80, but he thought her evidence would have to be taken on commission.

[Hopley, J.: Well, Mr. Benjamin, what have you to say? Let us get to the common-sense of the matter. Was Mrs. Leeson any more than a dummy?]

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the plaintiff was bound by the assignment, and there was no evidence of any re-assignment.

Hopley, J., said he was prepared to hold that there never was any proper assignment, and that Mrs. Leeson, who was plaintiff's mother-in-law, was simply used as a dummy.

Mr. Benjamin pointed out that a heavy penalty attached to such conduct, and submitted that the plaintiff was only playing fast and loose.

Hopley, J., finally gave leave to examine Mrs. Leeson on commission, and adjourned the case until March 2, the commission also ordered to take the evidence of Priedeaux, the manager for the defendant.

SWEENEY V. SWEENEY.

This was an action brought by James Sweeney, of 55, Lever-street, Woodstock, a locomotive driver on the C.G.R., against his wife, Bridget Sweeney, of 48, Bromwell-street, Woodstock, for divorce, by reason of her adultery with one Joseph Cooney.

Mr. Lewis was for the plaintiff, and Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the defendant.

On the application of Mr. Jones, the witnesses on both sides were ordered out of court.

The details of the evidence were unfit for publication.

In the course of the evidence, His Lordship, noticing a couple of ladies in court, said: "Mr. Jones, are those ladies witnesses in this case?"

Mr. Jones: No, my lord.

Hopley, J., remarked that he was not there to look after feelings of modesty or otherwise. The ladies could stay in court if they liked.

The ladies did not move.

Subsequently Mr. Lewis said the evidence would turn out to be of such a revolting character he would ask his lordship to clear the court of the general public.

[Hopley, J.: The general public are entitled to be in court if they like. Women and children are frequently ordered out of court in disgusting cases. Anyone having nothing to do with the case had better leave the court.]

The ladies promptly left the court.

Postea (February 19th):

After further evidence, the parties came to a compromise, agreeing to a decree of judicial separation.

Evidence having been called as to the custody of the child, Hopley, J., said he thought the parties in the case had been wise in coming to a compromise. There would be a decree of judicial separation as from 30th June, 1905, the plaintiff undertaking to pay midwifery expenses incurred by the defendant in August, 1905. There would be no order as to costs, and no order as to maintenance. The plaintiff would have custody of the child.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

CARTER V. CARTER. { 1906.
Feb. 14th.

This was an action for a decree of divorce brought by the wife against her husband James Thomas Carter, by reason of his adultery, and for an order of maintenance of £2 a month for each of the three children of the marriage. Mr. Alexander was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

Decree of divorce granted, with costs, the defendant to pay £1 a month for the maintenance of each of the children until they reach the age of sixteen years, the first payment to be made at the 1st March, with leave to the plaintiff to apply for an increase of maintenance, the plaintiff to have custody of the children, and the payment to be made personally or at the office of the plaintiff's attorneys.

Demurrage—Breach of contract
—Novation.

The plaintiffs had contracted to supply the defendants with 54,000 tons of coal, to be delivered at Cape Town at £1 16s. 5d. per ton c.i.f., and 60,000 tons to be delivered at Port Elizabeth at £1 17s. 5d. c.i.f., on monthly shipments.

Defendants were to accept delivery immediately on arrival of the vessels in Table Bay and Algoa Bay respectively at the rate of 120 tons a day for sailing vessels and 250 for steamers, or to be liable for demurrage at the rate of 4d. per ton for sailing vessels and 6d. for steamers. The coal arrived by 18 sailing ships, but not within the stipulated 6 months: and the quantity received in certain months considerably exceeded that received in others. Eight of these vessels were not discharged within contract time, and in respect of these the plaintiffs now claimed demurrage. The defendants pleaded (1) the irregularity of the shipments and their consequent inability to take delivery as per contract: (2) novation of the original contract, inasmuch as plaintiffs had chartered vessels at a rate of demurrage less than that stipulated for in the contract and that the bills of lading of these vessels, some of them expressly incorporating the conditions of the charter parties, were transferred to, and accepted by the defendants. Held, that the original contract had not been novated.

Held further, that plaintiffs were entitled to demurrage, less a certain sum due to defendants as damages by reason of plaintiffs' failure to despatch their vessels within the contract time.

This was an action to recover from the defendants £10,788 for demurrage in respect of a coal contract.

From the pleadings it appeared that in August, 1901, an agreement was entered into between the Agent-General in London and the plaintiffs for the supply of Welsh coal to the Colonial Government. In all, 54,000 tons were to be supplied at a certain price, c.i.f., in monthly shipments of 9,000 tons, the shipments to commence in February, 1902. The railway authorities were to accept delivery immediately on arrival in Table Bay and Algoa Bay, at the rate of 120 tons per day for sailers and 250 tons per day for steamers, and the Government was to be liable for demurrage at 4d. per net ton registered for sailers per day, and 6d. for per net registered ton per day for steamers. In the event of Great Britain being engaged in war, except with the Transvaal, or a coal strike, Messrs. Houlder Bros.' liability ceased. Through a strike at Merthyr Colliery, Messrs. Houlder Bros. were unable to despatch the coal in the agreed order, but they despatched it as quickly as possible, and in regard to a number of steamers, the Government, it was alleged, failed to take delivery immediately on arrival, and therefore became liable for demurrage agreed upon. The Government, in their plea, set out that the plaintiffs had broken the contract in regard to the delivery, and as a result, it became impossible for the Government to accept immediate delivery, and they were obliged to take coal from other persons.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Close and Mr. Struben), was for the plaintiffs; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C., Mr. Howel Jones, and Mr. Burton), was for the defendants.

The evidence for the plaintiffs and part of that for the defendants was taken on commission.

For the defence,

Wm. Sinclair, chief railway storekeeper to the C.S.A.R., stated that during the time the present action related to, he was chief storekeeper in the C.G.R. He had occupied that position since 1886. Witness would receive the coal for the Government, and check the amount received and give a certificate. There was ample time for the contractors to make due provision for the supply. All the coal sent to Cape Town arrived by sailers. There was an agreement between the Harbour Board and the Railway Department by which the former gave the latter preference in discharge up to 500 tons per working day. Witness made up a return showing that the plaintiffs, instead of shipping 9,000 tons per month, only shipped that amount over a period of three months. Cables had to be sent to the Agent-General calling attention to the delay. The delay on the part of the plaintiffs forced the Government to buy coal elsewhere. In May, 11,896, and in June 26,760 tons, were received. Letters were sent to the plaintiffs pointing out the grave situation that would arise if ships were rushed in outside the stipulated time to make up the deficiency. In a certain three weeks the plaintiffs despatched 29,000 tons. Everything was done to meet the discharge; the Harbour Board was actually asked to increase the facilities for discharge.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: It did not matter to the Government when the ships left England, so long as 9,000 tons a month arrived here. Witness could not from memory, but would be able if he got time, give the date of every order of coal which arrived from the months of February to September.

His complaint was that so many ships came in that they could not be discharged. If the Admiral Cecil, instead of arriving on the 27th August, had arrived on September 1, there would have been no complaint. Six ships arrived in August. If Houlder Bros. had shipped according to the contract, the Government would have been satisfied. As against the contractor, it did not matter how the coal arrived. If 20,000 tons were shipped by ships and steamers in different months, and arrived in the same month, the preferred berths could have been of little avail.

Porcy John Hart, assistant to the Chief Railway Storekeeper, stated that he was the chief clerk to the last witness on the occasion in question. He prepared the returns produced in collaboration with an official of the Harbour Board.

Mr. Schreiner read a voluminous correspondence.

Sir H. Juta: The Government now claim damages, not because the ships were not sent off in time, but because they did not arrive in time. If they accept coal, which, as they say, has not been shipped in time: If they accept in July coal which should have been sent in April, they cannot claim damages for late despatch. The first question is, "What is the substance of the contract between the parties?" The question is whether the coal was to arrive in reasonable quantities monthly, or whether the whole quantity might be sent at once. Our tender was based upon monthly shipments. What was contemplated there was delivery. All the documents are on the basis of delivery. As to the letters, some might be used for both sides, but what is complained of throughout the correspondence is non-delivery. From May 5th till July 11th we hear no more complaints. The letters of May 5th and August 14th show that the whole complaint of the Government was not about shipment, but delivery. In their letter of May 27th, 1903, the Government offered an inspection, and failure of delivery is still insisted on. The Government has now paid demurrage on a ship which arrived after our vessel. Three ships arrived in July, for which they refuse to pay. The ships loaded for April up to June have been paid on; and also on the Prince Albert, which arrived in August. They have already paid on other ships, but refuse to pay on those which arrived in July. The time occupied by a voyage from England differs very much. On August 3rd they take the Enterprise into dock. About 13,000 tons of Houlder's coal was ready for delivery in August. If a time condition goes to the root of a contract and the contract is not fulfilled, no doubt the aggrieved party may claim damages. But here no damages are claimed for non-shipment. They accepted delivery of our coal, and after doing so claim damages for late delivery; but they have not shown any damage which we could have prevented. They cannot both take advantage of the contract by acceptance and then sue for breach of contract. There is no evidence that they had to pay more damages by reason of demurrage. The Harbour Board broke their contract by not allowing the ships to be unloaded. The Government should have refused delivery; but now, after paying in respect of some of the ships, they wish to go back and to reclaim the money. Either the £10,000, or, at all events, something is due to us. They cannot accept delivery and then refuse discharge. As to the second defence (p. 7b of the pleadings), I do not understand it. They say that there was a novation of the contract; but it was a very strange novation. The contract provided that we should hand over the bills of lading. Then how have we novated the contract by doing what it bound us to do? There was no intention on the part of the Government to novate, because they knew nothing of the terms of the charter party. Houlder Bros. could not have intended to novate by carrying out the terms of the original contract. The old contract could not stand with the new: under the one the Government was to pay freight; under the other it was not to do so. Then the conditions as to demurrage were different. If the demurrage is high the freight will be proportionately lower. If these contracts do not run side by side we are landed in a mass of absurdities.

Mr. Schreiner: The declaration admits that there must be a regular despatch. No attempt has been made to show that plaintiffs' failure to make regular despatch was owing to circumstances over which they had no control. They were bound to make regular and equal despatch and time was of the essence of the contract. It is a mere fallacy to say that delivery could be given on the last day of one month, and then on the first of the next. We do not mind on what day of the month delivery is given provided that it is given monthly. The months of despatch were fixed, February, March, April, May, June, July; 9,000 tons each month. We have paid certain sums which we ought not to have paid for demurrage, but a man who has paid one pound in mistake cannot for that reason be made to pay another. Plaintiffs have received their £7,000, and possibly may not be compellable to pay it back; but that does not show that the Government can be made to pay more. In May plaintiffs sent 8,730 tons, and the Government paid demurrage. On May 31st the Clan Buchanan brought 3,165 tons, and the Government refused to pay demurrage. About 29,800 tons were despatched in June. That was not in accordance with the contract. If delivery were not taken within reasonable time the Government was liable for demurrage.

Yes, but the arrival of a vessel duly despatched. No demurrage was payable save in the case of a ship which started in its month. Possibly they may be entitled to damages for detention, but that is a different matter. Then, again, there is no proof of actual damage sustained by Houlder Bros. The plaintiffs, in order to claim demurrage, should have shown that all conditions of the contract had been fulfilled. They can claim nothing unless they can make good their declaration. Demurrage is payable to a ship. This was a c.i.f. contract, and at once the risk passes to the purchaser, and in this respect it resembles an f.o.b. The consignee has to do with the ship, and can claim at 4d. per ton for sailing vessels and 6d. for steamers; 4d. and 6d. mean up to 4d. and 6d. If they become liable for more than that is their affair, but we are bound to pay only up to 4d. and 6d.

[Buchanan, J.: You did not pay the ships.]

The ships never sent in any claims to us. The demurrage notes were sent to Anderson Bros., the agents for the ships. We are ready to account for the demurrage they have paid to each ship, but we cannot allow them to make money on it. Then they have never rendered us an account to show that they have paid any of the ships. If we should have to pay demurrage, we should be paying as agents for Houlder Bros. We would have to pay both Houlder Bros. and the ship, for as we were the holders of the bills of lading the ships would have looked to us. Assuming that the Court holds that we are liable for demurrage at 4d. and 6d., we say that plaintiffs have failed to make due despatch, and therefore cannot claim demurrage, though they may possibly be able to claim damages for detention. Supposing they can do so, to what damage are they entitled? It has been argued as though the onus of showing damages is on us, but it is on the plaintiffs.

[Buchanan, J.: Why do you say that they were bound to equal monthly shipments; why not equal monthly arrivals?]

I do not object to that; all we wanted was the coal. Demurrage under a contract is one thing; damages for detention is another. They have not satisfied the initial condition of demurrage by giving due despatch. If they claim damages, the question is, "On what scale?"

[Buchanan, J.: How do you make out your damages?]

We had to purchase 17,500 tons of coal. They then came with their coal when we did not require it, and could not rapidly take delivery. If they had sent in coal regularly the difficulty would not have arisen. We say that they have not proved their damages. Let them say on what dates the ships have started. They cannot claim demurrage stricto sensu, but only damages. It has been said that the contract with the Enterpe was a separate contract. We gave her an extension of time. She began to unload in July 15th and finished on August 11th. We thought that steamers had a preference, but it seems not. If the ships had arrived at the due dates they would have had discharge at once. Counsel has argued that the fact of our having bought coal locally was no reason why we should refuse to pay demurrage. But see Story (vol. 2, secs. 971 and 971a, citing Lucas v. Godwin). The plaintiffs have not proved what they have paid to the ships, or that they are entitled to recover. As to time being of the essence of the contract see Leak (4th edit., p. 598, 599) and "Benjamin on Sales" (4th edit., 572 to 575). For a definition of demurrage see "McLachlan on Shipping" (4th edit., 545), Carver (sec. 609), Scrutton (5th edit., p. 251), and Duncan v. Coppen (8 C.B., 225). Our claim in reconviction is only to show technically that they have damaged us by delay.

Sir H. Juta was heard in reply on various items in account.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (March 1st):

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiffs had for some time before the contract sued upon supplied the Government with coal, delivered at the different ports of the Colony. In some of the former agreements between the parties approximate monthly quantities were stipulated for, and delivery was to be made, in some instances, into railway trucks, and in others on the quay. The outbreak of war upset the nominal conditions of our ports, and especially the state of Table Bay. In July, 1901, plaintiffs cabled from England to the Government here an offer to supply coal for a period of one year or of three years. "c.i.f." acceptance on arrival, 120 tons by sailing vessels and 250 tons by steamers daily, monthly aggregate quantities about 10,000 to 20,000 tons, to be delivered at the three Colonial ports. The Government intimated to the Agent-General a willingness to accept monthly shipments for six months, whereupon, at the request of the Agent-General, the plaintiffs wrote him the letter of the 7th August, 1901, in which they offered to accept the six months' contract on the following detailed terms set forth in the letter: "(1) That we are to supply 54,000 tons of Welsh coal for Cape Town at £1 16s. 5d. per ton c.i.f., and 60,000 tons for Port Elizabeth at £1 17s. 5d. per ton c.i.f., on monthly shipments for six months, such shipments to commence to Cape Town in February, 1902, and to Port Elizabeth in October, 1901. (2) That the railway authorities are to accept delivery immediately on arrival in Table Bay and Algoa Bay respectively, at the rate of 120 tons per day for sailers, and 250 tons per day by steamers, or the authorities to be liable for demurrage at 4d. per net registered ton per day for sailers, and 6d. per net registered ton per day for steamers. (3) Payment to be made two-thirds in cash by you within seven days of the receipt of policies, etc., and the remainder within seven days after production of the certificate as to delivery. (4) In the event of this country being at war other than with the Transvaal, or other causes, including strikes, beyond our control, our liability to cease." These terms were accepted by the Government, and plaintiffs' letter is annexed to the plea as being the contract between the parties. Before going further, it may be noticed that the case has been complicated by the fact that since this action was brought in this court the defendants have instituted proceedings in England against the present plaintiffs, having reference to demurrage paid under the present as well as under the previous contracts. This subsequent action cannot be held to bar these proceedings, but it renders it all the more necessary to confine the decision of this case strictly to the issues raised on the pleadings. Without going into details on the various points raised in argument for the purposes of this case, I take it as proved that the letter of the 7th August, 1901, is the contract which bound the parties. The plaintiffs shipped the coal contracted for, but not within the six months mentioned in the letter. This coal was sent out in eighteen sailing vessels. The time taken by most of these sailing vessels varied from nine to ten weeks, or thereabouts, though one vessel, which arrived during the month of August, made an exceptionally fast voyage of 52 days. The statement made by one of defendants' witnesses shows that the Government expected the first of the shipments to arrive about May. The amount of coal received under this contract, the plea admits to have been as follows: May, 5,992 tons; June, 9,833 tons; July, 9,787 tons; August, 18,853 tons; October, 7,378 tons; and December, 2,006 tons. As a matter of fact, the plaintiffs despatched only one vessel in February, carrying a little over 3,000 tons of coal, which vessel arrived in April; but a second vessel, which arrived in May with nearly 3,000 tons seems to have been taken together as making up the quantity of coal stated as having been delivered in May. It will be noticed that the contract is indefinite about the amount to be shipped monthly, but from the correspondence, it seems to me fair to assume that the parties understood it was to approximate 9,000 tons per month for the six months. Considerable discussion has taken place whether under the contract the coal should be shipped each month, or should arrive each month in quantities of about 9,000 tons, the latter view being assumed in a number of letters which passed between the parties. But Mr. Schreiner, for the defendants, laid little stress on either contention, the object of the Government being to secure a regular monthly supply. The quantity of coal which the plaintiffs contracted to supply proved clearly insufficient to meet the needs of the railway service, and before any coal at all arrived by any of the plaintiffs' vessels, the Government in April began to order a large additional quantity. In May they gave further orders, and also purchased locally. They also purchased locally some 4,550 tons in June, and 2,835 in September. These purchases and orders altogether amounted to about 33,000 tons. Some of the orders given in April, and those in May, together with the local purchases in May and June, amounting in all to about 18,000 tons, the Government now assign as being coal acquired to supplement shortage caused through the delay in shipments under plaintiffs' contract. The rest of the coal was to meet the additional requirements of the railway. This supply was secured at a lower price than the rate fixed in the contract with plaintiffs. The bills of lading of all the coal shipped by the plaintiffs were handed to defendants, who took delivery of the coal from the vessels and duly paid for it. With the exception of the first arrival, none of the other vessels despatched by plaintiffs were discharged after arrival within contract time, and demurrage was claimed in respect of each ship. Eight vessels had sailed from England between the 31st May and the 25th June, three arriving in July and five in August. On these vessels the Government refused to pay demurrage. Another vessel which had arrived in August foundered when entering Table Bay, and the quantity of coal which she had on board was made up by an arrival in December. The Government paid to the plaintiffs the demurrage claimed on all the vessels which arrived before as well as after the eight just mentioned, amounting to the sum of £7,360. The claim of the plaintiffs for demurrage in respect of the eight vessels was resisted by the Government, and the plaintiffs in this action now seek to recover the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d. in respect thereof. The plea contains averments which may be grouped under two separate defences, and these averments also form the basis of a claim in reconvention for damages for breach of contract. The first line of defence may be summarised as follows: The defendants allege that, according to the true and proper interpretation of the contract, the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim demurrage thereunder, as it was their duty to despatch the 54,000 tons of coals stipulated for, in monthly shipments of 9,000 tons per month, commencing in February, and continuing in consecutive months until and including July; but in breach of their agreement they shipped deficient quantities in February, March, and April, and shipped excessive quantities in May and June, whereby the defendants were prevented from taking delivery of the coal after its arrival as speedily as they would have taken it if it had been despatched in the manner contemplated by the agreement. There is a further allegation in this part of the plea that in consequence of the breach the Government was obliged to provide for the purchase, and to take delivery of coal from other persons to make good the deficiency of the shipments in February, March, and April. As a price below contract rate was paid for this coal, no specific damage is claimed in respect of such purchases. The only way in which they bear on the issue is that in consequence of the delivery by others to the Government of coal, it is alleged that the defendants had fewer facilities at their disposal to take delivery from the plaintiffs of their coal as it arrived, and therefore should not have to pay the demurrage incurred by the slow discharge of the vessels. The plaintiffs' declaration would imply an admission that there had been some delay on their part, as they rely on the fourth clause of the contract, and say that owing to strikes and other causes, on which they had no control, they had been unable to despatch the coal in the order of shipment for which they had made provision, but had despatched it as regularly as such causes permitted. It does appear that there had been some difficulties at the collieries, but the evidence does not show that these difficulties were insuperable, and I understand this part of the declaration is not now relied upon. There would have been more force in this first defence if the defendants had refused to receive the coal altogether, and had relied on a breach of contract as founding a claim for damages, or as justifying them in securing the quantity at plaintiffs' expense elsewhere. But they accepted each cargo as it came to hand. The witnesses for the defence have spent most of their time in building up hypothetical conjectures of what would have been the result if the ships had been despatched regularly month by month from February. Taking the tables they have prepared, and taking the actual length of passages made, of the three vessels, they conjecture would have been despatched in February, one would have arrived in April and two in May. This with the statements made in evidence would justify the assumption that the parties expected that May would be the first month in which the coals under the contract might reasonably have been expected to arrive. As a fact, nearly 6,000 tons were delivered in that month, and even with this smaller quantity the vessels could not be discharged within the lay days contracted for. So in June, a little over 9,000 tons—the amount expected—could not in the instance of any one of the vessels be discharged, without demurrage, and the same in July, and in the same way right on to the last of the cargoes received. These facts go far to show the punctuality of the theory of the problematical result of a strict adherence to the wording of the contract, a theory built entirely on suppositions. Much virtue as there may be in an occasional "if," I am not prepared to take the series of "ifs" put forward as of sufficient force to establish as a fact that less demurrage would have been incurred had the vessels been sent off and more coal been delivered at earlier dates. The congested condition of this port was well known to the parties, and may account for the delivery of the coal being stipulated for in the way it was by the contract. Indefinite as the contract may be in other respects, it is exact in stating the rate at which delivery was to be taken, and what demurrage was to be paid for delay, beyond the time stipulated for. As to the delivery of the coal, the plaintiffs did all they undertook to perform as soon as they had put the coal on board and had despatched the vessels, and had handed the necessary papers over to the plaintiffs to entitle them to receive the coal. When the vessels arrived, it was for the defendants to take delivery, and if they did not do so within the time specified, they contracted to pay demurrage. It was not in the power of the plaintiffs either to facilitate or to delay the discharge of the cargoes. That was a matter for the defendants to see to. In their hypothetical returns they show they could not even then have taken the discharge within the lay days, and this no doubt led them on the 27th May, 1903, to offer to pay in settlement of the claim sued for, the sum of £2,232 3s. 4d., calculated upon the basis of what they estimated would have happened had the vessels been despatched at earlier dates. But with the condition of the port it is almost impossible to say what could have been done on days other than those on which the vessels arrived. The tender of the £2,232 3s. 4d. has not been pleaded, but the fact that it was made has not unnaturally been relied upon by the plaintiffs as an admission by the Government of liability for some demurrage at least. And another fallacy in the estimate is shown by the fact that even in the cases of the vessels upon which the Government has paid demurrage, the amount ascertained by the actual working is greatly in excess of that by the hypothetical estimates would have been incurred. It is not clear to me why payment should be resisted of the amount actually incurred in respect of at least an approximate 9,000 tons per month. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the facts set forth do not discharge the defendants from liability for demurrage on the eight vessels sued for. I have some difficulty, however, in determining the actual amount for which judgment should be given. In their letter of June 3, 1903, the plaintiffs assume, for the sake of argument, although they say the contract does not admit of such construction, that if the Government only had to take delivery of about 9,000 tons per month, as there were only three ships with approximately this amount, arriving in July, and during August six vessels arriving, they offered not to claim any demurrage for three of these vessels, which arrived in August until the 1st September, and consequently to reduce their claim by £309 3s. 8d. This offer was at first made without prejudice. They later, on September 7, repeated the offer without reservation. As the offer was not accepted, the plaintiffs have reverted to their original position. But this offer may well be relied upon by the defendants as an admission that there was an excessive shipment of cargoes arriving in August, and that with the overcrowded state of the port the defendants are entitled to some consideration on that account. The averments of the declaration which was not proved, may here also be brought in to aid the defendants. It is difficult to make any deduction from plaintiffs' claim for this over despatch of vessels on strictly legal grounds but it appears to me it would only be equitable to make some allowance for the double amount of coal which arrived in this one month. The plaintiffs' offer was based on a calculation allowing seven days, three days, and two days respectively, on the three ships, which would place them in the position as if they had all three arrived on the 1st September.

Sitting as a juror, I do not consider the amount offered a sufficient reduction. If any reduction at all is to be made, I think an allowance of about fifteen days on each vessel would be reasonable. This would come as I work it out to about £1,200. Probably the more correct procedure and the one I shall adopt, would be when we come to the claim in re-convention, to allow this sum as damages for breach of contract. But, at any rate, in my opinion, this first defence does not bar the plaintiffs from recovering the demurrage in this action. I find I have omitted to notice the arguments founded on the difficulties caused by the discharge of coal from other vessels. I do not think the plaintiffs should be held liable for any losses caused thereby. The purchase of a very large quantity of this coal cannot possibly be attributed to any default on the part of the plaintiffs, and, moreover, the Government would not be entitled to give preference to their own vessels when any arriving from the plaintiffs were awaiting discharge. The second defence pleaded is that no demurrage is payable to the plaintiffs, because a new contract was entered into. The plea says that in order to carry out their contract the plaintiffs chartered vessels at a rate of demurrage less than the contract provided for; that when these vessels are loaded the plaintiffs transferred to the Government the bills of lading, some of which expressly incorporated the conditions of the vessel charter parties; and that by this procedure new contracts were entered into between the plaintiffs, the defendants and the owners of the respective vessels, whereby it was agreed that the contracts for the carriage of the coal should be between the defendants and the shipowners, and that demurrage should be construed and determined in accordance with the terms of such bills of lading and charter parties, and not otherwise, and that the Government became liable to the shipowners, and not otherwise. The plea goes on to say that the plaintiffs have been paid by the Government in respect of the liability of the Government to the shipowners a sum as large or larger than that represented by the said bills of lading and charter parties. No reason is given why, if there was no liability to the plaintiffs the Government should have paid what they owed the shipowners to the plaintiffs. This plea is also somewhat inconsistent with the first defence, for if new contracts for the payment of demurrage were entered into with the shipowners, such contracts could not be affected by any delay on the part of the plaintiffs in despatching the vessels. And it is common cause that all these vessels earned demurrage. The plea, if it means anything, amounts to a defence of novation, by which the obligations under the contract have been extinguished by new obligations, not only to the plaintiffs, but to third persons. It is the foundation of a novation that it must be intended by both parties that a new contract is substituted for the old, and the evidence must clearly establish such a novation. Here there were no negotiations or proposals made to cancel the old and enter into a new contract, nor is there anything to show the assent of the plaintiffs to such a course being adopted. The transference of the shipping documents was necessary to enable the Government to obtain delivery of the coal, and was made for that purpose, not to create a new contract. It is, moreover, inconsistent with a novation that the Government should have paid the plaintiffs demurrage on some of the vessels at the rate fixed in the old contract. It was argued that at all events the Government should not pay more for demurrage than was stipulated for on the charter parties, though at the same time it was contended that, had the charter parties been at a higher rate, the liability of the Government would then have been limited to the sum mentioned in the original contract. All this is inconsistent with the idea of a novation. This second defence does not require further consideration. In re-convention, the defendants claim that, should these pleas fail, and the plaintiffs be held to be entitled to claim in terms of the original agreement, the sum of £10,788 14s. 4d., or any part thereof, then that an equal sum has become due and payable to the Government as damages for the default of the plaintiffs, and their breaches of contract, as set forth in the pleas. It is noticeable that no special damages are laid, and the claim has been explained to mean that, if it is held that the plaintiffs are entitled to the demurrage set forth in the contract, then their delay in despatching vessels in good time has resulted in loss to the Government in any sum which may be awarded to the plaintiffs, in so far as it exceeds the £2,232 3s. 4d., which only under the hypothetical returns would have become payable. This, in effect, would be holding that the Government tender, which has not been pleaded, was a sufficient one, which, for the reasons stated, I am not able to find. It is difficult to follow the argument, but this claim in re-convention affords the opportunity of awarding as damages, say, £1,200, which I have estimated would be a fair amount to deduct from the demurrage, on account of the 1,800 tons of coal arriving in August, instead of 9,000 tons in August and in September respectively. The result is that there will be judgment for the plaintiff for the sum claimed, less £1,200, or for £9,588 14s. 4d., and costs, with interest at 6 per cent. a tempore morae. I think the date of default should be fixed as the 3rd June, 1903, when the final account was sent in and formal demand made for payment.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the Registrar of Witwatersrand High Court, Transvaal.

Mr. Bailey moved for the admission of Jacob Johannes van Wyk as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Colesberg.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Gileam van Niekerk as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oath administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MACROBERT V. HIGGO.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £700, with interest, less £7 paid on account, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and for the rents which might accrue to be paid into the hands of the Sheriff.

Order granted.

FLETCHER V. CUNNINGHAM.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £10,500, with interest. Counsel also applied for the rents accruing from the property to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MALLY V. RUSSELL.

Mr. Bailey moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

LIPPERT V. ELY.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, with interest, less £3 9s. paid on account, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

PRETORIA MAATSCHAPPY V. REYNOLDS VEHICLE AND HARNESS FACTORY, LTD.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £9,000, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Mr. Close (for defendants) urged that execution should be suspended so as to enable defendants to meet their obligation. It was stated that the company had several valuable orders and contracts on hand at the present time, from which funds would be derived sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's demand. The property hypothecated had been valued at £160,000.

Mr. De Waal said that he believed the defendant company was in a very bad state, and he was informed that the manager of the company had already approached the manager of a bank for the appointment of a liquidator.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Are you prepared to produce affidavits to that effect?]

Mr. De Waal: Yes, my lord.

De Villiers, C. J.: I do not think the defendant has shown sufficient grounds for suspension of execution. The Court will make the ordinary order for provisional sentence, and the property will be declared executable.

GOODMAN V. KANTEROWITZ.

Mr. Inghbold moved for provisional sentence on three mortgage bonds of £2,000, £800, and £800 respectively, and for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

GRAAFF V. WIENTROB AND PENKIN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £3,500, due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

BOEZAAK V. EXECUTOR { 1906.
ESTATE CALVERT. { Feb. 15th.

Rule 329 (d) — Liquidated demand—Forfeiture of fees by executor.

A claim for forfeiture of fees against an executor is a liquidated demand in terms of Rule 329 (d).

Mr. Inchbold moved for judgment under Rule 329d in terms of summons calling upon A. P. de Villiers, in his capacity as executor of the estate of the late Alexander Calvert: (1) to frame and lodge with the Master of the Supreme Court, Cape Town, and at the office of the Resident Magistrate, Uitenhage, a full, true, and final liquidation and distribution account, supported by proper vouchers of the whole administration and distribution of the said estate since the filing of the first administration account in 1891; and (2) to show cause why, by reason of his having no lawful and sufficient cause for his failure, to lodge the said account within the time prescribed by law, he shall not be declared to have forfeited all claim to any commission which he would otherwise have been entitled to for the administration of said estate. Counsel called his lordship's attention to a similar case which had been heard in the Eastern Districts Court, where, however, no order was made on the second part of the application, on the ground that it was not a liquidation demand. He asked for a direction that defendant file an account within six weeks.

De Villiers, C. J.: The summons in this case has been served upon De Villiers personally, and he does not appear to object. It calls upon him to show cause why, by reason of his having no lawful or sufficient cause for his failure to lodge the account within the time prescribed by law, he shall not be declared to have forfeited all claim to any commission which he otherwise would have been entitled to for the administration of the estate. Counsel very properly called the attention of the Court to a decision in the Eastern Districts Court, in which it was held that in similar circumstances the Court would not grant the order under Rule 329d, on the ground that a claim for the forfeiture of fees is not a liquidated demand. I confess I cannot agree with that view. This Court has always given a liberal interpretation to Rule 329d, and to ascertain what the fees of the executor would amount to is the simplest possible matter. It is simply calculated upon the basis of the amount distributed by him. That amount appears in his account. It is, therefore, to all intents and purposes, a liquidated demand, and inasmuch as the amount of the fees is a known quantity at the time when the order is asked for, and as the defendant has not come forward to explain why he has not rendered the account, the forfeiture may be declared in this inexpensive form by giving judgment under Rule 329d.

Mr. Inchbold (replying to the Court) said that he could not at present produce the certificate of defendant's appointment.

De Villiers, C. J., said that the order would be granted as prayed, subject to production of certificate.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Roux moved for the discharge of John du Plessis from insolvency.
Discharge granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE STRYDOM. { 1906.
Feb. 15th.

Mr. Bailey said that there appeared to have been a misunderstanding in regard to service in this matter, which was a petition under the Derelict Lands Act.

De Villiers, C. J., granted an order as prayed under the Derelict Lands Act.

ENGELS V. ENGELS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order compelling respondent to pass transfer of certain property.

Order granted.

HATSCHER V. HATSCHER.

Mr. Lewis moved on behalf of petitioner for leave to sue her husband in forma pauperis for judicial separation. Counsel certified in favour of the application.

Rule granted, calling on respondent to show cause on the 22nd inst.

Ex parte WEAKLEY.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to mortgage certain property in the division of Wodehouse.

An order was granted authorising the petitioner to raise money on first mortgage in terms of will.

MOORE V. MOORE.

Mr. Rowson moved, on behalf of Henry G. Moore, for leave to sue his wife by edictal citation for divorce, on the ground of her alleged adultery with one Jack Maybrick in London.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, rule to be returnable on the 1st day of May term, to be published once in the "Daily Telegraph" (London), and once in a Cape Town newspaper.

STEVENS V. MCCALLUM. { 1906.
Feb. 15th.

Document produced as evidence — Inspection.

The plaintiff in an action, having obtained a writ of arrest against the applicant, on the ground that he was making preparations to leave the Colony produced, on the motion to confirm the arrest, the envelope of a letter written to him by the applicant, from the post-mark on which it was argued that it had been posted so as to reach the plaintiff after the applicant had left the Colony. The applicant did not then inspect the envelope minutely, but after the arrest had been confirmed, he applied to the plaintiff for an inspection, who thereupon removed the document from the Registrar's office.

Held, that the applicant was entitled to an order that the document be returned by the plaintiff to the Registrar of the Supreme Court, to enable the plaintiff to inspect it.

This was an application brought by Charles Henry Stevens against A. J. McCallum, attorney, for an order directing respondent to restore an envelope accompanying certain affidavit in insolvency proceedings to the Registrar of the Supreme Court. Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for applicant; Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for respondent.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan read an affidavit by the applicant, in which he said that on the 1st inst. a writ of personal attachment was granted against him by the Court on the application of Mr. A. J. McCallum. In connection with the proceedings a certain envelope was attached to the affidavit of Mr. McCallum, which would prove to be the main feature on which the question of the confirmation or discharge of the writ centred. As a result of investigations made, he had reason to believe that from an inspection of the said envelope he would gather sufficient evidence to support an application to reopen the proceedings, and have the previous order set aside. The envelope had been attached to records at the Court, but had since been removed by Mr. McCallum, and he had not restored it to the Registrar of the Court. The result was that applicant's attorney could not obtain an inspection of the envelope. A considerable amount of correspondence was attached to the applicant's affidavit. Counsel said that the document was put in as part of the papers with the affidavit of Mr. McCallum only 15 days ago, and now it had been withdrawn, and applicant could not get access to it in any way.

Mr. McCallum's allegation was that Mr. Stevens said that he sent him a letter on the 16th saying he would call upon him next day if he could arrange matters with his creditors.

There was some quibble about this letter, and then the envelope was put in so as to show that the letter was not posted until late on the 17th, with the object of it not reaching the respondent until five or six o'clock on the 17th, when the applicant would have gone away.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Why does the respondent not hand over this document to the Registrar if this man wishes to see the document?]

Mr. D. Buchanan: Apparently it is the property of Mr. McCallum, and the Registrar refuses to ask for it.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Still, if this man, for his own satisfaction, wishes to inspect the document, is it not a reasonable request?]

Mr. D. Buchanan: The applicant believes that there is some intention of further litigation against him. Counsel submitted if there was anything important in the letter the respondent was not bound to give away his evidence. It was more or less of a "fishing" application.

De Villiers, C. J.: The plaintiff's object in producing the envelope, on the motion for the confirmation of the applicant's arrest, was to show, from the postmark, that the letter had been posted by the applicant at a time when he must have known that it would not reach the plaintiff until after the applicant had left by mail steamer. On the hearing of that motion the applicant seems not to have had an opportunity of closely inspecting the envelope, but after the Court had confirmed the arrest with costs, the applicant applied to the plaintiff for an inspection of the document. Instead of complying with this most reasonable request, the plaintiff removed the document, as under ordinary circumstances he would have had the right to do so, from the Registrar's office and refused to give the applicant an opportunity of inspecting it. He must return it to the custody of the Registrar.

CARTER V. BLACKNER.

Mr. Lewis moved for the extension of the time in order to prosecute an appeal. The respondents agreed, subject to the applicant paying the costs of the application.

Application granted, and time extended until next term.

RAUS V. RAUS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to sue the respondent (the husband) by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with the custody of the child of the marriage.

The respondent was believed to be in the Transvaal.

Leave granted to sue by edictal citation, returnable 1st May, personal service, with leave to serve intendit and notice of trial, with the citation.

LEVY V. WYNNESS.

Mr. Roux moved for the removal of the trial to the Circuit Court at Dordrecht, in order to save expenses in bringing witnesses to Cape Town. The present whereabouts of the defendant was unknown.

Application granted, notice of trial by registered letter to the defendant's last known place of residence—Middelburg, Transvaal.

VENTER V. ROTHNER.

Mr. McGregor moved to have the case removed for trial to the Circuit Court of Beaufort West. There was a consent on behalf of the defendant.

Application granted.

Ex parte JACOBBOHN.

Mr. Du Toit moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to amend a certain ante-nuptial contract by inserting the petitioner's correct name.

Order granted.

Ex parte THE HELENA MATERNITY HOME.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to alter a certain name on a mortgage bond and deed of transfer.

Order granted.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REVIEW CASE.

REX V. SWART.

{ 1906.
Feb. 15th.

Hopley, J., mentioned a case that came before him as Judge of the week from the Court of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Bredasdorp. It was the case of Hendrick Swart, who pleaded guilty to contravening sub-section 3 of section 8 of Act 27 of 1882. He was sentenced to imprisonment, with hard labour, for a period of nine months. Under the section, the maximum period composition blocks. Mr. Cook" (meaning the plaintiff), "in advocating the adoption of the sanitary block, gives copies of South African testimonials supplied to him by the proprietors of this patent block. Why did he not also give the South African testimonials which were supplied to him in favour of the Neuchatel asphalt block? I understand that Mr. Cook" (meaning the plaintiff) "was employed by the Cape Town Corporation and paid by them to look after their interests."

9. The above words were intended to mean and did mean that the plaintiff, as City Engineer, with a view to discrediting the paving material of the Neuchatel Asphalt Company, Limited, both to the members of the said Council and the public, and in order that he might be in a position to report unfavourably upon the said material, and so, if possible, prevent the said company from obtaining the contract for the paving of the said public streets or some of them, and in order to obtain for himself or for some person or persons in whom he was interested some benefit, pecuniary or otherwise, or acting from some other improper motive, caused the said section laid by the said company to be submitted to unusual and unfair tests, and caused the same to be negligently or improperly treated, as a result whereof the said pavement in a short period of time showed signs of serious wear and tear, which it would not otherwise have shown, inducing the opinion that the same was not of an ordinarily durable or lasting character: or, in the alternative, that the plaintiff as City Engineer is incompetent in the performance of his duties and does not possess the requisite knowledge of the qualities and capabilities of asphalt pavement and of the proper treatment of the same, and that he is receiving a salary from the said Corporation for the performance of duties which, either through lack of knowledge or of honesty and principle, he does not properly perform.

10. Thereafter the defendant falsely and maliciously wrote and published to the said Corporation and also caused to be printed and published in the issue of the said newspaper, dated March 23, 1905, another letter, signed "B.S.A. Asphalt Co., Ltd.," wherein the following defamatory words of and concerning the plaintiff occur: "We understand that your Engineer" (meaning the plaintiff) "has recommended a certain composition block be used for paving Adderley-street. . . . We therefore trust that . . . Councillors will see that existing local concerns . . . at least get fair play, and that the Council's officials" (meaning or including the plaintiff) "do not abuse the powers granted to them in using their position to assist any one firm to the detriment of others, as is evidently at present being done."

11. The said words were intended to mean and did mean that the plaintiff, in the exercise of his duties as City Engineer, was, in recommending to the said Council that Adderley-street be paved with the paving material of a particular manufacturer in preference to the paving materials of other manufacturers, influenced to make such recommendation by favouritism or other improper motive, and not by the merits or demerits or comparative cost of the various paving materials then in competition for the Council's acceptance, and that in making the aforesaid recommendation in paragraph 6 hereof referred to the said plaintiff as City Engineer improperly and unjustly used his powers in order to prevent the acceptance by the Council of a paving material equally or more suitable for the requirements of the city streets than that recommended by him, and was guilty of a breach of duty towards the Council and the ratepayers of the city.

12. By reason of the aforesaid false, malicious, and defamatory statements the plaintiff has been greatly injured in his fair name, fame, and reputation, and has sustained damages amounting to the sum of £5,000.

The plaintiff claims:

- (a) The sum of £5,000 damages;
- (b) Alternative relief;
- (c) Costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. Paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the declaration are admitted.

2. Defendant has no knowledge of the allegations in paragraphs 5 and 6, does not admit these, and puts plaintiff to the proof thereof.

3. Paragraph 7 is admitted.

4. Defendant admits that the words set out in paragraph 8 of the declaration were written by him, and were caused to be published in the "Cape Argus" of the 22nd March, 1905. Such words formed portion of a letter addressed by the defendant to the editor of the "Cape Argus," to the full terms of which the defendant craves leave to refer at the trial.

5. The said words do not mean what the plaintiff alleges them to mean in paragraph 9 of the declaration. They are incapable of any such meanings, or of any defamatory meaning.

6. Save as admitted in paragraphs 4 and 5 hereof, defendant denies paragraphs 8 and 9 of the declaration.

7. Defendant admits that he is responsible for the writing and publication in the "Cape Argus" of the 23rd March, 1905, of the words set out in paragraph 10 of the declaration. Such words formed portion of a letter addressed to the editor of the "Cape Argus," to the full terms of which the defendant craves leave to refer at the trial.

8. The said words do not mean what the plaintiff alleges them to mean in paragraph 11 of the declaration. They are incapable of any such meanings or of any defamatory meaning.

9. Save as admitted in paragraphs 7 and 8 hereof, defendant denies paragraphs 10 and 11 of the declaration.

10. Defendant says that the words complained of in paragraphs 8, 9, 10, and 11 of the declaration formed portion of letters addressed to the editor of the "Cape Argus," and published in the "Cape Argus," each of which letters, when taken as a whole, was a fair and bona fide comment upon a matter of great public interest, viz., the consideration of the question of what was the most suitable form of pavement to be laid down on the public streets of Cape Town, and were published without any malice towards the plaintiff.

11. Defendant denies that the plaintiff has sustained damages in the sum of £5,000 or in any other sum for which defendant is liable.

Wherefore he prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan) for the plaintiff; defendant in person; Mr. Upington for the Neuchatel Company.

Evidence was called by Mr. Searle. John Cook (the plaintiff) said that he had had close upon 30 years' experience of engineering in England and South Africa. He came out to the Cape in 1902 to take the post of City Engineer, having been appointed in London. The matter of the paving of streets had been going on in the Council since 1902. In November, 1902, a contract was entered into between the Neuchatel Company and the Town Council for the laying of an experimental pavement in Exchange-place. The agreement favoured that the pavement was to be laid for two years and had to carry vehicular traffic, including traction engines and trailers. Before the contract had been entered into the company agreed, after considerable discussion, that the pavement should be subjected to traction-engine traffic. The Standard Company also laid pavements in Lower St. George's-street under similar conditions. On account of Garlick's building operations, the work could not be commenced until March, 1904, and it was not completed till July, 1904. According to the contract, a concrete foundation was to be laid. Witness laid the concrete foundation on behalf of the Standard Company; the pavement did not prove satisfactory, and the company said that the concrete foundation was at fault. Mr. Allen had not commenced his pavement, and in consequence of what had happened with the Standard Company it was arranged that Allen should lay the concrete foundation on his section and charge the Council 8s. per yard. In 1902 and 1903 the traction-engine traffic in the city was very heavy, but in 1904 it had very much decreased, until in the latter half of the year it had dropped off very materially. There were three engines, he believed, licensed last year, but he did not believe a single engine had been licensed this year. The number of engines running in the streets about 1903 was between 30 and 40. This pavement having been laid down for the purpose of being tested under traction-engine traffic, witness arranged for the closing of the bottom of Adderley-street. The bulk of the traction-engine traffic would have gone by the bottom of St. George's-street in any event. The pavement began to show signs of wear and to crumble under the influence of the traffic. In February, 1905, the Council instructed witness to go to Johannesburg and Durban and inspect different pavements. On his return he prepared and presented to the Council a report on the whole matter. The company's pavement was not submitted to any unfair conditions; witness denied that he had attempted to smash it up in any way.

Mr. Searle: These remarks in the letters of defendant have caused you great inconvenience?

Witness: I think there is no doubt about that. The papers have continued pegging away through this Ratepayers' Association or Mr. Allen, and I believe he is a member. It is an open secret that they want to get rid of me.

[De Villiers, C. J.: But this is not in consequence of the letter which was addressed to the paper?]

I trace it to the action of the defendant.

Mr. Searle (to witness): You are anxious to have your character cleared?

Witness: That is all I want.

You are not anxious really for any amount of damages?—No, I simply want my character cleared.

You don't press for heavy damages?—No.

Witness (in further evidence) said that in the early part of this month certain correspondence took place between defendant and himself in regard to the action. Witness met defendant a week after receiving the letters, and the latter then asked him what he wanted. Witness replied: "I don't want anything else but my character cleared and costs paid." Defendant said he did not want to grovel, and witness replied that all he wanted was a manly apology and costs. Defendant said that he was prepared to give an apology or withdrawal, and publish it in the "Times" and "Argus," but he said that he could not pay any costs, as he had not the money. Defendant made a suggestion that witness should get someone else to pay the costs, and that he (witness) should hand his cheque to the other party, so that it would not appear that he (plaintiff) was paying the costs. Witness told him that he was not accustomed to doing business in that roundabout sort of way. Witness commenced an action against the "Argus" and defendant jointly, but the "Argus" published an apology and paid him £10, whereupon he proceeded only against the defendant.

Mr. Searle: Have you ever acted in any way but fairly towards all the pavements?

Witness: I have no interest in any contractor, in any firm, or in any business of any description.

Cross-examination by Defendant: Witness was now 46 years of age. He was not aware that he was appointed City Engineer for any special purpose; witness knew a great deal at that time about different kinds of paving. He did not think it was a remarkable thing that the discussion about paving should have gone on since 1902. Witness made a report to the Council in September, 1902. He had recommended two pavements for adoption, under certain conditions. The defendant's company had not, as far as he knew, given him any reason for objecting to engine traffic going over the pavement they had laid. Witness did not think any asphalt would stand traction-engine traffic; in fact, he did not think granite pavements would stand such traffic. The best pavement to withstand such traffic was soft wood, the reason being that it was springy. Soft wood would stand such traffic for a good many years.

De Villiers, C. J., pointed out to defendant that his company in their contract with the Corporation consented to traction-engine traffic going over their pavement.

Cross-examination continued: Witness had treated the Standard Company in the same way as the defendant's company. The Corporation had not come to terms with the Standard Company in reference to the trial section the latter had laid. Witness's attention was called to the defendant's letter by something that appeared in the "Cape Times." His attention was not drawn by the editor of the "Cape Times" to the letter, because he had never seen the editor of the "Cape Times." There was a letter in the "Cape Times" on the following morning, to which a footnote was subjoined. The substance of the footnote was that the editor had excised some portion of the letter, because he considered it to be libellous.

Defendant: That was the reason why you pricked up your ears?

Witness: Nothing of the kind. The "Argus" has been perpetually pin-pricking, and on two days before your letter appeared in the "Argus," there was an article, and as soon as your letter appeared on that afternoon, I went to take an opinion before the "Times" came out.

Two days before my letter came out there was an editorial in the "Argus"?

—Yes.

You went to your solicitor?—No; when that letter appeared, I thought it was time to be stopping this sort of thing. Your friends on the "Argus" had been going at it for some time.

Have I a friend on the "Argus"?—You have.

Who is he?—He is one of the reporters. I know he is a friend on the "Argus," and I know he is a reporter.

Why should he be a friend of mine?—I have seen you a good many times together.

Would you know him if you saw him?—Yes.

Defendant: I will try and have him here after lunch.

De Villiers, C. J., said that the question for the Court was what was the meaning of the words?

Cross-examination continued: Witness saw the footnote to defendant's letter in the "Cape Times." He saw another letter on the following day. He saw the letter which he (defendant) sent to the editor of the "Times" in answer to the footnote, denying that he had any defamatory intention.

Defendant: I suppose the "Cape Times" has got a wide circulation?

Witness: I suppose it has.

The same as the "Argus"?—They may both have a wide circulation. It is more than likely that people would see that footnote?—There are a good many people who get the "Argus" and don't get the "Times."

Who doesn't get the "Times"?—My neighbour, if you wish to know.

Asked what the Hastings block was made of, witness replied that it was made of stone, Trinidad bitumen, and a patent flux, with the compulsion of which he was not acquainted.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to defendant): Can you tell me the object of this cross-examination?]

Defendant: My lord, I want to know whether Mr. Cook really knows what pavings are.

Witness: Putting me through a technical examination.

Defendant (to his lordship): I must apologise to your lordship for taking this line of cross-examination.

[De Villiers, C. J.: It might spoil your own case; it will do your own case no good.]

In further cross-examination, witness said that if traction-engines were abolished, he should put down a patent sanitary block. Answering another question, witness, with some feeling, said: You said that I had done my best to smash that paving up when you had distinctly undertaken to put it down under a traction-engine trial, and if I had not asked for traction-engines to be turned over that pavement, I should not have been doing my duty to the Corporation.

Defendant: You say you have suffered damages to the extent of £5,000 in your claim?

Witness: Yes.

Can you specify details, or is it a mere statement without any truth?—If you are successful with the Ratepayers' Association in getting me removed from my position, I suppose that I shall have sustained damages.

Defendant: I have no connection with the Ratepayers' Association.

In answer to the Court, witness said that he had not sustained any damages yet, except worry and trouble.

Defendant: You have sustained no loss or damage in any shape or form?

Witness: No.

Then why do you bring this action?—There is no telling what might have happened. You have damaged my character in the engineering world. I am looked upon with a certain amount of suspicion. The Institution of Civil Engineers is an English institution, and I have got a certain amount of stigma on my character through you.

Through me?—Through those letters.

You cannot specify any details in connection with the damages?—No; I only want my character cleared.

Your salary has not been reduced?—No, not yet. If the Ratepayers' Association can manage they will.

It is all imaginary damages then?—It must be imaginary, because I have not sustained it yet.

You think you suffered damage?—I have had sufficient worry since this thing started.

Have I worried you, Mr. Cook?—Your action has caused it through your letters.

You have had no trouble before this?—No, not much. A public official generally has trouble all along.

Have you ever been to a debating society?—No.

Have you ever been to the meetings of the Engineers' Society in Cape Town?—No.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Have you been to Parliament?]

Witness: No, my lord.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Probably if you had, you would have heard some stronger language than this.]

Defendant (to witness): Have you read the local engineering papers?

Witness: The Cape Society of Engineers?

Defendant: Yes.

Witness: No, I have not.

Occasionally you are where a number of engineers meet together. They discuss certain matters, say asphalt paving, for instance?—Yes.

They don't always agree?—No.

You don't often hear an action for libel arising out of that discussion?—That is a matter where they meet to discuss; it is not a question of giving the information to an authority.

Further cross-examined, witness said that the "Argus" withdrew the imputations against him, and apologised and paid him £10 towards his costs. He believed that his costs amounted to about £19. Witness was satisfied with the apology given by the "Argus," and the present case would not have been in court if the defendant had rendered a similar apology.

Defendant (to witness): Why did you not sue me for half the amount sued for in the joint action?

Witness: Would you have been inclined to pay it if I had?

[De Villiers, C. J.: Have you any relevant questions? This is merely wasting the time of the Court.]

In reply to further questions the plaintiff said he did not bring the action because the defendant was in difficulties.

The defendant put a question with regard to the witness's acquaintance with Messrs. Nuttall and Co.

[De Villiers, C. J.: What's the object of this examination?]

Defendant: I want to—

[De Villiers, C. J.: Do you want to justify your words now in showing that he was in collusion with Messrs Nuttall?]

No, my lord.

What's the object?—I want to see Mr. Cook's object.

I am only advising you that you are spoiling your case. If you had had counsel he would never put such questions.—I must apologise.

I don't want you to apologise. You are spoiling your own case.

The defendant proceeded to put further questions.

[De Villiers, C. J.: We will hear Mr. Searle in re-examination, unless you can put relevant questions.]

The defendant said he had been put off his line. He would go through the papers and find out the questions bearing on the subject.

A few more questions were put by the defendant, when

[De Villiers, C. J.: The Court will hear Mr. Searle in re-examination. That will do, Mr. Allen.]

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: As a fact, the letter in the "Cape Times" contained expressions that the "Argus" letter did not contain, and the letter in the "Argus" contained expressions that the "Times" letter did not contain. He had had the sanitary block under observation ever since he saw it in Washington in 1899. The defendant had applied for a postponement in order to take evidence in America.

Wm. James Jefferies, Assistant City Engineer, said he had to supervise the laying of the trial pavements. There was no unfair treatment to the Neuchatel Company or the Standard Company in the laying or the maintaining of the pavements. A few inches higher or lower of the concrete foundation would make no difference to the wearing of the pavement.

Cross-examined: No traction engines were allowed to go over the pavement until some time after the work was completed.

Robert Henry Hammersley-Heenan, general manager of the Harbour Board, said that in 1902-03 the traction engine traffic was very heavy. There was a great decrease in the traffic after 1903. Witness very frequently drove along Exchange Place. Some of the blocks on the left of the road coming from the Docks showed signs of fraying away. So far as he could see there was nothing unfair to the blocks through the traction engine traffic.

This closed the evidence for the plaintiff.

Mr. G. Nicholson, one of the district engineers of the Table Bay Harbour Board, said if a block was broken he would replace it immediately, otherwise the whole pavement would gradually be broken up.

Mr. H. H. Evans, civil engineer, said he would not run traction engines over the pavement until a couple of months after it was laid.

Wilfred Thomas James Johns said he had practical experience of concrete foundations, and he considered two to three months a reasonable time to allow the concrete to consolidate.

Maitland Hall Park, editor of the "Cape Times," said he remembered the letter of March 23, from which he excised certain portions, which he thought had a tendency to damage Mr. Cook. The sentence he excised appeared to him to be a dangerous sentence. It might have been interpreted as libellous.

The witness further stated what he allowed to appear on the paper he took to be fair bona fide comment. He merely took out what he considered dangerous. The sentence he excised taken in conjunction with other sentences might have given the letter a very different complexion.

Hon. Edmund Powell, M.L.C., editor, and resident director of the Argus Company, said what he published he took to be fair comment.

This closed the evidence in the case.

Mr. Searle, in argument, urged that plaintiff was entitled to such damages as would mark the Court's disapproval of the defendant's conduct.

Defendant also addressed the Court, and submitted that the letters were fair bona fide comment, and free from malice.

De Villiers, C. J., in summing up, said that the point the jury had to consider was whether defendant had exceeded the bounds of fair criticism in a matter of public interest. He was not prepared to say that the words were not capable of a libellous meaning, or that they were so capable for that matter.

The jury retired to consider their verdict, and after an absence of about half an hour, returned into court.

The foreman (Mr. T. Vollmer) said: The jury are unanimously of opinion that the defendant has overstepped fair criticism, and find for the plaintiff, but only for 1s. damages.

[De Villiers, C. J. (to Mr. Searle): Do you move for costs?]

Mr. Searle said that he did.

The Foreman: The jury felt that, if possible, the defendant should not pay the costs. That is our feeling.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Ah, that is a question for the Court. The impression on my mind in this case is that it is a very trifling one. There is no serious imputation upon the plaintiff, and I do not think I should order the defendant to pay the costs. I think each party must pay his own costs.]

Judgment was accordingly entered for plaintiff for 1s damages, no order as to costs.

TRIAL CAUSES.

BARRY V. BARRY.

{ 1906.
Feb. 16th.

This was an action brought by Albert Wm. Barry against his wife, Blanche Barry, for a decree of divorce and custody of the child of the marriage, by reason of the defendant's adultery. Mr. M. Bisset was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

The plaintiff (Albert Wm. Barry) stated that he married the defendant on the 15th January, 1903, in England. They lived at Bath for six months after the marriage, when the plaintiff came to Cape Town, the defendant going to live with his parents. In August, 1905, he returned to England. Subsequently he brought his wife out to Cape Town. From a remark by the landlady, his suspicions were aroused, and ultimately the defendant confessed her misconduct on several occasions during 1904 and 1905 at Worcester, England. The child of the marriage was left with plaintiff's parents.

Decree of divorce granted, the plaintiff to have custody of the child.

WILKINSON V. WILKINSON.

Mr. Gutsche, for the plaintiff, said that the only means of identifying the defendant was by having her in court. She had been subpoenaed, and attended in court earlier, but had since disappeared. He asked that the matter be allowed to stand over until next Friday.

Ordered to stand over accordingly.

NEUGEBAUER V. SIGNAL HILL QUARRY CO.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to the plaintiff to attach a certain engine, which it was feared would be removed, in satisfaction of a judgment.

A rule nisi was granted, calling on the respondent to show cause why the engine should not be attached in execution, the engine to be attached in the meanwhile, with leave to any interested party to intervene, returnable on Thursday next.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

DRUMMOND V. LEZARD. { 1906.
Feb. 17th.

Remoteness of damages—Exception to declaration.

The declaration in an action brought by the plaintiff against his attorney for wrongful delivery to a third party of a document delivered to the defendant by the plaintiff, for safe keeping, claimed as damages the loss sustained by the plaintiff by reason of his being subjected to a false prosecution for forgery as a result of the defendant not having retained possession of the document.

Held, on exception, that in the absence of anything in the declaration to shew that the defendant might reasonably have contemplated that the result of parting with the document would be to expose the plaintiff to a false prosecution for forgery, the damages claimed were too remote.

This was an argument upon an exception taken by defendant to plaintiff's declaration, on the ground that it was bad in law, vague, and embarrassing, and disclosed in law no ground of claim. Mr. Gardiner was for exception (defendant in the suit); respondent appeared in person.

From the declaration, it appeared that the plaintiff, describing himself as a journalist, of Cape Town, was formerly manager of a hotel at Vryburg, and that certain proceedings were taken against him for alleged forgery of a certain acknowledgment of debt. This document, he said, was formerly deposited by him with defendant, who was an attorney of Kimberley, to be kept pending further instructions. Plaintiff said that he subsequently instructed defendant to send the document to his attorneys at Vryburg, Messrs. Wessels and Sons, but that, instead of doing so, defendant handed it over to Messrs. Rosenblatt and De Beer, the result being that proceedings for forgery were instituted against him (plaintiff). After having been detained for some time, he was acquitted of the said charge. Plaintiff said that, in consequence of defendant's want of faith and breach of contract, he had been subjected to a prosecution for forgery, which terminated in his favour, and had been caused loss and damage and pain of body and mind, whereby he had sustained damages in the sum of £1,500.

Mr. Gardiner stated that should this exception fail, the defendant intended to move the Court for removal of the trial to the High Court, Kimberley. The action had been set down for hearing in this court on Friday next, so that it was of the utmost importance that the exception should be dealt with, as, if the case were taken, the defendant would have to get his witnesses to Cape Town from Kimberley and Vryburg. Counsel then argued that the claim of plaintiff was too remote to ground an action for damages.

Respondent having addressed the Court at some length,

De Villiers, C. J.: The plaintiff is quite right in saying that there is no wrong without a remedy, and, therefore, if there is a wrong in the present case, there will be a remedy, but the remedy should be an appropriate one. The question now is, whether assuming everything to be correctly stated in the declaration, every statement to be correct, has the plaintiff sought the appropriate remedy? The plaintiff does not allege general damage; he alleges only one form of damage as the special damage which he has sustained. In consequence of the defendant's default, and his not retaining his document on the plaintiff's behalf, the plaintiff was subjected to a prosecution for forgery, which terminated in his favour, and caused him loss and damage and pain of body and mind, whereof the plaintiff claimed £1,500 damages. The only question, therefore, is, can the plaintiff claim damages of that nature? It is quite clear that he cannot. The document is said to have been handed over by the defendant to persons to whom he ought not to have handed it over. The question is, can this prosecution for forgery be said to be the proximate result of defendant's handing it over? It may have been the remote result, but it is such a result as could have been contemplated by the parties as a natural result of this action of defendant? Clearly not. The contract between the parties was that the defendant should safely keep the document, but there is nothing in the declaration to show that he could possibly have contemplated that the effect of his parting with the document would be to expose the plaintiff to a false prosecution for forgery. The alleged cause of the prosecution is too remote to be made the ground for damages, and the exception must therefore be sustained. At the same time, I think leave must be given to the plaintiff to amend his declaration. If he amends it so as to make it clear that he seeks for damages which he is legally entitled to obtain, then there is no objection to the declaration; but the concluding portion of the declaration, in my opinion, is wholly defective, and therefore the exception ought to be allowed, with costs, with leave to plaintiff to amend his declaration.

Mr. Gardiner: I take it that, although leave is given to amend, the set-down is removed?

His Lordship: Oh, yes, of course; there must be a fresh amendment served upon defendant, and you must be allowed to plead to that.

by floods, the parties referred the question as to the best mode in which the furrow should be re-constructed and as to the course it should take to an arbitrator who, in his award, directed the course which the new furrow should take, and also increased the maximum width of the furrow from six to nine yards. By a previous contract between the parties the width of the furrow had been fixed at six yards and the terms of the reference did not authorize any widening of the furrow.

Held, that the applicant was entitled to set aside the award as it stood, but that, as the objectionable part was separable from the rest of the award and did not affect the validity of the whole award, the award should not be set aside if the respondents would accept the award with the objectionable part expunged.

This was an application calling upon the respondents to show cause why a certain award of an umpire appointed by arbitrators should not be declared invalid, principally on the ground that the umpire had exceeded the scope of his authority. The matter, it appeared, arose out of a dispute with regard to the course of a certain sluic running into the Oliphant's River. Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Gardiner) was for applicant; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor), appeared for respondents, Ferreira, Lipsett, Tooch, and King.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts, which sufficiently appear from the judgment,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (February 19th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is a motion to set aside an award of an arbitrator on several grounds, the chief grounds being that the arbitrator exceeded his authority, and that there were several irregularities in the course of the proceedings in the arbitration. The first question raised in this case was whether Mulder was really the third arbitrator, or whether he was really the umpire. To my mind, he was neither; he appears to have been the only arbitrator and not an umpire at all. There was no deed of submission. Each of the parties appointed an arbitrator

" 19th.

Arbitration—Award—Objectionable and separable part.

A furrow running over the applicant's land, to the use of which the respondents were entitled, having been destroyed by power of attorney, giving him certain powers and giving him the power to appoint an umpire in case he could not come to terms with the agent of his opponent, but, ostensibly, each was treated, not as an arbitrator, not as a judge in the cause, but as agent for the man who appointed him. But power was given to these two agents, if they could not agree, to appoint an umpire, or a third man, as he is called, but to my mind the only arbitrator in the case was Mr. Mulder. If the two others were also arbitrators, then, in my opinion, he was the umpire, and not third arbitrator, and he was entitled to enter fully into the case, without reference to co-arbitrators. Well, the irregularities referred to are several, but the chief one is that an opportunity was not given to the applicant to call witnesses upon the question of compensation and upon other matters. Now, upon this point, in my opinion, the applicant fails altogether. Notice had been given to all the parties, they were present when the arbitrator came upon the scene, and they had an opportunity of calling witnesses before the arbitrator. The fact is that it was a case in which personal inspection by him was of more value than the evidence of a host of witnesses, and it is clear that he made a thorough inspection. The important matter was that the arbitrator should be upon the spot, and see for himself the nature of the furrow destroyed, the nature of the land, and also the best place for placing the new furrow in lieu of the old one, which had been washed away. There was no rejection of evidence tendered to be given on behalf of the applicant. No question was raised throughout these proceedings as to any failure on the part of the arbitrator to hear the requisite witnesses, and it was only when the applicant found that the award was against him that he raised all these technical objections as to the improper conduct on the part of the arbitrator. Well, then, in regard to the arbitrator having exceeded his authority, one of the grounds is that he directed the furrow to go over the ground of October and De Beer, and that he had no authority under the deed of submission, so-called to do so. But October and De Beer both have made affidavits from which it is clear that they raise no objection. Even if they were not originally parties to the award, they raise no objection now, and even if they did raise an objection, the confirmation of this award would only be binding upon the parties to the award. But, then, comes to my mind the most important objection of all, and that is that the arbitrator in fixing the width of his new furrow exceeded the limits recognised by the previous arrangement between the parties.

Now upon that point I think that the applicant has made out a good case. There is nothing in this deed of submission to justify the arbitrator in making the width of the furrow 27 feet in lieu of 18 feet. The original contract between the parties was that it was to be 18 feet, and if there was to be a reconstruction of the furrow, there is no reason why that furrow should be three yards wider than the old furrow. There is nothing to show that any of the parties to the deed of submission ever contemplated anything of the kind, and in my opinion the arbitrator had no power to widen the furrow or widen the land to be taken for the furrow beyond what it originally was. A further objection has been raised, and that is that the arbitrator had no power to lead the furrow beyond certain limits, a certain distance from the river. In my opinion, that was one of the matters referred to the arbitrator. It was a matter in dispute between the parties, and the differences were referred to him, and he therefore had authority. In my opinion the arbitrator clearly had a right to direct this furrow to be made where he directed it to be made, subject, of course, to any objection that third parties may make. The result, in my opinion, is that the arbitrator has exceeded his authority in directing the maximum width of the furrow and site to be nine, instead of six, yards. This direction appears to me to be separable from the rest of the award, and not to affect the validity of the whole award. In the case of Bencke v. Schoeman (Buch., 1876, p. 137) the Court, under similar circumstances, ordered the award to be made a Rule of Court, subject to the objectionable part being expunged. In the present case great expense has been incurred in this arbitration; the arbitrator himself has taken great pains in the matter, and if I now set aside his award altogether, the result will be that further proceedings will have to be taken, and that enormous expense will have to be incurred over again. Under all the circumstances, I think that the best course would be for me to direct that the award be set aside, unless the respondents will accept a correction thereof. If they do so, the award will not be set aside, and it will be competent for them to apply to have the award made a Rule of Court, subject to a correction which will not in any way affect the rule of Court. The correction is that the maximum width of the furrow and adjoining site mentioned in the award shall be reduced from nine to six yards.

The order will be that the award be set aside unless the respondents shall consent to the correction. The respondents having consented, no order was made on the application, except that the respondents pay the costs, save the expenses of the affidavits so far as they do not bear on the question of the width of the furrow, which expenses are to be paid by the applicant.

HAYES V. RHODDIE.

Feb 17th.

Medical practitioner—Fees—Responsibility.

This was an action to recover certain fees for professional services.

Mr. Russell (with him Mr. Benjamin) appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Van Zyl appeared for the defendant.

Mr. Van Zyl said that, before the plaintiff proceeded with the case, he wished to make an application to the Court. The case was in the position that the defendant was not present. He had gone on a trading expedition to Namaqualand about a month ago. Everything had been done to communicate with him, but without success. As the amount involved was only a small one (£21), and in order to save any further expenses, counsel was instructed to allow the plaintiff's case to go on, and after the evidence had been taken, the case could be postponed until the defendant came back. Counsel did not think the plaintiff's case would be prejudiced by that course.

Mr. Russell said he could not agree to the course suggested by Mr. Van Zyl. He wished to point out, in the first instance, that there was no affidavit of defendant's absence before the Court.

Mr. Van Zyl: The defendant's wife is present, and she can give evidence.

Christina Rhoddie, the defendant's wife stated her husband had gone to Namaqualand on a trading expedition on September 2.

To the Court: He usually stopped away on these expeditions two or three months.

Witness further stated that she had endeavoured to communicate with defendant, but without avail.

To the Court: Her husband dealt in wagons and carts.

Mr. Russell elected to proceed with the case, and asked the Court to decide it on the evidence which would be brought forward. The defendant had deliberately gone away.

[Hopley, J.: I don't know that he has. Is a man to stop all his business because pleadings are closed against him in a paltry case. You know he is away from home, and are you right to try and proceed with the case in his absence?]

Mr. Russell: But he knew this case was coming on, and he goes away.

[Hopley, J.: Did he know; we have no evidence of it?]

But, surely, my lord, it is his business to keep in touch with his attorney. The view of the plaintiff is that he would rather have the whole of the evidence heard altogether.

[Hopley, J.: Well, the chances are that in that case you may be liable for the costs of the postponement.]

I submit that the defendant's application is not a reasonable one.

[Hopley, J.: what is the object of your wishing to have the case heard all in one day? Do you think the Court will forget the evidence that will be given?]

But that is the rule of Court.

[Hopley, J.: Which is sometimes departed from.]

But it will strengthen the defendant's case to know the plaintiff's evidence.

We had no notice of the postponement, and all our witnesses are here.

[Hopley, J.: I am ready to hear them. You apparently want judgment without hearing the defendant's evidence. What is wrong with his evidence; are you afraid of it?]

I must resist the application of my learned friend.

[Hopley, J.: Let the case go on.]

This action was brought by the plaintiff, Dr. Hayes, of Clanwilliam, against the defendant, for a sum of £21 3s. 6d., being the amount due for certain professional services rendered.

The plaintiff's declaration stated that in April, 1904, plaintiff visited Hex River at the request of the defendant to treat one De Kock. Defendant undertook to defray plaintiff's expenses.

The plea denied that it was at defendant's request that the plaintiff visited De Kock, or that he agreed to defray the plaintiff's charges and expenses.

Alfred Thomas, Hayes, the plaintiff, stated that in April, 1904, he was practising at Clanwilliam. He was out on the day in question, and when he returned found a telegram, which had been sent by "Rhoddie" from Modderfontein, and which stated there had been a gun accident at a farm known as Hex River, and asking witness to go there. Witness drove out to Hex River, and on the way he met a Cape-cart, in which the defendant sat. They chatted together for a few minutes, and defendant assumed liability for the fees. Witness went and saw the man, and had him taken to Clanwilliam next day, where he attended him until he died.

In cross-examination, witness said he had heard that a man named Visser sent the telegram. De Kock was lying in Visser's house.

M. Vorster gave evidence with regard to the conversation that took place between the plaintiff and defendant at the time of De Kock's injury. Rhoodie gave witness instructions to get whatever was required, and that he would be responsible for all expenses, because it was his gun that shot De Kock, and that De Kock was in his service. The gun, which was loaded, had been lying in the wagon, and in pulling out another gun, De Kock touched the trigger, and thus caused the accident.

Witness (continuing) stated that the defendant had paid the expenses of the other creditors in De Kock's estate.

Mr. Visser, owner of the farm Hex River, stated that at Rhoodie's request he sent the telegram to plaintiff. When De Kock was removed Rhoodie asked witness what he owed him for the cart and horses to Modderfontein, and the expenses incurred whilst De Kock was laid up at Hex River.

Mrs. Henrietta Hayes, wife of the plaintiff, testified to having received the telegram, and despatching a telegram in reply. Her husband left the same evening for Hex River.

Mr. Russell closed his case.

David Cornelius Villiers, one time partner with the defendant, stated he was "trekking" with Rhoodie when the accident occurred to De Kock. It was at first thought advisable to take De Kock to Clanwilliam, but as the wound was bleeding profusely, he was taken to Hex River, where Visser wired for the doctor. The doctor arrived, and ordered De Kock's removal to Clanwilliam. Witness did not see the defendant and plaintiff talking. Witness did not consider that either he or Rhoodie was liable for the doctor's fees.

In cross-examination, witness denied that he told plaintiff he was a partner of Rhoodie. Witness and Rhoodie paid all the expenses incurred by De Kock, except the doctor's bill.

Mr. Van Zyl applied for a postponement of the case for the attendance of the defendant.

The further hearing of the case was postponed sine die.

Posten (February 17th, 1906):

Defendant attended and emphatically denied that he ever led the plaintiff to believe that he would be responsible for his charges. All that he did was to send for a doctor, because he was afraid that De Kock would bleed to death if they did not get medical assistance. De Kock was subsequently removed to Clanwilliam, and expired from the effects of the wound. Witness bore one-half share of the expenses of De Kock being attended while he was lying ill at Clanwilliam.

Hopley, J.: I believe the evidence of plaintiff. I believe that at the time of the accident defendant did assume liability for the fees, and the repentance of his generosity has only come at a later stage, when he is called upon to pay the money for which he made himself liable in his generosity. I am sorry that he has taken this line; I would rather that he had taken the liability, and tried to recover from the estate of the unfortunate De Kock, if he had any estate at all. Judgment will be given for the plaintiff as prayed, with costs.

On the application of Mr. Benjamin, plaintiff was allowed his expenses as a necessary witness.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

LUBBE V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1906.
{ Feb. 19th.

Locatio operarum—Scab inspector —Salary—Pleading—Estoppel—Acquiescence.

In an action brought by the plaintiff against the Government for his salary for twelve months as scab inspector for the District of C, the plea was that he had been deported from C. under Martial Law, and that he was entitled to salary only until the date of such deportation. The replication was to the effect that the plaintiff was in no way to blame for the deportation, and that he was always ready and willing to perform his duties. The evidence shewed that he was ready to perform his duties, but was prevented by the Military authorities before and after his removal, whilst the Government neither dismissed him nor insisted upon his performance of his duties. Some months afterwards the Government asked him when he would resume his duties, and his answer was that he had lost a leg by an accident, but would be ready to resume work two months afterwards. He was thereupon summarily dismissed.

Held, on appeal, that the plaintiff was entitled to his salary for the period of his deportation until he became personally unfit for the performance of his duties.

At the trial it was proved that some months before the plaintiff's deportation the Government informed him, by letter, that the payment of his emoluments would be stopped from a certain date, that the plaintiff, in his answer, asked to be paid for the full month within which the notice was given, signing his name as "late inspector," that the Government thereafter tendered payment of salary up to the date of deportation, and that, but for such deportation, the Government would have paid him full salary subsequent thereto notwithstanding the Government letter. The Court below held that the plaintiff was estopped by his acquiescence in the Government notice from claiming salary subsequent thereto.

Held, on appeal, that as the defence of estoppel was quite inconsistent with the pleadings and raised a defence which the plaintiff might have been able to meet if pleaded, the evidence as to the Government letter should not prejudice his claim to full salary.

This was an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Hopley, in an action brought by Franz Jacobus Lubbe, of Clanwilliam, formerly a sheep inspector employed by the Colonial Government, against the Acting Secretary of Agriculture for salary.

The pleadings were as follows: Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that on February 10, 1901, defendant's predecessor in office engaged his services as an inspector of sheep for wards 1, 2, and 6 of the Clanwilliam division, at a salary of £200 a year. It was agreed that the said agreement of service or engagement should be terminable upon one month's notice. Plaintiff had duly performed his part of the agreement. On August 25, 1902, he received notice from the defendant that his services under the agreement were terminated. He was paid his salary until September 16, 1901. He claimed £207 15s. 7d., as salary from September 17, 1901, to September 30, 1902.

Defendant, in his plea, denied paragraph 3 of the declaration as to the performance of his duties by plaintiff. He said that on January 31, 1902, plaintiff was deported and removed from Clanwilliam to Matjesfontein, in the district of Worcester, by the Imperial military authorities, and was detained until July 4 of the said year. Subsequent to the said date he remained in the district of Worcester and elsewhere, and did not return to Clanwilliam district prior to August 25, 1902. By reason of the said removal and absence of plaintiff from Clanwilliam, he was totally unable to perform any of the duties of his said office. Defendant admitted having given notice to plaintiff, and said that the notice referred to was given to plaintiff in consequence of his breach of contract to perform his said duties. On February 3, 1905, defendant tendered to plaintiff his salary from September 17, 1901, to January 31, 1902, inclusive; but plaintiff refused to accept that tender in settlement of his claim. Defendant repeated the tender (£75), with taxed costs to date of tender, but said that by reason of plaintiff's breach of contract he was disentitled to claim any compensation.

Plaintiff, in his replication, admitted his deportation and retention from January 31, 1902, to July 4, 1902, but said that he was in no way to blame for such deportation, which was made under Martial Law. He held himself in readiness at all times to perform the duties of his office. He said that the contract remained in force during the period of his detention. He denied that the notice was given to him in consequence of his inability to perform any of the said duties, and said that the notice was given to him by reason of a severe accident occurring to him after his release from the said deportation.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan) was for appellant; Mr.

Searle, K.O. (with him Mr. Morgan Evans), was for respondent.

Mr. Burton: In July, 1902 the plaintiff received notice to resume his duties. He had met with an accident, and asked to be allowed time up to January 1st, 1903. The notice of dismissal was dated August 25th. That was the first intimation he received of his dismissal. He was engaged on a monthly notice. (See the evidence at the trial, the circulars put in, and letters.) The important point is the suspension of salary during the period which elapsed between his deportation and his accident. Hopley, J., set up for the Government a case which they had specifically abandoned. (See the judgment in the Court below—15 C.T.R., 523.) He dismisses the deportation as having nothing to do with the case, and justifies the dismissal on the ground of plaintiff's accident. He takes up the ground of estoppel, but estoppel must be specially pleaded. The Government set up that defence in Van der Merwe's case (21 S.C.R., 520, and 14 C.T.R., 732), but here they abandoned that line. In Van der Merwe's case the notice of suspension had never been received. The Government on discovering this changed their ground. In their letter (at p. 39 of the record) they order payment to be made to one Bailey, but not to Lubbe, and the only difference between the two cases was that Bailey had not been deported and Van der Merwe had. The Government alleged that Van der Merwe had broken his contract by being deported.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Bailey was never deported, and therefore was not incapacitated by absence from performing his duties.]

But the Government keep open their contract with Van der Merwe, retain him as a scab inspector, and expect him to be ready to perform his duties at any time. A tender of payment to the end of January cannot stand with a general denial of contract.

[Buchanan, J.: They allege that the deportation was the reason your pay was stopped, but was that so?]

The principles laid down in Van der Merwe's case show that if the contract is kept open the employer is liable. As to deportation, here is a man who, without any fault of his own, is sent away, and is thereby hindered from performing his duties; but neither could Van Wilgh, who remained in Clanwilliam, perform his duties either, and yet he gets his pay, and Lubbe does not. In any case, he was entitled to a month's notice.

Mr. Searle: The only contract between the parties was embodied in section 10 of Circular 23 of 1889. The appointment was a monthly one, to do duty within a particular area. The appellant was a monthly servant, and the Government could suspend the payment of his salary when it became impossible for him to perform his duties.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is the letter of October 3rd referred to in the plea?]

No, but it is stated that appellant did no work. This is a case of estoppel, and there is no need specially to plead an estoppel in pais.

The appellant was not prejudiced, and had he proposed to produce further evidence, no doubt a postponement would have been granted. He says that the agreement remained in force till October 10th, 1902. We deny that it was in force after September, 1901. The allegations as to deportation are surplusage.

[Maasdorp, J.: In his replication appellant gives his reasons for not doing his work. You should have met these in your rejoinder.]

No, we join issue, and that is a good plea. The plaintiff should either have said, "I will do no more duty," or else have submitted to the conditions laid down by the Government. The plaintiff was not ready and willing to perform his duties after September, 1901. When he claims for the sixteen day of September he gives no hint of a claim for October, November, and December. He acknowledges the notice to stop work. He never from that time tried to do work. The Government knew nothing about his deportation till long after it took place. In Van der Merwe's case, Maasdorp, J. (14 C.T.R., p. 738), bases his judgment on the fact that the Government notice of suspension was never received by the plaintiff. Then, again, Van der Merwe remained in his own district, appellant did not. There may have been no fault on his part, but, as a matter of fact, he was not there. He stopped work on account of the Government letter of October 30th. He says that he was ready and willing to do the work, but he knew that he would not be asked to do it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He may have been ready and willing to do it.]

After October 30th, 1901, a new contract was entered into. He was to do no work, and to receive no pay.

[Buchanan, J.: Your defence is that on account of his deportation he was not able to do his work.]

Yes, but he was not prejudiced, and we could amend the plea even now.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But you tendered up to a date subsequent to the notice.]

But that was no prejudice to him. See Everest and Strobe on Estoppel (p. 402). Freeman v. Cooke (2 Exch., 654). He has led us to believe that he would not do work, and would not claim payment after a certain date. As to evidence on the contract, Lery v. Tilleley (1 Juta, 228). See also Nathan's Law of South Africa (vol. 2, p. 617), Claridge v.

Kellaway (8 Juta, 140), Grobelaar v. Colonial Government (15 C.T.R., 591).

Mr. Burton was not heard in reply.

De Villiers, C. J.: The action was brought by the plaintiff to recover his salary as scab inspector from the 17th September, 1901, up to the 30th September, 1902. The plaintiff alleges that he has performed his part of the agreement, and that the agreement remained in force until September, 1902. The plea to the declaration is that on the 31st January, 1902, the plaintiff was deported and removed from Clanwilliam to Matjesfontein, and that by reason of the deportation and the absence of the plaintiff, he was totally unable to perform his duties; and, further, the defendant tenders on and to the 31st January, 1902, to pay the salary up to that date. The replication is that the deportation was entirely beyond the control of the plaintiff or the defendant, and that the plaintiff held himself ready to proceed with his work at any time when the restrictions were removed, and therefore his deportation is no defence at all. That is the simple question raised by the pleadings. In the course of the evidence, however, some evidence was given, upon which the defendant relied, as showing that after the contract had been entered into, there was such conduct on the part of the plaintiff as amounted to a waiver or acquiescence by him in the determination of the Government not to pay him salary. That question is not raised by the pleadings at all, and if it had been raised, it is quite possible the plaintiff might have had a good answer to it. It is a matter that raises an entirely new defence. Now the learned judge found upon this letter that the plaintiff acquiesced by the answer which he wrote, and that if he had not so acquiesced, the Government would have given the plaintiff notice, as the Government had a right to do. But, when I refer to the evidence given by Mr. Currey, it is by no means clear that the Government would have dismissed the plaintiff if he had not acquiesced. Mr. Currey's evidence clearly shows that if the plaintiff had not been deported it would have paid him for the intervening time, in the same way as it paid Van Willigh, to whom a notice of temporary suspension had also been given. Now, the letter written by the Government was an answer to the letter written by the plaintiff. He wrote on the 9th September, 1901: "Enclosed I send you my monthly report for August. It is very small, but I can't help it. I could not get a pass out to-day to fetch some other horses or mules, and perhaps after that I will be able to go out a little again"—showing all through a readiness to do his work. Then come to the letter of the 9th October, 1901. There the Chief Inspector writes: "With reference to your letter dated 9th ult., advising me that owing to the disturbed state of the country, you were unable to properly perform your duties as sheep inspector, I have the honour to advise you that, in view of this, the Government has decided to temporarily stop payment of your emoluments, and that the Civil Commissioner of your district has been instructed to cease paying you from 1st September, 1901. When again authorised by this office to assume duty, your emoluments will be paid as heretofore." Then comes the plaintiff's letter of the 11th January, 1902, upon which the learned Judge strongly relied. In that letter he asks for payment for the whole of September, and he signs himself "The Late Sheep Inspector." I can quite understand the learned judge and the argument of the learned counsel for the respondents that the original contract had been temporarily suspended after the plaintiff had acquiesced in such suspension. But, not only is there no plea to that effect, but there is a statement by Mr. Currey that the salary is withheld for a wholly different reason. Moreover, there is this pregnant fact that the Government in its plea tendered payment until 31st January, 1901, the date of the deportation, and thereby recognised that notwithstanding the letter of the previous year, and the alleged acquiescence of the plaintiff in that letter, they were ready to pay to the 31st January, the date of the deportation. Under the circumstances, it seems to me not just to the plaintiff that the notice of October 9th, 1901, should be made the ground of defence. It is quite possible, and not improbable, that the plaintiff might have had a very good answer to such a defence. Now, that being so, the only question which remains is whether the decision in Van der Merwe v. Colonial Government (14 C.T.R., 732), the correctness of which is not impugned on behalf of the respondent, is applicable to the present case. The effect of that decision I take to be that, bearing in mind the special nature of the duties of a sheep inspector, he does not lose the right to his full salary, if during the period of his employment, he is ready and willing to perform his duties but is prevented, not by personal unfitness, but by external circumstances over which he has not control, from actually performing his duties, whilst the Government, on the other hand, neither dismisses him nor insists upon his performing the duties. The only substantial difference between that case and the present is that Van der Merwe had not been deported, but although he had not been deported, it was just as impossible for him to perform his duties as it was for the present plaintiff after his deportation. Even if the plaintiff had remained in the district of Clanwilliam he would have been prevented by the state of affairs under Martial Law from performing any of his duties. His colleague, Van Weilligh, was not deported, but could not get a pass from the military authorities to enable him to do his work, and yet he was paid his salary. It has not been suggested from the Bar that the plaintiff had been guilty of conduct which justified his removal, and certainly no evidence to that effect was tendered. Mr. Currey, the Under Secretary for Agriculture, in his evidence, assumed that the plaintiff merited his deportation, and relied upon this as a ground for summary dismissal; but this assumption is warranted neither by the evidence in the present case nor by the circumstances known to this Court under which the military authorities under Martial Law deported other loyal and law-abiding subjects. Until the unfortunate accident which deprived the plaintiff of the use of his leg he was personally quite fit for the performance of his duties, and was ready and willing to perform them, and the Government, knowing that he was prevented by external circumstances from performing his duties, neither dismissed him nor requested him to do any work. If he had been dismissed he might have sought some other occupation instead of holding himself in readiness for work, as soon as the removal of Martial Law should permit of his resuming his duties. In July, 1902, the Government asked him whether he could resume his duties, and, if so, when. His answer was that owing to his accident he could not resume before October 1st, and he asked to be excused until January 1st. Thereupon, on August 25th, 1902, he received a notice of summary dismissal. His counsel now does not press for the payment of any salary after he had become incapacitated for work. The result is that the appeal must be allowed and judgment entered for the plaintiff for £174 8s. 11d. with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Buchanan, J., and Maasdorp, J., concurred.

Ex parte ROUX. { 1906.
 { Feb. 19th.

Mr. Burton moved, as a matter of urgency, for a rule attaching certain 200 sheep and lambs pending an action to be brought by petitioner, who is a farmer residing at the Oaks, division of Caledon, against John Jos. Moore, as trustee in the insolvent estate of Dow Jenbrand Steyn Weymar. Petitioner's case was, briefly, that he bought the stock from Weymar, that he gave a promissory note and left the stock to be grazed with Weymar, and that they were subsequently removed to another farm. The sheep were brought up in the insolvent's schedule, and were about to be sold by auction on the 22nd inst., by order of the trustee.

Rule granted, calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from selling the sheep pending an action to be instituted forthwith, and to be brought to trial next term, the order to be telegraphed to the respondent.

REX V. ROOS.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Barkly East, who had convicted the appellant (Andries G. Roos) of certain stock thefts.

Appellant, it appeared, had been charged with stealing two sheep, the property of Lewis J. Naude, and one ewe, the property of Jacobus Cornelis Vorster. On the former charge, he had been sentenced to six months' imprisonment, with hard labour, and on the latter, to three months' imprisonment, with hard labour. His defence with regard to the first charge was that the sheep were his own property, and with regard to the second, that he had made a bona fide mistake.

The ground of the appeal was that the conviction in each case was not supported by the evidence given at the trial, and was contrary to law.

Mr. Roux was for appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C. J.: as to the first of these charges, it is clear that Naude lost his sheep, and that he afterwards found them in the possession of the accused. It is now said that they were really not in the possession of the accused, as he had released them; but I think the evidence established that he was exercising control over these sheep. He claimed them as his own, and before Naude came up, he had an opportunity of seeing whether there were any strange sheep among his stock. He came back and said that there were none, except one of October Nel's. In the course of the trial the native Jim, who was called, and who, it was said, had been in the service of the accused, said that two sheep that were marked "L 3" had come into the possession of the accused, and that he (Jim) pointed this out to the accused, but accused said they were his. That was the identical mark that belonged to Naude, and if his evidence is correct, then the accused had exercised ownership in respect of these sheep, for although he did not re-mark them, he had them shorn. The appellant's conduct after the sheep had been found, was not that of an innocent man. Instead of giving the explanation which counsel gives to-day, he said: "I will give them up, and you must be lenient with me." It is a question of credibility of evidence, but if the evidence of Jim is to be believed, then I think that the accused is guilty. Then it is said that the age of the sheep does not correspond with Jim's evidence, but a native is more likely to be able to identify a sheep than to remember the year. Under these circumstances, I think that the Court should not interfere with the decision in the case of the theft from Naude. The theft from Vorster seems to me to stand on pretty much the same footing. The accused admitted in his evidence that it was an ewe which belonged to Vorster, but he said it was a mistake. Here also a good deal depends upon the evidence given by accused, and also upon the conduct of the accused himself, and his conduct would appear to show that he was a guilty man. Under all the circumstances, I think that the appeal should be dismissed, and the conviction confirmed.

REX V. VAN NIEKERK.

Mr. Howel Jones moved, on the petition of Mr. De Vos, of the Attorney-General's Department, for the removal of the trial of Anna Elizabeth van Niekerk, charged with contraventions of the Medical Ordinance at Stellenbosch and elsewhere, from the Supreme Court to the ensuing Circuit Court at Malmesbury.

Application granted.

In re ROYAL HOTEL CO.

Mr. Roux moved, as a matter of urgency, for confirmation of the second report of the liquidators of the Royal Hotel Company, Cape Town.

De Villiers, C. J., asked wherein lay the urgency of the application?

Mr. Roux said that the liquidators were carrying on the business at a loss, and there was heavy interest running on the debentures, so that the liquidators desired to get the sale completed as soon as possible.

De Villiers, C. J., asked counsel what was the effect of the report?

Mr. Roux said that the liquidators called for tenders, and the hotel had been sold for £50,000, the amount of the highest tender. The report had lain for inspection, and no objections had come in.

De Villiers, C. J., said that notice should have been given to the Registrar, but under the circumstances the report would be confirmed.

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

TRIAL CAUSES.

STYLE V. STYLE. { 1906.
Feb. 20th.

Mr. D. Buchanan applied on behalf of the plaintiff, Jacobus Johannes Style, for an order for the restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The defendant was in default.

The plaintiff's declaration set forth that he and the defendant were married at George in 1881. Plaintiff was engaged in hostilities during the late war, and the defendant went to the Orange River Colony. He had since asked her to return to him, but she had refused to do so.

Mr. Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Registry Department, produced a copy of the marriage certificate.

The plaintiff, Jacobus Johannes Style, stated he was married at George in 1881. He resided at Willowmore for ten years, and then went to the Orange River Colony. During the war plaintiff got leave to return to Cape Colony, but his wife could not get the necessary permission to do so, and consequently remained behind. When peace was declared, witness went to the Orange River Colony for her, but she refused to return with him. Witness had written to her offering to defray her expenses but she refused to come back.

A decree of restitution was granted, the defendant being ordered to return to plaintiff on or before March 31, failing which the usual decree of divorce would be granted.

DE BEERS CONSOLIDATED MINES, LTD. V. HENDRIKZ.

This was an application for the repeal of letters patent granted to defendant.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C.), appeared for plaintiffs. Defendant was in default.

Sir H. Juta explained that the plaintiffs in 1896 secured the rights of a machine, which was patented in that year, and which was used for sorting diamonds. In this machine the material was made to slide down a plane, which was greased, and the diamonds stuck to the grease, whilst garnets and stones of less specific gravity would slide away. In 1905 the defendant took out letters patent for a machine, in which the principle was exactly the same, and this action was brought to repeal the letters patent granted to defendant.

James Steward, manager of the Diamond Sorting Department of the De Beers Consolidated Mines, stated he was acquainted with the patent which De Beers acquired in 1896, and also the patent secured by defendant. The use of grease was not known prior to the rights acquired by De Beers in 1896. The defendant's patent would not be of any use without grease.

To the Court: The machine was so effective that the material was passed over two machines, and rarely one per cent. of diamonds were found in the second machine.

George Bowers put in the specifications and letters patent of the two machines.

Buchanan, J., said there was no doubt but that plaintiffs had priority in this machine, and the defendant appeared to have adopted exactly the same method. No defence had been set up, and judgment would be as prayed, with costs.

In re ESTATE HEATLIE.

Mr. Upington moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of a curator bonis in the estate of Barry Heatlie. He said the application was an unusual one, but when the petition was read to the Court, he felt sure they would grant the application pending the appointment of a permanent trustee.

The petition of three of the creditors in the estate, viz., Messrs. Marais, Anderson, and Brown, was to the effect that the estate was provisionally adjudicated as insolvent on February 17. As stated in the sequestration petition, a warrant had been issued for the arrest of Heatlie, but his whereabouts could not be ascertained by the police. Heatlie, in his capacity as estate agent and broker, had had control of various trust funds, deeds, securities, and shares, and the fact that there was nobody to take charge of the office and protect these funds, deeds, and shares, was causing great anxiety to petitioners and to other persons who had dealings with Heatlie. In his business a considerable number of payments were being tendered for rents of properties belonging to himself and to other people for whom he was acting, and there was great probability of rent and other amounts due to the estate being lost unless somebody was authorised to receive and collect it. It was moreover said that he was the holder of a considerable amount of mining and other shares, which had been endorsed in blank, and were the property of persons other than Heatlie. For this and other reasons petitioners considered the appointment of a provisional trustee very necessary for the protection of the interests of the petitioners and other creditors. Mr. Harry Gibson, of Cape Town, was acquainted with the character of the business carried on by Heatlie, and was well able to take over the management of Heatlie's affairs, pending the appointment of a permanent trustee.

The application was granted, and Mr. H. Gibson was appointed provisional trustee.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ORMAND AND CO. v. { 1906.
BENSIMON. { Feb. 20th.

This was an action brought by Ormand and Co., builders and contractors, Three Anchor Bay, against Abel Samuel Bensimon, broker and agent, Bensimon's Buildings, Sea Point, to recover two sums of £186 and £27 17s. 8d. respectively.

The action arose out of a contract whereby plaintiffs undertook to erect on behalf of defendant certain stores at Sea Point for £930. Plaintiffs said that they had carried out the contract with certain modifications made at the instance and request of defendant; that the building was delivered to defendant on the 13th May, 1905; that defendant had paid £744, and that the balance of £186 was now due, and defendant refused and neglected to pay the same. Defendant was also liable to pay £30 7s. 8d. in respect of other works and materials, less an allowance of £2 10s. Defendant, in his plea, denied that he had accepted delivery of the building on the 13th May last, but said that he took occupation on condition that the contract should be duly completed, and defects then pointed out, and subsequently discovered, should be rectified before the retention money should be paid. He alleged that in several ways, as set out in the plea, plaintiffs had failed to carry out the contract. He said that the building was less in width than specified, and he should be allowed £36 for this defect. As to the other shortcomings, according to estimate, the cost of duly completing the building would be £131 1s. 6d. As to the claim of £27 17s. 8d., he admitted liability up to £22 7s. 5d. He further said that he was entitled to commission from plaintiffs for work received through his instrumentality of £23 18s. 3d. Against the sums claimed by plaintiffs, defendant said that he was entitled to bring into his account the sums of £36, £131 1s. 6d., and £5 10s. 3d., making a total of £172 11s. 9d. The total amount claimed by plaintiffs was £213 17s. 8d., thus showing a difference in favour of plaintiffs of £17 7s. 8d., which sum defendant tendered. Plaintiffs, in their replication, denied the allegations as to non-completion of contract with the modifications agreed upon, but admitted their liability for the commission claimed by defendant (£23 18s. 3d.), and said that they were willing to set off the same against their claim.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Sutton) was for plaintiffs; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) was for defendant.

Hopley, J., after hearing the pleadings, said that the case was surely one that might be referred to an expert on the spot.

Mr. Benjamin said that his learned friend (Mr. Buchanan) and himself were agreed that the case was essentially one for a referee.

The case was referred by consent to Mr. A. T. Babbs, quantity surveyor, with directions to report to the Court on the matters in dispute between the parties, as set out in the pleadings.

ESTATE COWLING V. COWLING.

This was an action brought by Messrs. Currey and Wolf, as executors dative in the estate of the late Charlotte Cowling against John Frederick Cowling, of Claremont, for a statement of account in the joint estate of defendant and his deceased wife.

From the pleadings it appeared that defendant (who is an hotel keeper at Claremont) and his late wife, Charlotte Cowling, were married in community of property, and that the latter died on January 3, 1887, leaving two children, William Charles and Jane Elizabeth, both minors at that time, but at present majors, the daughter being now married to one Preston. Charlotte Cowling died intestate. In 1899 defendant remarried by ante-nuptial contract, the children by the first marriage being still minors. Defendant did not pass a kinderbewys in favour of the children, nor was the value of the estate ascertained, save that defendant made a declaration on oath that the value of the estate was below £100.

Plaintiffs alleged that at the death of the said Charlotte Cowling the joint estate of herself and defendant had a vested interest in an estate of considerable value belonging to defendant's father, subject to a life interest in favour of defendant's mother, who had since died. They said that they had called upon defendant to render a statement of account in the joint estate, in possession of which defendant had remained since his first wife's death. Defendant refused to render any account. By reason of his neglect to cause an inventory of the joint estate to be made, defendant had forfeited his right to share in any of the proceeds of the joint estate. Plaintiffs claimed a statement of account, showing the assets in the joint estate, debate of the account, a declaration that defendant had forfeited all right to share in anything accruing in the joint estate after his first wife's death and payment of such sums as may be found to be due. In the course of their declaration plaintiffs said that defendant had recently filed an inventory purporting to be an inventory of the joint estate, but they denied that it was a true and correct inventory.

Defendant, in his plea, went into the relationships of the joint estate with the hotel at Claremont which he had been carrying on, and he alleged that the assets in the joint estate in question were, after deduction of debts due by his father's estate and himself, under the sum of £100. Defendant had had a lease of the hotel under which he had the option of purchasing the property in 1891 for £1,500. He had carried out alteration and had passed mortgages on the property. Defendant expressed his readiness to file an account of the joint estate as at Mrs. Cowling's death, but plaintiff refused to accept this.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Dr. Greer), for plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Lewis) for defendant.

William Arthur Currey, the secretary of the General Estate and Orphan Chamber, said he was appointed executor dative with Mr. Charles Wolf in August of last year, on the estate of the late Mrs. Charlotte Cowling. The asset in the estate was Cowling's Hotel in Claremont, which was valuable. An inventory was made for the purpose of furnishing security to the Master. It was signed by Mr. Cowling, who, however, denied the principle of the half-share. The hotel was free, but in consequence of what he heard, witness wrote to Mr. Cowling warning him against tying the hotel to Messrs. Ohleson's or any other firm. Mr. Cowling had never prepared an account.

Cross-examined: The inventory he had prepared did not include stock. By virtue of defendants' failure to file an inventory, they claimed the whole estate.

This was all the evidence called for plaintiffs at the present stage.

John Frederick Cowling (the defendant) also gave evidence. He was cross-examined at considerable length by Mr. Searle as to the position of the joint estate at and subsequent to his first wife's death. A good deal of the cross-examination was directed to the state and progress of the hotel business at Claremont.

Re-examined: Witness knew nothing about being required to file a death notice and make an inventory until he went to Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne's last year. The hotel business did not revive until about 1901.

By the Court: Had he made a statement of the affairs of himself and wife in 1887, he should have had to show that they were insolvent. He was virtually insolvent at that time. The matter of making the inventory was first brought under his notice by Mr. Kayser, when he went to Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne's in regard to making his will.

Archibald Bultitude, manager for Messrs. Ohlsson's, also spoke to defendant's financial relations with witness's principals. Defendant, he said, continued to borrow from his firm until the end of 1905.

G. H. Moller, valuer, Cape Town, said that he valued the defendant's hotel as it was in 1884 at between £500 and £600. After the new story had been added, he should say the value was £1,500. He should regard £14,000 as a fair valuation for the property, with its licence, at the present day.

Miss Elizabeth Cowling, sister of the defendant, and Mrs. Cowling, the defendant's present wife, having been called.

Hopler, J., said he thought the plaintiffs might very properly consider their position between now and the adjourned hearing. Evidently, as Sir Henry Juta had remarked, they had not "discovered a gold mine."

Postea (February 28th).

Mr. Lewis stated that a settlement had been arrived at, and he (counsel) had now to apply for judgment in terms of consent paper.

Judgment entered in terms of consent paper.

TRIAL CAUSES.

RAY V. RAY. { 1906.
Feb. 21st.

Mr. Benjamin said that in this case personal service had been effected on the defendant in Australia, and there was an affidavit to that effect, but in returning the affidavit the customary authentication from an official of the Court had not been annexed. The rectification had not yet arrived. The action was for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, brought by the husband against his wife.

Reginald Ray stated he was married on the 26th November, 1887, at Islington. At the time of his marriage he was employed by the Bucknall Line of steamers. On account of certain information as to the defendant's misconduct, he had a quarrel in October, 1901. He condoned that offence, and subsequently came out to South Africa to settle down. Several times he had asked his wife to come out, and in reply she sent insulting letters. Recently she wrote wishing him good-bye, and stating that she was going to Australia.

This concluded the evidence, and Maasdorp, J., said the matter could be mentioned again upon the arrival of the papers from Australia.

KEATING V. KEATING.

This was an action brought by Dennis James Keating against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff. The defendant was in default. The parties were married in Calcutta on March 24, 1902. After a couple of months they went to New York, where they lived for a couple of years. The plaintiff came out to Cape Town, and his wife acquiesced in his departure, the understanding being that he would send for her when his business was fixed up here. Plaintiff had tendered the expenses, but the defendant refused to comply with his request to come out to South Africa.

The defendant was ordered to return by the 14th June, or to show cause on the 28th June, personal service to be effected, plaintiff to tender travelling expenses to the defendant.

HERRING V. HERRING.

This was an action brought by Sydney Herring, of Matatiele, for a dissolution of the bonds of marriage with his wife, and forfeiture of all benefits, on the ground of her adultery with one Johnstone. Mr. Sutton was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

Sydney Herring, plaintiff in the action, stated on the 3rd May last year he was married to the defendant at Port Shepstone, Natal. For about three months they lived happily together, when he objected to the defendant drinking. On the 27th November, Johnstone came in to see witness, and said he had a most serious confession to make, and, in front of his wife, Johnstone admitted having committed adultery with the defendant. The defendant admitted this. Witness told the defendant to stay in the house, and next morning he would send her down to the coast, but she insisted upon leaving with Johnstone, who was living with her at present. Johnstone was a most intimate friend of witness.

Maasdorp, J., said it was a most peculiar case. More evidence would have to be produced that the defendant and Johnstone were living together. It might be all a got up affair.

Mr. Sutton suggested the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of John Hutt, Nat Gould, and Basil Bathurst.

Maasdorp, J., granted the commission, appointing the Magistrate of Matatiele to take the evidence of the three witnesses and any other witnesses, notice of the commission to be given to the defendant.

KONING V. KONING.

This was an action brought by Louise Koning against her husband, Dirk Koning, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Sutton was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

The parties were married in Cape Town in January, 1904. The plaintiff and defendant lived unhappily at Parow, where the defendant several times threatened to take her life. On one occasion the defendant struck her with a chair. In October, 1904, he again threatened her, and she was forced to leave the house for a few days. On her return the house was locked up. The following December the defendant sent her a Christmas card, but it was addressed to her in her maiden name. Subsequently the defendant deserted her, and at present she believed he was in Johannesburg.

The defendant was ordered to return to the plaintiff by April 1, or to show cause by April 17, personal service to be effected, or registered letter, as before, one publication in a Johannesburg paper.

GULTIG V. GULTIG.

This was an action for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The plaintiff resided at Wynberg, and the defendant was in the district of Uitenhage. The parties were married at Port Elizabeth in 1880, and there were seven children, five of whom were minors. In 1902 the defendant deserted the plaintiff.

Mr. De Waal was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

Annie Margaret Gultig, plaintiff, stated after her marriage in 1880, at Port Elizabeth, she lived unhappily with her husband. He was a drinker.

Maasdorp, J.: When did this unkindness begin?

Plaintiff: After the marriage.

He has been treating you unkindly for 26 years?—Yes.

Proceeding, witness said there were seven children of the marriage, five of whom were minors. In 1902 the defendant deserted her, alleging that she had chased him away.

The defendant was ordered to return to the plaintiff by April 1, or show cause by April 17 why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

BRIMACOMBE V. BRIMACOMBE.

This was an action for a decree of judicial separation, and for maintenance, brought by Annie Brimacombe against her husband, by reason of his drunken and violent habits.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

The parties were married in October, 1898. There were two children of the marriage. In 1903 the defendant became greatly addicted to drink, and on several occasions he had used violence towards her. The defendant had been dismissed from his employment, and the plaintiff had to retail milk, the money for which the defendant, on one occasion, collected and squandered in drink. In January the defendant kicked her, and ejected her out of the house. He warned her at the same time if she came back he would kill her. Plaintiff asked for maintenance at the rate of £5 a month, and custody of the children.

A decree of judicial separation granted, plaintiff to have custody of the children, defendant to pay maintenance at the rate of £3 a month, and costs, the first payment to be made on March 15.

POOLE V. GARDINER AND CO.

This action was for an account in respect of the sale of certain donkeys, or, in the alternative, a sum of £107 13s. The declaration set out that the plaintiff, Wm. Arthur Poole, was a speculator, of Mafeking, and the defendants, live-stock dealers. About April 19, 1905, at Mafeking, the defendants engaged plaintiff to proceed to Vryburg, and take delivery of twenty donkeys, purchased by defendants, and to pay over a sum of £200, which was handed by the defendants to the plaintiff. On the 20th April plaintiff took delivery of the mules, and paid the £200. Whilst at Vryburg, plaintiff was ordered to buy thirteen other donkeys. He communicated with defendants, and in consequence of instructions, plaintiff purchased ten of the donkeys at £10 each, and paid £100, and also £7 13s. for railage to Cape Town. Plaintiff subsequently found that the defendants had not paid the purchase price to his credit, the defendants saying that some of the donkeys had been rejected at Cape Town. The defendants proposed to the plaintiff that the donkeys should be sold, and the loss, if any, shared, to which plaintiff assented. The defendants refused to render an account of the same.

The plea set out that a certain age and height, along with a veterinary certificate, were stipulated for, and this the plaintiff failed to carry out. The agreement over the loss concerned not only the ten donkeys, but the whole of the thirty. They tendered a true account, with taxed costs, showing a loss of £42, one-half of which they were entitled to claim in reconvention.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Benjamin was for the defendants.

After evidence had been led and counsel had been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J., gave judgment for the defendants, with costs, on the claim in convention, and judgment for the defendant in reconvention, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

PRINCE V. LOUW. { 1906.
Feb. 21st.

This was an action brought by Susanna Johanna Prince, widow, Kenilworth, against Jan. P. de Villiers Louw, farmer, division of Stellenbosch, to recover a certain horse, cart, harness, and poultry, or their value, and also damages for wrongful detention.

Plaintiff, in her declaration, said that defendant had since the 23rd October last been in wrongful and unlawful possession of a certain horse, cart, harness, 25 fowls, and two ducks, belonging to her, and, although called upon to return the same, had neglected and refused to do so. She claimed immediate delivery of the said property, or, alternatively, payment of the sum of £38 15s., and also £25 damages sustained by reason of the wrongful detention.

Defendant, in his plea, denied that the horse, cart, etc., were the property of plaintiff, and that she had sustained any damages. He said that he bought from one Bertram Leather a certain trap, horse, harness, and two ploughs for £22. Leather was held out to the world as the true owner of the property.

Plaintiff, in her replication, denied that the articles were the property of Leather, or that he was authorised to sell the same.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Roux) was for plaintiff; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for defendant.

Mr. Burton said that Leather had disappeared without any warning, and it was believed had gone to Australia.

Susanna Johanna Prince (the plaintiff) said that she was the owner of a farm called Retreat at Stellenbosch, which formerly belonged to her husband, who died about two years ago. After his death witness removed to Kenilworth. She met Leather and Beard last year, and negotiations took place with a view of the former taking over the farm. Witness entered into a written agreement with Leather and Beard, who described themselves as 'provisional directors of the syndicate about to be formed, and to be known as the Farm Produce and Live-stock Agency, Ltd.' The purchase price of the farm was to be £7,000, payable as to £2,000 in cash, £3,000 in preference shares, and £2,000 in ordinary shares. Witness left the farm on the 2nd June last, and treated Leather and Beard as tenants, pending the formation of the company. The syndicate, however, did not go through. Witness left on the farm some furniture in the house, for which Leather and Beard paid her, and also a horse, cart, and harness, 25 fowls, and two ducks. Leather stayed on the farm. The arrangement was that the horse, cart, harness, etc., were to remain on the farm. If the company should be formed, they were to pay for the things; if not, then the things were to remain hers, either on the farm or to be removed to Kenilworth. About the 21st October, she believed she heard that Mr. Leather had left the farm. On going to the farm, she found that it was deserted, nothing remaining except the furniture in the house. She ascertained that the horse, cart, harness, etc., were in the possession of Mr. Louw, who was a neighbouring farmer. She did not authorise Leather or anyone else to dispose of the property in question.

Cross-examined: Beard had been living at witness's house in Prince's-road, Kenilworth. Beard was her principal witness in the case brought against Mr. Myburgh. He was managing her affairs. Leather came from New Zealand, she believed, about April. She did not know his age.

Mr. Buchanan: He was a young boy, about 21 years of age?

Witness: I don't know his age. He is a young man.

He had some money when you met him?—I suppose he had some money.

You know he spent all his money on that farm?—I don't know. I was never on the farm after Mr. Leather took it over.

Further cross-examined: Witness had also lost a cart and mules under similar circumstances. She had not been able to trace them, but if she found them, she would take steps to recover them. She might have lent money to Leather from time to time. It was not true that Beard originally bought the horse, and that she lent him £10 for that purpose.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Jan P. de Villiers Louw (the defendant) said that he spoke to the plaintiff about some sand on the farm. Plaintiff replied that she had nothing to do with the farm, and had nothing upon it. Witness knew that the cart, horse, and harness were on the farm at the time. He took it that the things were the property of the syndicate. Leather seemed to be about 20 or 21 years of age. In October Leather left the farm. Witness could see that a lot of money had been spent on it. Leather offered him the mules, cart, harrows, horse, harness, and little gig. Witness wanted the horse, harness and gig, and bought them on the 17th October. They entered into a deed of sale. The purchase price was £20. Witness gave Leather a bill payable at thirty day. The dispute arose before the note was due. Witness had not paid the note.

[Hopley, J.: Then why don't you tear the note up and return the property to these people, instead of bringing the dispute into the Supreme Court? Is it such a good bargain that you don't want to give it up?]

Witness: It was a fair price.

Cross-examined: Witness thought that £20 was a fair price for the horse, cart, and harness, although a few months before Mrs. Prince might have given about £35 for the property. The horse was crippled when he bought it. He paid £1 15s. for the fowls and ducks. These were not included in the bill. He also bought two ploughs from Leather, and gave a bill for £2. The ploughs were not included in the bill of sale. He did not know what the reason of the omission was. If he succeeded in this action, he should pay the bill, which was due to Bateman, the holder. He did not know whether Bateman had advanced the money.

A. J. van Sittert, of Stellenbosch, having given evidence,

Police-Constable Thomas Gloucester, of Stellenbosch, said that Beard called at the Police Office and laid a complaint as to the property in question having been removed. Beard said that the horse, cart, etc., were his property, that Leather was sub-manager of the farm, and that Mrs. Prince had nothing to do with it.

Mr. Buchanan having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J.: It is inconceivable to me that if at the time the contract with the proposed syndicate was entered into, and the syndicate had taken over the property in dispute, these things would not have been included in the inventory. We have not only the document, but we have also the oath of the plaintiff herself, whose evidence has not been shaken in cross-examination. The contemporaneous documents absolutely bear out the plaintiff in her contention. I don't lay any stress on the isolated disjointed pieces of conversation which we have had repeated to us without the context. As to the deed of sale, produced by defendant, what does strike one is that the ploughs and certain other articles bought by defendant were not included in the document, although the cart, horse, and harness were included. Mr. Louw seems to me to have been exceedingly rash in dealing with a person who was acting dishonestly. Leather seems to have, perhaps, made a bad bargain, and then dishonestly to have set about raising what he could. If there is any loss to be sustained, it must be sustained by Mr. Louw, who, if he has lost anything at all, it seems to me, has lost the costs of this ill-advised action. Judgment will be for plaintiff as prayed, with costs of suit. No damages will be awarded. Defendant must re-deliver the cart, horse, and harness, 20 fowls, and two ducks. If he is unable to re-deliver the fowls and ducks, he must pay the plaintiff £2 10s.

ESTATE FRASER V. KUYZER.

This was an action brought by G. Joppe and J. B. Cleghorn as curators bonis in the estate of Thomas I. Fraser against Arnold Kuyzer, of Cape Town, to recover £28, rent of certain offices in Longmarket-street.

The plaintiff's case was that defendant had occupied certain offices belonging to the estate in Longmarket-street, and that he owed £28, being four months' rent. They said that on November 4, 1904, he secretly, and without the customary or any notice, left and vacated the said offices, and terminated the contract of hiring and letting. He was at that time owing the rent for September and October. Plaintiffs were entitled to the rent for November, and also the rent for December in lieu of notice.

Defendant, in his plea, admitted the tenancy of the offices, but said that he took the premises for the purpose of starting a photographic studio. The plaintiffs afterwards let a portion of the same building to the Citizens' Employment and Relief Committee, in close proximity to the rooms he had hired, and as a consequence of the crowds of unemployed that used to throng the stairs he was prevented from carrying on his business properly. He said that he gave notice to the plaintiffs in writing on November 4, and enclosed the key. He also said that the plaintiffs should have sued him, if at all, in the Magistrate's Court. He was willing to pay the rent for the months of September and October, but denied liability for any further sum than £14. He also prayed that in the event of judgment going against him the Court should order that the costs of suit should be Magistrate's Court costs.

Mr. Close for plaintiff; defendant in person.

Evidence having been given, and parties heard,

Hopley, J., gave judgment for plaintiffs, as prayed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL { 1906.
V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT { Feb. 22nd.
AND TABLE BAY HARBOUR { " 23rd.
BOARD.

Private Bill—Interpretation.

A Bill promoted by the Cape Town Town Council to amend and consolidate its Municipal statutes was duly passed, and by the 110th section of the Act so passed (26 of 1893) the property in the G.P. Common was vested in the Council.

Held, that a strip of land which had from the beginning of the century been regarded as part of the Common, but had recently been occupied by the defendant Board, became vested in the Council notwithstanding that the Act originated as a private Bill.

This was an action brought by the Town Council originally against the Colonial Government, as represented by the Secretary of the Agricultural Department, the Table Bay Harbour Board, and also against Colonel Hoskings, of the Royal Engineers. An exception was taken by the Imperial Government that they could not be sued without leave, and that was upheld, and the case then proceeded against the first two defendants. The Harbour Board had taken possession of an area of land which the Town Council claimed they had rights to. The matter concerned a certain portion of the Green Point Common. In June, 1840, a certain grant of a small site where there was an old building standing on the common was made by the Governor, Sir George Napier, and along with the grant certain clearance rights on the site known as Fort Wynyard, and there was a guarantee given that no building would be put on a wider area. The Town Council had already been established in Cape Town, and they had taken over, under the Ordinance of 1840, all the old rights vested in the Burgher Synod. The municipality took up the position that this land, over which the clearance rights were given, was land vested in them. About eight years ago a certificate of reservation was issued by the Surveyor-General, in favour of the Colonial Government for defence purposes. Some years after that an arrangement was made between the Colonial Government and the Harbour Board, under which the Harbour Board took possession of the land abutting on the sea and below what was known as the Beach-road, and used it for making cement and placing old material there. The Board fenced in the whole of the ground from the Beach-road down to the sea. The Council claimed the land because it was vested in them under different Ordinances and Acts, and also on the ground of prescription.

The plea denied that the ground at Fort Wynyard was vested in the plaintiffs, or that the land was within the municipal area. Defendants also denied the prescriptive rights of the plaintiffs. In case the Court decided in plaintiffs favour £12,000 was claimed for improvements to the ground.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor), was for the plaintiffs and Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Nightingale), was for the defendants.

J. R. Finch, Town Clerk of Cape Town, stated that before the war the ground around Fort Wynyard was open. It was used for sporting purposes, and it was the custom for residents to ride round the fort. There was free access to the sea-shore down to the Harbour Board enclosure on the north side of the breakwater.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do the Council really require this piece of ground?—First of all it is necessary in the interest of the public safety to provide for this road being widened.]

There is an unfortunate bend in the fence, which is represented to us as dangerous. There are no footways there, and the spot is much frequented by pedestrians. A motor-car coming suddenly round the corner would be dangerous. About 1903 the Harbour Board commenced operations on this piece of ground.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The Ordinance of 1840 vested waste lands, including the portion in question, in the Town Council. It was only within the last couple of years that the Town Council went into the question. Witness could not remember any serious excavations in 1900. If others said that there were considerable excavations in 1900 he would not be prepared to contradict them.

John Garlick, M.L.A., said he had known the land for about thirty years. It was made ground, and was used as a deposit heap for broken bottles, etc. The inhabitants used the part of the foreshore for fishing and bathing. Until the last few years there was no distinction, as far as he could see, made between that part of the ground and the rest of the commonage. In 1900 there was considerable discussion in a committee of Town Council, of which he was then a member, about the high-handed manner with which the Harbour Board was encroaching on municipal ground.

Andrew Peter Holm, who had lived in the neighbourhood all his life, said he knew the commonage fifty years ago. The municipality in those days controlled the whole of the common, and permits were issued to people who required them. As far as he could see, it was all one common.

Wm. James Jefferies, Assistant City Engineer, gave evidence as to the measurement of the road at different parts, and said that the excavations of the Harbour Board would make it dangerous. There were practically no excavations on the ground until the last three years. In 1903 the excavations were pushed on rapidly. The land in dispute was shown to be waste land on an old plan of 1819.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: In 1897, the City Engineer reported that the Harbour Board were excavating in front of the hospital.

John Cook, City Engineer, said that he did not think there were any excavations in 1902 when he came to Cape Town. A letter was sent to the Harbour Board in 1903, when they commenced encroaching on the hard road. The excavations would be a source of danger to the road.

Further evidence having been called on the question of prescription and correspondence put in, Mr. Searle closed his case.

R. H. Hammersley-Heenan, General Manager of the Harbour Board, stated that when he came here in February, 1900, there were considerable excavations. Not since he had been here were any demands made by the plaintiffs for the excavations on the reserved ground. It was arranged that the Government should have the South Arm elbow in exchange for the ground in dispute. The South Arm cost the Board something between £150,000 and £170,000. He was not aware that the Harbour Board trespassed on the road.

George Nicholson, engineer in the employ of the Table Bay Harbour Board, produced a plan showing the excavations in April, 1899.

The assistant engineer of the Harbour Board, Fairie Burnett, said that there was never any question raised by the Town Council about the excavations in front of Fort Wynyard up to 1903. Altogether £23,000 had been spent on the ground in question.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Richard Henry Howard, Municipal Engineer to the Green and Sea Point Municipality, stated that he had examined the Beach-road at the point in question, and found distinct evidence of the Harbour Board's fence having encroached on the macadam roadway.

For the defence, Willem Westhofen, who had examined the road, said that from the growth of vegetation on the sea side of the fence, he should not think there had been an open road three years ago.

Mr. Searle: The question raised in this case is important, inasmuch as it concerns the rights of the Town Council to waste land. The declaration says that by Sec. 110 of Act 26 of 1893 Green Point Common is the property of the Cape Town Municipality. The evidence as to the ownership of the Green Point Common up to 1893 is all one way. It was not till 1900 that any question was raised. If the Government contend that they are entitled to grant away any portion of this Common they should have given evidence to that effect. Sec. 111 was a general vesting clause, and hence no vacant land within the Muni-city could be dealt with under the Crown's Land Act. If we wish to trace back the history of Sec. 111, we must refer to Ord. 3 of 1829; then the Municipal boundaries were practically the same as they are now. Ordinance 1 of 1840 amended the Ordinance of 1829, and is practically the law on which we found our declaration. In order to see what was vested in the Burgher Senate we must go back to Ord. 34 of 1827, Sec. 2. Then the Common extended below the Beach Road down to the foreshore. We cannot find the inventory alluded to in that Ordinance.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Should the Harbour Board have buildings on the Common which are of use to them and of no use to you, would it not be well to give them compensation?]

That point is well worth considering, but the Council make a point of having a road in front of the Somerset Hospital 75 feet broad. It would be impossible to get that unless the Harbour Board have to put back their fence about 10 feet. We say in our declaration that the Harbour Board has encroached on the road. This is not our main point, but it is not a mere afterthought. If the Council can get a 75 feet road they will not insist on the removal of the fence. As to waste land the Common in this case was practically waste land. Ord. 4 of 1839 Sec. 52 shows that Green Point Commonage was common pasture land.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How did the Harbour Board acquire the ground they now claim?]

By purchase from the Town Council.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then it was recognised as part of the Common.]

Yes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: When did the transfers take place?]

Between 1861 and 1889. The property then acquired is the site of the present Convict Station. Various prices were paid for different parts of this ground.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Would it not be equitable to compensate the Harbour Board?]

Yes, but since 1861 the Town Council has been gradually encroaching by purchasing this land.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If so far back as 1840 the Government marked off a portion of this land it cannot be regarded as waste land.]

I will leave the point of waste land and rights of user for the present, and will come to the question of the road. The correspondence of October, 1903, shows that there has been an encroachment by the Harbour Board on the old hard road. The Government have called no evidence to contradict us on this point. Should the Court declare that the Harbour Board is entitled to this land, surely they should pay for it.

Sir H. Juta: As to the road. If the Town Council are entitled to a 75 foot road, a large part of the excavations which have now been made would have to be filled in. The plaintiffs in their declaration say nothing about the width of the road. They can only claim a road such as that to which the public have acquired a right. The evidence shows that there was formerly a road there from 15 to 20 feet wide. As to the Commonage, up to 1893 the words "Green Point Common" were not used in any Act. The Act of 1893 was a private Act; and in case of any private Act notice must be given to all persons whose rights would be thereby affected. In 1893 the Harbour Board was already at work on this disputed land, and yet the Town Council never set up any claim till 1900, and hence the land on which the Harbour Board works are situated must be deemed to be without the limits of the Green Point Commonage.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is not the Act of 1893 merely declaratory as to these lands being waste lands?]

No, the gist of the Act is that such portion of land at Green Point as was the derelict should vest in the Municipality. The Legislature would never have countenanced the taking away from the Harbour Board land which they had reclaimed and improved. Cattle could not possibly have been pastured amid the rocks and sand of the foreshore. In 1894 a portion of this very ground was alienated by the Crown to the Cape Canning Co. without any protest from the Town Council. This the Town Council was quite prepared to give up a portion of this very land in dispute in exchange for other land within the Military Reserve. In 1900 the Town Council denied that we had excavated on this land, and yet the excavation had been carried on since 1899.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But was this Bill a private Bill?]

It had to follow all the rules of a private Bill as to notice to persons whose rights were affected, and such notice was never given.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Would it not be better that you should keep the land and pay compensation?]

Probably, but I must consult my clients as to that. As to the road; what is claimed is a servitude in favour of the public; but there is no evidence save as to a road of from 15 to 20 feet wide.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Should I be against you on that point, it will follow that you had no right to place your fence on the road at all?]

The so-called road was so covered over with sand and grass that nobody could say where it was. It was not a straight road, but ran all over the place.

Mr. Searle in reply,

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiffs claim the land now in dispute on two grounds. Firstly, they say it forms part of the waste lands within the municipality, which were vested in the municipality even before the Act of 1893 was passed, and the second ground is that the land vests in them as being a portion of the Green Point Common, which was vested in the Town Council by the 110th section of Act 26 of 1893. With regard to the first question, as to whether this land forms part of the waste land, it is an exceedingly difficult question to decide, for the simple reason that the action of the Government, as well as the Town Council, in regard to the land in dispute has been somewhat inconsistent. At one time, the right of the Municipality to transfer a portion of this land was recognised; at another time the right of the Government to deal with this land was acted upon. But it is clear that as far back as the oldest witnesses can recollect, all the land from the cemetery right down to Green Point and the sea was recognised as land which the inhabitants generally used. In the year 1893 a Bill was introduced into Parliament to consolidate and amend the municipal statutes, and Sir Henry Juta's contention is that the Act thus passed was really a private Act of Parliament, and cannot deprive the Harbour Board of land of which it was then in occupation. The Board may have been in occupation, but as the Government raised no objection to the passing of the Bill it is too late to object to the validity of the section of the Act which vests the property in the Green Point Common in the Town Council. It may have been a matter of doubt up to that time as to whether Green Point Common should be regarded as part of the waste land of the municipality. In order to remove any doubt upon the subject the clause was inserted. At all events, it can fairly be taken for granted that the Government, which had the greatest interest in this land, was aware of the Act, and if no objection was raised by the Government, then I consider that the Government should be bound by that Act. As far back as 1840 an Ordinance was passed vesting the waste lands in the municipality, and down to the year 1893 the municipality did treat portions of the commonage as being waste lands. Whatever doubts may have existed before, in my opinion, the Act of 1893 is conclusive upon the matter, and I have no doubt whatever that the land in question did form part of the Green Point Common from the beginning of the century downwards. This was a well known piece of land extending to the sea. The right of the Council to this land was recognised by the Government in regard to the land immediately before the New Somerset Hospital, and even in regard to the land on which the Hospital itself stands. The only difference between the two sites is that the site now in question formed part of an extent of land which the Colonial Government granted to the Imperial authorities in 1840 that it should not be built upon. But the existence of that guarantee does not effect the question whether the land forms part of the Green Point Common. The property vests in the Council, but of course subject to the guarantee given to the Imperial Military authorities.

The Town Council is clearly entitled to a declaration to the effect that, with the exception of the laboratory and the small portion of ground surrounding it, which was granted to the Imperial military authorities in 1840, the land is the property of the plaintiffs, subject, however, to the guarantee given by the Colonial Government to the said Imperial authorities in their said grant. An interdict will be granted in terms of prayer 15 (b), unless the second defendants shall undertake within seven days from this date to pay to the said plaintiffs such compensation as shall be awarded to the plaintiffs. In case the second defendants give such undertaking, the value of the said land, excluding any portion reclaimed by the second defendants from the sea, and independently of any improvements made by the second defendants, shall be referred to a referee to be hereafter appointed. The defendants to pay the costs of this action.

Order granted as prayed.

VOS V. ANDRIES.

Mr. Rowson moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

LAWSON V. EIDELBERG.

Mr. Bailey moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £750, with interest, bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

NEVILLE V. ANDERSON.

Mr. M. Bisset was for plaintiff; Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for Mr. Robert Huddle, as next friend of defendant.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a broker's note for £1,000, in respect of certain property at Glenariff-road, at Three Anchor Bay, plaintiff tendering transfer.

Mr. Buchanan read an affidavit by Mr. Heddlie, who stated that defendant had received unexpected orders to sail on Government service to the Ichaboe Islands, and that, owing to the urgency of matters connected with his official duties, he had not been able to attend to this business. Deponent said that Captain Andersson would be absent from Cape Town about two months.

Mr. Bisset read an affidavit by John Neville, builder, Woodstock, who said that defendant before he went away expressed a wish not to proceed further with the sale, as he would be put to certain expense through lifting his money, which was on fixed deposit. Mr. Bisset also read an affidavit by Wm. Kerr, broker, who said the arrangement was that defendant should pay cash, the price being in consideration thereof reduced from £1,100 to £1,000.

Mr. Buchanan urged that the matter should be postponed until his client could communicate with Captain Andersson. There were funds available.

Mr. Bisset submitted that plaintiff was clearly entitled to judgment and execution. All the facts went to show that defendant intended to break this contract.

Provisional sentence was granted, as prayed, with costs, execution to be stayed until the 12th March.

THESEN AND CO. V. GAUCHE.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £93 19s. 6d., with interest.

Order granted.

S.A. ASSOCIATION AND OTHERS V. KAISER BROS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final sequestration of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Mr. Upington opposed the application. Buchanan, J., said that the 30th section of the Insolvent Ordinance required that "any creditor who shall hold a preferable security or lien upon any part of the insolvent estate shall, when he is the petitioning creditor, be obliged upon oath in the affidavit accompanying the petition . . . to put a value upon such security, so far as his debt may hereby be covered, and to deduct such value from the debt proved by him." His Lordship added that on the authority of the case of Roberts v. Standard Bank, which was heard in appeal in the Eastern Districts Court, the order for provisional sequestration must be set aside. The provisional order granted in this case would be discharged, with costs.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

BERNSTEIN V. MICHELSEN. { 1906.
Feb. 22nd.

Mr. Bailey moved for judgment, under Rule 32nd, for £140 odd, balance of account for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs. Order granted.

FRIEDLANDER AND DU TOIT V. STEPHAN.

Dr. Rainsford moved for judgment under Rule 32nd for £40 4s., balance of account for professional services and money disbursed, with interest a tempore morae and costs. Order granted.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL V. ZIMMER.

Mr. Gutsche moved for judgment under Rule 32nd for £8 8s. 5d., £9 13s. 6d., and two amounts of £2 5s., for water supplied during 1904 and 1905. Order granted.

HOHN V. LEIBBRANDT.

Mr. Benjamin was for applicant (defendant in the suit); Mr. Roux was for respondent (plaintiff in the suit).

Mr. Benjamin moved under Rule 12 for leave to sign judgment against respondent for not proceeding with his action. Counsel read an affidavit by Joseph Buireki, attorney, who said that respondent had instituted an action against applicant for £1,000 damages for slander, that he (respondent) had not filed his declaration within the specified time, and that he had therefore been barred.

Mr. Roux read an affidavit by the respondent, Johan D. Liebbbrandt, who said that he had received a letter written by or on behalf of defendant in the suit hoping that "all members of this wide-spreading family will live in love and harmony." Defendant was his brother-in-law, and had practically apologised. Unless a settlement were arrived at, deponent intended to proceed with his action, and if necessary commence proceedings agrain de novo. He tendered costs of the motion.

Mr. Benjamin read an affidavit by William Bunting Shaw, agent.

Buchanan, J.: This is a family dispute, some wrangle between members of the family, and slanderous words are alleged to have been uttered as far back as July last year, whereupon an action was entered, but no further proceedings have been taken. Defendant is quite within his rights in asking for judgment to be signed against the plaintiff, and plaintiff has shown no ground why he has not proceeded with his action during all the time. This is a family dispute, and the applicant does not press his claim for costs. The application will be granted and judgment signed against plaintiff for not proceeding with his action. While saying that no order will now be made for costs, it is understood that it is only in case plaintiff proceeds no further, in which case there will be an order that he must first pay the costs of this application.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL V. MELMAN.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for judgment under Rule 319 for £26 0s. 11d. and £90 6s. 3d. rates and water charges. Order granted.

RANSOME V. MULVIHAL.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for judgment under Rule 319 in terms of declaration for delivery of a certain share in the Board of Executors or in default £200 damages.

Buchanan, J., said that the matter must take the form of a trial unless the claim for damages were made "as and for value."

E. A. Buyskes, of Kempton, Jones and Co. (called by Mr. Van Zyl) said that he sold the share on behalf of Mulvihall to plaintiff, but Mulvihall then refused delivery. Witness afterwards tried to get a share elsewhere, but was unable to find a seller. He estimated the plaintiff had sustained damages in the sum of £200.

Buchanan, J., ordered that the matter be set down for trial on March 8.

MARAIS V. FERNANDES (TRADING AS THE CONTINENTAL CAFE).

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £70, rent of certain premises in Long-street, Cape Town.

Order granted.

IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE V. DE VILLIERS.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £80 16s., goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

WRIGHT V. MEKENI.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £16 4s. 7d., goods sold and delivered, for £4 money lent, and for the attachment of certain moneys in the hands of the High Sheriff. Order granted.

FERGUSON V. RONDINOTTI.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £52 10s., rent due, with interest a tempore morae and costs. Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte HENNESSY. } 1906.
 } Feb. 22nd.

Mr. Upington moved, upon notice to Hildyard Home Drummond, for an order restraining him from proceeding to collect debts due to Charles Edward McIntosh, or directing that all moneys so collected shall be paid to the petitioner, as curator bonis in the insolvent estate of the said McIntosh, pending the appointment of a trustee or trustees, or such other order as the Court may direct.

It was stated that debts to the amount of £153 10s. had been ceded to Drummond in his capacity as manager of the Assets Realisation Company.

Respondent applied for a postponement until the 28th inst., to enable him to set the facts of the case, so far as he was concerned, before the Court. In answer to the Court, respondent said that he would give an undertaking not to collect any further debts due to the estate in the meantime.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 28th inst., respondent being interdicted from collecting any further debts in the estate in the meantime.

HALLER AND OTHERS V. MULLER.

This was an application, calling upon Christina Muller to show cause why she should not be arrested and imprisoned for contempt of an order granted by the Court on November 17, 1903, in an action between the two first-named applicants and respondent.

Mr. Upington was for applicants; Mr. M. Bisset was for respondent.

The matter arose out of an action brought by the estate of Kathrina Juliana Haller against respondent, who had taken out letters of administration as executrix testamentary, under a document purporting to be the will of her mother, the said K. J. Haller.

The Court set aside the alleged will, declared Mrs. Haller to have died intestate, and cancelled the appointment of respondent as executrix testamentary, and directed her to furnish a full account of the estate. Mr. John Thomas Love had since been appointed executor dative, and he was the principal mover in the present proceedings.

Applicants now alleged that respondent had utterly failed to supply a proper and sufficient account of the estate, which consisted of a trading station and certain orchard and garden at St. Mark's, Tembuland; respondent's position was that she had a counter-claim for £50, value of certain forage wrongfully taken, that she had rendered a true and correct account before the A.R.M. of Cofimvaba on March 14, 1905, and had deposited £8 8s. for mealies, poultry, etc., and that the executor dative did not appear. She had no other moneys to account for as derived from the property, nor had she any assets to account for to the estate.

Mr. Upington having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, J.: Respondent is the daughter of the late Mrs. Haller, and produced a will which gave her the management of Mrs. Haller's estate. The estate is apparently a very small one, and there does not appear to be much left. The will was afterwards set aside by an order of Court for having been improperly executed, and the respondent was ordered to account to such person as might be appointed executor dative of the estate for the value thereof and pay him so much as might be due. Extensive correspondence took place between the applicant and the respondent and her agent, and respondent has, according to that correspondence, endeavoured in every way possible to supply all the information that she possibly could give to the executor dative. She is an ignorant woman, and can neither read nor write, and she has clearly endeavoured to do all she could to supply all the information necessary and to comply with the order of the Court. He now applies for a writ of arrest and imprisonment against her for not obeying a judgment of the Court. It is an extreme measure to apply to the Court for a commitment for contempt, and such an order is only granted where there is a wilful disregard of the order of the Court. It has been shown that in this case there has been no such wilful disregard of the Court's order. If she cannot satisfy the executor dative it is her misfortune. Under these circumstances there is no justification at all for an order of Court or any ground for committing the respondent. The application will be refused with costs.

Mr. Bisset said that respondent had incurred expense in journeying to Cape Town in connection with this matter, and he asked whether her expenses would be included in the costs.

Buchanan, J., said that the expenses of respondent would form no part of the costs.

Mr. Upington: I take it that the costs will come out of the estate?

[Buchanan, J.: No, I think this is a personal application on the part of the applicant and that the costs ought to be borne by the applicant de bonis propriis.]

PRICE V. BRIDGMAN.

This was an application for an interdict restraining the respondent from practising as a dentist or dental surgeon in Cape Town or any part of the Cape Division without first obtaining the consent of the applicant. Mr. M. Bisset was for applicant, Joseph R. Price; Mr. Benjamin was for respondent, Henry M. Bridgman.

The ground of the application was that the parties had been practising in Cape Town in partnership; that at the dissolution of the partnership in 1900 they entered into a deed setting out that £2,000 was to be paid to respondent in consideration of his share in the assets, goodwill, and so forth, and the restraint was placed upon his opening a rival practice in Cape Town or the Cape Division; and that, in defiance of this restraint, respondent had commenced practice in Church-square, Cape Town. It was also provided in the deed that respondent should pay £1,000 to applicant if he infringed the clause.

Respondent's position was that, although applicant agreed to pay him £2,000, he (Bridgman) had only received £300; that, in consequence, the agreement had become void, and that applicant had also failed to carry out a promise to sell the practice to respondent.

Applicant, in a replying affidavit, said that the sum of £2,000 was set out in the deed simply for the purposes of the sale of the practice, and that he had paid respondent the sum of £300, which was agreed upon between them.

Buchanan, J., said that the matter in dispute could not be decided upon motion. An interdict would be granted, pending an action to be instituted by applicant forthwith, operation of interdict to be suspended on respondent undertaking to keep a true and correct account of all his earnings until the decision of the action, costs to abide result.

DONNELLY V. DONNELLY.

Dr. Greer moved for an order requiring respondent to pay to applicant £50 to enable her to institute proceedings for divorce by reason of his malicious desertion, and for payment of alimony pending the suit.

Buchanan, J., said that the Magistrate had made an order for maintenance.

That order would not be interfered with. Respondent would be ordered to pay £15 to enable applicant to bring her action—£5 on issue of summons and £10 when the case is set down for trial.

Ex parte THE ESTATE LATE KRUGER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for a rule nisi authorising the removal of a certain executor to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute, costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte GIORKE.

Mr. Watermeyer said that this matter, which was an application for correction of petitioner's name in certain title deeds, had been standing over for a report of the Registrar of Deeds, King William's Town. This report counsel now produced and read.

Order granted as prayed.

MLONDLEMI V. PAMLA.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for a rule nisi attaching certain money in the hands of the Rev. Edward Barrett to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte MARAIS.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on the petition of the tutor of Wilhelm Stellenberg Marais, of Britstown, for leave to pass transfer of certain property expropriated by the Railway Department.

Order granted.

Ex parte COULTER.

Mr. Roux moved for leave of absence of petitioner's minor son, who was articulated to an attorney at Kokstad, without prejudice to the validity of his articles of clerkship. It was proposed that the petitioner's son should pay a visit to England extending over six months.

Mr. Burton appeared for the Incorporated Law Society, but did not oppose the application.

Buchanan, J., directed that the term of three years' service should commence from the return from Europe of the petitioner's son, the present articles of clerkship to stand.

MOHR AND OTHERS V. MOHR AND OTHERS.

Mr. Struben moved for an interdict restraining respondents from dealing with or alienating a certain bond passed in favour of the second named respondent, on the 24th January last, and from transferring or in any encumbering certain farm pending an action to be brought by applicants for re-transfer of the farm.

Mr. Burton, for respondent said he did not see that, in view of recent developments, an action would be necessary.

Mr. Struben acquiesced.

Interdict granted against second respondent, pending a settlement of the dispute between the parties, or, failing such a settlement being arrived at, pending an action to be brought by applicant, action to be brought within three months, and costs to abide result.

Ex parte THE ESTATE LATE CAROLUS.

Mr. Swift moved for leave to sell certain property for a sum of £300.

Buchanan, J., said that he did not see any reason why the executors had brought this matter into court. No order would be made.

PITKETHLEY V. PIKETHLEY.

Mr. Inchbold moved upon notice of motion, calling upon respondent to show cause why Mr. Alfred Newton Foot should not be appointed as receiver of the business carried on in partnership between applicant and respondent, pending an action for dissolution of the partnership, liquidation of the partnership estate and damages for breach of contract.

Buchanan, J., said that no order would be granted, as there was a defect in service.

BRUNT V. BRUNT.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on behalf of petitioner, who resides at Somerset Strand, for leave to sue her husband, Wm. Henry Brunt, for divorce. Petitioner said that her husband had left her about two years ago, and had gone to England, and not returned. She was informed that he was presumably living in adultery at Henley, Staffs.

Leave to sue granted, citation to be returnable on May 1 next, with leave to serve interdict, and notice of trial at the same time as citation.

O'BRIEN V. ODENDAL,

Dr. Rainsford moved for the removal of the trial to the ensuing Circuit Court at Oudtshoorn.

Application granted, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte HURFURD.

Mr. Lewis moved for the attachment of certain property at Green Point ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and for an order authorising applicant to sue one John Leonard Constantine Dow by edictal citation.

Ordered to stand over for information as to respondent's whereabouts, etc.

REYNOLDS V. REYNOLDS VEHICLE AND HARNESS FACTORY, LTD.

This was an application brought by Isaac Benjamin Reynolds, the original vendor of the business for a winding up order under the Companies Act, and for the appointment of an official liquidator.

The applicant's affidavit stated that an official inspection of the company's business, made by Mr. E. R. Syfret recently, revealed the fact that certain irregularities had been committed, and that the position of the company was not financially sound. Certain judgments had been given against the company, and certain claims were being pressed for payment. The result of the legal proceedings would be to absorb the entire assets. The company had no cash, either in hand or at the bank, to meet the said claims, or any part thereof. The company was indebted to applicant in the sum of £1,370, and to his sons in various amounts for wages. Applicant prayed for an order for the winding up of the company, and the appointment of Mr. E. R. Syfret as official liquidator. An affidavit read from another petitioner, suggesting that Mr. Alex. J. Chiappini be appointed co-liquidator. Mr. Gardiner said that his client would not object to the appointment of Messrs. Syfret and Chiappini as co-liquidators.

The affidavit of C. W. A. Coulter, of the firm of Zietsman and Bosman, attorneys of respondent company, stated that only 24 hours notice of the application had been given. The chairman of the company was away in England, and it was desirable that he should be first communicated with. Deponent urged that there was no urgency in the matter, and he submitted that no final order should be made at the present stage, but that a rule should be granted to enable respondents to put their position before the Court.

Mr. Gardiner was for applicant; Mr. Roux was for respondents.

A provisional order of sequestration was granted, rule to issue calling upon all interested to show cause on the 17th April why the company should not be placed under compulsory liquidation, and why official liquidators should not be appointed, rule to be published once in the "Government Gazette," and once in the "Cape Times."

Et parte WOOD.

Mr. Benjamin moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Robert Wood, a member of the firm of Omand and Co., builders and contractors, Three Anchor Bay, for an interdict against one Bensimon, of Bensimon's Buildings, Sea Point. Petitioner's firm had commenced an action against Bensimon for balance of moneys due upon a building contract, with the result that the subject matters in dispute had been referred to Mr. A. T. Babbs for inspection of the building, and report. Deponent alleged that, since the reference by the Court, Bensimon had had men on the premises knocking off plaster and otherwise damaging the building preparatory to the visit and inspection by the referee. Petitioner prayed for an interdict against Bensimon, as he feared that otherwise there was a danger of his firm's claim being prejudiced by reason of the acts of defendant.

Buchanan, J., said that if the allegations in the petition were true, then there had been unwarrantable interference with the property by respondent. A rule nisi would be granted, to operate as an interim interdict, restraining respondent from mutilating or otherwise interfering with the present condition of the building, pending further hearing of the case, with leave to respondent to move to set aside the order, question of costs to stand over pending presentation of referee's report.

SUPREME COURTSECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

WILKINSON V. WILKINSON } 1906.
AND ANOTHER. { Feb. 23rd.

This was an action brought by Arthur Wilkinson, of Cape Town, of no settled occupation, against his wife, Mary Wilkinson, for divorce, by reason of her alleged adultery with one Alfred Beale, sanitary inspector, against whom £100 damages were claimed. Mr. Gutsche was for plaintiff; the first defendant had been barred from pleading; the second defendant appeared in person.

Plaintiff, in his evidence, said that he was married to the first defendant in March, 1903. There was one child living, issue of the marriage. He had had quarrels with his wife, and ultimately she left him, and went to live with her mother. Subsequently, in consequence of information received from Mrs. Bursleman, of Woodstock, he commenced the present proceedings. He did not know whether Beale had any reason to know whether the woman he was with was his (witness's) wife. He was not acquainted with Beale.

Cross-examined by Beale: Witness's wife had left him; they had been continually quarrelling. After the quarrels, his wife went to live with her mother in St. Leger-street. The child was about five months old when his wife last left him. There was an occasion in the early part of last year when his wife passed him in Cape Town. She was walking arm in arm with a tall gentleman; he did not know who her companion was. He did not go up to the pair and tell the gentleman that the woman accompanying him was his (witness's) wife.

Mrs. Annie Bursleman said that in May, 1906, she was living in Woodstock, and used to let furnished rooms. She remembered Mr. Beale calling in answer to an advertisement. He said that he wanted rooms for himself and wife, and that his wife would call later on. The first defendant called later on. The two defendants lived together at her house in one room for four weeks.

Mrs. Lena Elizabeth Sarels, cleaner, employed at the City Hall, spoke to a visit paid by the defendants to her home. Mrs. Wilkinson said that Beale was paying her £1 a month.

Mr. Gutsche closed his case.

Alfred Beale, co-defendant, gave evidence. He said that he was a sanitary inspector, employed by the Cape Town Corporation at £118 per annum. When he first met defendant, she was employed as a domestic servant at the Johannesburg Hotel. He had no idea that she was a married woman. She told him that her name was Mary Lincoln. After they had been living together at Woodstock for a few weeks, he discovered that the first defendant was in a certain condition, and he left her. The first defendant then told him that she was a married woman. He had had nothing to do with her since that time. He had heard that she gave birth to a child a little while after he left her; witness was not the father of that child. The child had died.

Mary Wilkinson (the first defendant) said that the evidence given by the second defendant was quite correct.

[Hopley, J. (to witness): Why didn't you tell Beale that you were a married woman?]

Witness: I wanted to get rid of my husband, because he was a beast to me, and, therefore, I did not care what I did.

Mr. Gutsche (in answer to the Court), said that he did not press the claim for damages, but he thought his client was entitled to costs against Beale.

Plaintiff applied for custody of the child of the marriage, and said that Mrs. Burslamen would be prepared to take charge of the child.

The first defendant said that she was strongly opposed to plaintiff having custody of the child.

Decree of divorce granted, custody of the child to remain with the mother for the present, with leave to plaintiff to move for a variation of the order as to custody, with the right to plaintiff to have access at all reasonable times, the second defendant (Beale) to pay costs of suit. No order as to damages.

HODGSON V. MCKAY AND CO. } 1906.
Feb. 23rd.
Mar. 1st.

Landlord and tenant—Defective premises.

This was an action brought by Charles Hunter Hodgson, of Claremont, against McKay and Co., music sellers, Cape Town, for rent of certain premises, in Church-street.

There were two cases between the parties, but, by consent, the actions had been consolidated.

Plaintiff, in his declaration in the first case, said that the defendants had tenanted premises under lease belonging to him at 6 and 8, Church-street, Cape Town. Defendants had fallen into arrears with their rent. In April last year the parties came to a mutual agreement that defendant should pay a rent of £60 per month. Plaintiff prayed for judgment for £365 arrear rent up to the end of September last, with interest and costs, including costs of interdict which he had obtained against defendants restraining them from removing their goods from the shop.

Defendants, in their plea, said that in April last the rent was reduced to £60 per month. They admitted that on the 1st January, 1906, certain arrears of rent had accrued amounting to £440. In April, 1906, when the agreement to reduce the rent was made, plaintiff agreed that the said arrears should be liquidated by payment of monthly instalments of £10, until the full amount had been paid off, and that the arrears then owing should be discharged in consideration of the payment of such instalments. Defendants said that they had regularly paid the instalments of £10 per month, and that there was a balance still owing of £355, but subject to the payment of the monthly instalments, the amount claimed by plaintiff or any part thereof was not due. They prayed that the claim should be dismissed, with costs. For a claim in reconvention defendants (now plaintiffs) said that the plaintiff

(now defendant) unlawfully and without good and proper reason applied for and by misrepresentation obtained from this Court an interdict prohibiting defendants from removing their goods. They said that through plaintiff's act they had suffered loss and damage to the amount of £250, through not being able to deal with their goods. Furthermore, they said that for some time the premises had been in a bad and unsatisfactory state, whereby the stock of defendants had been depreciated in value. Half the premises were occupied by plaintiff's workmen, as the floor had had to be taken up, and that part of the premises had been utterly useless to the defendants for six weeks. They said that on that account they had suffered loss, and damage in the sum of £500. They claimed in reconviction two sums of £250 and £500.

Plaintiff, in his replication, admitted that he had received a further sum of £20, reducing the arrear rent to £545. As to the claim in re-convention, he specially denied having obtained the interdict by misrepresentation, and he said that with regard to the other part of the claim he had the work of the putting the premises into repair carried out expeditiously and he denied that the defendants had suffered damages in £500 or any other sum.

Plaintiff, in his declaration in the second case, said that the defendants owed rent for November and December last at £60 per month, and he prayed for judgment for £120.

Defendants, in their plea, said that they had not had beneficial occupation of the premises during the months in question and a large portion of their stock was wholly or partially destroyed. They also said that they had lodged a sum of £120 in court.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for plaintiff. Dr. Greer for defendant.

Mr. Close submitted that the onus was upon the defendants to open the case.

Dr. Greer acquiesced in this view.

Mr. Close mentioned that the amount of the arrear rent was now £335, a further sum of £10 having been paid by defendants.

Dr. Greer said that security had been given or payments made by defendants in two sums of £120 and £60.

Jan Louis Akkersdyk, photographer, produced a photo of the interior of McKay and Co.'s premises as at the 9th December, 1905, showing the removal of the floor.

John Affleck Robertson, public accountant and auditor, and manager of the International Correspondence School, said that he had held defendant's power of attorney since January 17, 1905, witness having supervised the business at the request of the two partners. On April 10, 1905, he explained the defendant's position to plaintiffs, and pointed out that McKay and Co. had paid him £4,385 in rent since 1898, asked him to meet them and Mr. Hodgson agreed to a reduction of the rent to £60 as from the 1st January, and said that as long as the current rent was paid and £10 was paid off the old rent each month he should be perfectly satisfied. Witness had taken out an abstract of the takings of the defendants in the six months ending January, 1906, which showed that in the three months ended October last the takings were about £1,115, and in the three months ending January about £626, equivalent to a falling off of £488 13s. 4d. The decrease he attributed to the repairs to the premises.

By the Court: The firm's takings in October, November, and December, 1904, were £1,064, as compared with £1,285 in the previous quarter. In November and December, 1904, the takings were £513, and in November and December, 1905, £470 10s. 4d. In January, 1906, the takings were £156 3s. 8d., as compared with £263 in January, 1905.

Mr. Close said that defendants did not have possession during last month.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that the removal of defendants' business would seriously affect their takings. In regard to the interdict, he was sure that the publication of the interdict would be injurious to the business. He was satisfied that defendants had no intention of removing the stock surreptitiously.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: Witness was not aware that a letter was written on behalf of plaintiff saying that the arrangement as to the payment of £10 per month arrear rent could be terminated at any time as he (plaintiff) should think fit.

John P. Bischoff, defendants' manager, said that the sum of £10 over and above current rent which they agreed to pay plaintiff had been paid regularly up to the end of January. They ceased to pay the current rent of £60 per month in November because they did not have beneficial occupation of the premises. They claimed damages for the interdict, and said that the interdict was wrongly obtained. He considered that they had suffered in business in consequence of the disturbance of the flooring. They found that there was a growth of fungus under the floor of the saloon. They had called the landlord's attention to the fact that there was no ventilation of the floor two years earlier. The damage done to the stock was assessed by witness with the assistance of Messrs. Darters' manager. He considered that the damage to stock amounted to about £110. They suffered loss of trade through not being able to find their goods, as all the stock had to be crowded into one shop during the repairs. This he estimated at £64. They had to buy articles from other firms to supply customers, because they could not reach the goods in their shops. The fixtures had also been damaged by the fungus. They had paid £7 10s. for new fixtures. In all their actual loss amounted to just over £500. They estimated that their loss of trade during the six weeks when the alterations were being carried out was £250.

By the Court: They had been placed under some difficulty from the beginning, because the debt commenced in 1898, and was left over to them by the late Mr. McKay.

Postea (March 1st).

Dr. Greer said that certain proposals were made and certain negotiations had taken place, but, he was sorry to say, without effect.

For the defence.

N. Owens, builder and contractor, of Cape Town, said he examined the defendants' premises in the middle of November, and found fungus over the shelves as a result of dampness. There was no ventilation. To put the place in proper order, the floors would require to be excavated, and proper ventilation provided.

Eliza McKay, partner in the firm of McKay and Co., stated that ever since she had been in the shop, she had to complain of the state of the premises. On a visit of the landlord, he went through the floor, and then the plaintiff said he would call for tenders. Three tenders came in, but the plaintiff said they were too expensive. The plaintiff sent a man to do the work, but it was a very indifferent class of work. About October last year she discovered that considerable damage had been done to the goods. The damage to stock amounted to £109; there was also damage to the fixtures and a falling off in trade.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: When the floor was being relaid, she told the workman that it was not being done properly. It would have been difficult for witness to find suitable premises. The interdict which the plaintiff obtained had done the trade a deal of harm.

Charles Friedlander, of the firm of Friedlander and Du Toit, said he saw a growth of fungus underneath the fixtures. Witness then suggested to Mr. Bischoff that photographs should be taken, in order that the Court could see the proper state of affairs. The stock appeared to him to very much damaged.

D. Patterson, manager of the musical department of Messrs. Darter's, said that at the request of Mr. Darter, he examined McKay's premises towards the end of last year. Witness checked with Mr. Bischoff, and made a list of the damaged goods. The stock could not have been sold by Messrs. McKay and Co.; it might have been disposed of to a second-hand dealer.

This closed the evidence for the defendant, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for absolution from the instance in reconvention, and for judgment in convention.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J.: Unfortunately the tenants have not strictly adhered to the agreement made with the landlord through their agent, Mr. Robertson, in April last. The tenants have again fallen into arrears, and the landlord is justified in enforcing his legal rights. They did not keep the agreement made by Mr. Robertson, and they must suffer the consequences. The defendants had a better chance of having a knowledge of the defects of the premises, and it was their duty to acquaint the landlord. It was certainly negligent on the part of the defendants to continue to store valuable goods in the shop. There will be judgment for the plaintiff as prayed on the claim in convention, and absolution from the instance on the claim in reconvention, the defendants to pay the costs.

SUPREME COURT

VAN DER VYVER V. VAN DER VYVER AND CURATOR 1906.
Feb. 26th.
ad litem.

Mr. Roux said that when this matter was last before the Court no direction was given with regard to prayer 5 of the application, wherein it was asked that the curator be authorised to release the lunatic's money, and re-invest it as he might think fit, and apply a certain portion towards maintenance.

Hopley, J., remarked that it was extremely inconvenient to have to take a matter up again in this fashion after it had been disposed of, when he had all the facts of the case well before his mind. The curator would be authorised to re-invest the money of the lunatic, with the consent of the Master.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REX V. TROTT. { 1906.
{ Feb. 26th.

Mr. Nightingale, on behalf of the Attorney-General, moved for the removal of the trial of Frederick Wm. Trott, railway guard, C.G.R., charged with the crime of theft, to the ensuing Circuit Court at Beaufort West.

Application granted.

REX V. DIESEL AND ANOTHER.

Accomplice's evidence — Corroboration — Act 35 of 1893, Sec. 7.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Maclear. The appellants were father and son (Joseph Anthony Diesel and George Daniel Diesel), who had been convicted in the Court below of the crime of stock theft by contravening section 7, Act 35, 1893, as amended by Proclamation 109 of 1900, to wit, that at or near Stellenberg they did steal a certain goat, the property of one January, a native peasant.

The accused were sentenced—Joseph to nine months' imprisonment, with hard labour, and the other to four months', with hard labour. Judgment was also given in favour of January for 30s., compensation for loss of the goat.

The grounds of appeal were: "(1) That the verdict was not supported and justified by the evidence given before the said Court, and was contrary to law, and (2) that certain evidence adduced at the trial and recorded by the Magistrate was not admissible in law, and was to the prejudice of accused." The evidence objected to was that of one Gert de Bruyn, who, it was alleged, had, in consideration of giving his testimony against accused, been allowed to go free of a charge of theft of a hammer.

Mr. Upington for appellants; Mr. Nightingale for the Crown.

Mr. Upington submitted that the case for the Crown practically depended upon the evidence of De Bruyn, a dishonest person on his own admission, and one who acknowledged that he took part in the theft of January's goat. The uncorroborated evidence of such a witness should, he urged, be very carefully scrutinised. It was clear that inducements were held out to De Bruyn, not in the way of money, but of a favour: being done him in not prosecuting him on the other charge. Again there was the fact that a little while before one of the accused had got De Bruyn into trouble. Counsel also submitted that there was no statutory offence laid down in the section under which accused were charged.

Mr. Nightingale admitted that there had been an irregularity in charging accused under section 7, but submitted that no such gross irregularity had been committed as would invalidate the proceedings.

Maasdorp, J.: The ground of appeal in this case is that the verdict was not supported and justified by the evidence given before the Court, and is contrary to law. It seems to me from the argument of Mr. Upington that the objection which is involved in the ground here given is that the Magistrate founded his verdict mainly upon the evidence of De Bruyn, and that De Bruyn was an accomplice and also that certain improper inducements were held out to him to give the evidence which he has given in this case. Now, the Magistrate says that he was prepared to scrutinise his evidence very closely. The fact that De Bruyn was an accomplice did not render his evidence inadmissible, but certainly his evidence, if unsupported in many respects, would have been insufficient for the purpose of conviction. That evidence is largely corroborated by other witnesses. A portion of the carcass was found in front of accused's premises on the pumpkin patch where De Bruyn said it was. A further objection is raised that certain inducements were held out to De Bruyn. The Magistrate has regarded De Bruyn's evidence with the necessary caution and suspicion, and he does not seem to think that any serious inducements were held out. Under the circumstances, as far as the ground of appeal given on the record is concerned, I think that the Magistrate is correct in his finding. Mr. Upington has pointed out an irregularity upon the proceedings, which is not made one of the grounds of appeal. The accused are charged with stock theft in contravention of section 7, Act 35, 1893, in that they stole a certain goat. Now that is not quite the correct form the charge should take. The theft committed is not in contravention—in this case certainly—of any particular section, but the theft of stock is a substantive crime; but the proceedings were taken under Act 35, 1893. Now that is not an irregularity which prejudices the prisoners and would render the proceedings void. In the charge all the words after "theft of stock" to "in that they stole" should be omitted. The proceedings having been taken under this Act, that sentence passed by the Magistrate after the conviction of accused was quite within his jurisdiction. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed.

REX V. MYERS.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Piquetberg who had convicted the appellant (Herman Myers) of contravening Regulation 15, framed by the Village Management Board of Piquetberg, under the provisions of Act 29, 1881, "by tampering and interfering with the watercourse and appliances relative to the town system of waterworks by opening the main pipe and attaching a pipe thereto, and other wrongs and injuries then and there done." The Magistrate found Myers guilty and sentenced him to a fine of £1 10s.

Mr. Alexander was for appellant; Mr. McGregor was for respondents, the Piquetberg Municipality, successors of the Village Management Board. Appellant is a member of the respondent Council.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Masendorp, J.: It appears that the 15th regulation of the Village Management Board, Piquetberg, provides that "any person tampering or interfering with any of the appliances relative to the town system of waterworks, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 sterling. In this case the defendant is charged with having contravened this regulation by "tampering and interfering with the watercourse and appliances relative to the town system of waterworks by opening the main pipe and attaching a pipe thereto, and other ways and injuries he then and there did." Now, it would appear, from the evidence given that the manner in which he is alleged to have tampered with the appliances of the waterworks is not correctly set forth, as will appear when I refer to the other parts of the case. It would seem that all the appliances for the waterworks referred to in this case are placed, by the 10th regulation, in charge of the secretary of the Village Management Board, who shall be the superintendent of waterworks ex officio. Then it appears that under regulation 13 in case any one of the inhabitants wishes to be supplied with water by means of a pipe, the application would be acceded to, and a pipe laid down, furnished with what is called a regulating cock. It seems that some little while ago the defendant was supplied with water by means of a pipe, and at that time the regulating cock was not insisted upon by the Village Management Board. Lately, the Municipality, who succeeded the Village Management Board, have decided that these regulating cocks shall be fixed up on all the properties to which water is supplied by means of pipes. A resolution was passed on the 15th November, 1905, from which it appears that the contract for fixing these pipes was given to the Deep Boring Syndicate, at Piquetberg, they undertaking to put up these regulating cocks at £1 5s. 6d. apiece, but, at the same time, it was left open to the inhabitants to fix the regulating cocks themselves. The contract that was obtained in this way by the Deep Boring Syndicate was to be carried out by a manager of theirs, called Liebenberg. The connection, therefore, between Liebenberg and the present Municipality, is this, that he is the contractor to fix up these regulating cocks upon the properties of the inhabitants, who are being supplied with water. That is the only relation between him and the Municipality. In order to carry out his contract, he went to the defendant, and proposed to fix up this kind of cock for him, but the defendant refused to allow him to do so. Liebenberg then says: "I warned him that I should have to cut off his water." On a subsequent occasion Liebenberg again proposed to fix this cock, and, upon the defendant again refusing, he proceeded to cut the pipe leading the water to the defendant's property. There is no evidence in all the proceedings to show that the Municipality gave any authority to Liebenberg to interfere with the pipes of the defendant, or that the secretary, who seems to have had control of these matters, under the Village Management Board, authorised him to cut this pipe. One would have imagined that, when the defendant refused to allow Liebenberg to go upon his property for the purpose specified, the Municipality would have taken steps to enforce their resolution, and to have communicated with him what they intended doing. I do not for a moment now find what the powers of the Municipality might have been in case they had taken up this matter, and I do not know now that it would have been beyond the powers of the Municipality to cut off the water leading under these circumstances. It is unnecessary, in the view I take of the case now, to decide that point, but I do find this, that Liebenberg had not the slightest right to interfere with this pipe leading to the defendant's property against his will, except under special instructions as to his action received from the Municipality. Without receiving these instructions, he cut this pipe, and I am of opinion that his action was wrongful and unlawful. Thereupon the defendant set about to repair the damage that had been done by Liebenberg, and I find that he was perfectly entitled to regard the action of Liebenberg as a wrongful act, and to repair the injury that had been done by Liebenberg. The Municipality regarded this repair to the pipe leading to the defendant's property as a fit subject for prosecution, and they said that the infringement took place by "opening the main pipe and attaching a pipe thereto, and other wrongs, and the injuries then and there done." I find that the allegation has not been proved. The Municipality had no right to rectify, and had no right to adopt the wrongful act of trespass on the part of Liebenberg. Under the circumstances, I find that there was not a wrongful tampering with the appliances of the waterworks of the village, but that, in the action adopted by the defendant, he was justified in repairing an injury which had been done by Liebenberg personally. In this finding, I do not at all decide any of the more general rights of the Municipality in enforcing compliance with their resolution, nor do I decide now whether the resolution which they passed was ultra vires or not. It is unnecessary to go into that part of the case at present. All I say is this, that the parties are now put back to the position they occupied before Liebenberg cut the pipe, and they can exercise all the rights which they are legally entitled to in that position of affairs. The appeal must be allowed, and the conviction and sentence quashed.

Having heard counsel on the question of costs,

Maasdorp, J.: The ordinary rule is that in criminal proceedings costs are not allowed. Then an exception was introduced in some cases where costs were allowed to the appellant, and where the prosecution was at the instance of the municipality, and it was generally based upon the ground that the municipality became entitled to payment of certain fines, and that, consequently, if they were successful in securing those fines, an order might be granted against them for the payment of costs. Now, in this particular case, I do not think the Court will exercise its discretion under these exceptions, and order the costs to be paid by the Municipality. It does appear that the reason for the rule has largely been removed by the repeal of the section which assigns these fines to the municipalities. In this case, undoubtedly the question was raised upon what I would call obstruction on the part of the defendants in not complying with municipal regulations and resolutions, and although it has been found that the Municipality was not quite correct in the course which it adopted, the rights of the parties have not been decided, and a rather important question was raised for decision in this particular case. Under the circumstances, the Court will make no order as to costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

SINGER V. VAN GERWE. { 1906.
{ Feb. 27th.

Purchase and sale of house—
Tender of transfer—Tender of price.

In an action for the price of a house sold to the defendant, the plaintiff tendered transfer on the payment of such price. The plea was to the effect that there were mortgages on the house and that the plaintiff was consequently unable to pass transfer. The evidence shewed that, although there were mortgages on the property, the plaintiff would, on payment of the price, be in a position to pay the bonds and pass transfer and that the defendant had never tendered the price; or even expressed his willingness to pay the price on receiving transfer.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the price which was to be paid on his giving transfer.

This was an action brought by Louis Singer, of Hopefield, division of Makmesbury, against Leendert Christian van Gerwe, also of Hopefield, for specific performance of an agreement of purchase and sale of certain licensed property.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that on the 10th June, 1905, he and defendant executed a certain agreement of sale and purchase, whereby defendant purchased for £4,225 certain land and buildings at Hopefield known as the Spes Bona Hotel, as bought by plaintiff at a certain public sale, on the 6th June, 1905, nothing added and nothing deducted. Plaintiff had duly carried out his part of the contract, and defendant had taken possession of the said property, but refused, after lawful demand duly made, to otherwise carry out his part of the said contract, to pay the purchase price, or take transfer in terms of the agreement, which had been duly tendered, and was again tendered. Plaintiff prayed for judgment for specific performance of the agreement, or in the alternative cancellation of the agreement and £500 damages.

Defendant, in his plea, admitted having taken possession and not having paid the purchase price, but said that he had always been, and still was, ready and willing to accept transfer, and to pay the purchase price on transfer being given. Plaintiff had failed and neglected to release the property from certain mortgages, with which it was burdened, and plaintiff was, and is, unable to pass transfer.

The replication was general.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Struben) for plaintiff; Mr. De Waal for defendant.

Louis Singer (the plaintiff) said that he bought the property in question at public auction on the 6th June, 1905, the purchase price being £4,025. On the 10th June he sold the property to the defendant for £4,225. At the time he purchased defendant was aware that witness had not received transfer from Stiglingh. Defendant had not paid any portion of the purchase price, and until the plea he had not tendered to pay, though at the time the agreement was entered into he said he would pay in three weeks. Witness was now prepared to give transfer, the papers between Stiglingh and himself being in the possession of Mr. Kotze, of the Board of Executors. There were two bonds on the property in favour of the Board of Executors, which had been marked for cancellation. He put the rental value of the property at £25 per month. Witness had lost the rent during defendant's occupation, and all the time the house was neglected and the furniture had deteriorated. He thought he could have made £300 or £400 profit during the eight months defendant had had possession.

Cross-examined: Witness paid the transfer expenses to Mr. Kotze last week. He could have paid the expenses long ago if defendant had paid the purchase-price according to his agreement.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out to defendant's counsel that it was his client's duty to offer the purchase price to the plaintiff against transfer.

Witness (further cross-examined) said that he had offered Van Gerwe transfer some time ago. He had heard that defendant's attorneys had tried to settle the matter. He had not refused to have anything to do with Van Gerwe on the ground that he was an uncertificated insolvent. Witness handed the matter over to Mr. Kotze, who acted for him.

De Villiers, C.J., intimated that he did not want to hear any more witnesses for the plaintiff at the present stage.

Mr. De Waal said that he would call the defendant.

L. C. van Gerwe (defendant) said the arrangement was that he should pay the transfer between himself and plaintiff and between plaintiff and Stiglingh. He had been prepared to pay the purchase price if plaintiff gave him transfer, and he made arrangements in July to carry out his part of the agreement, but a letter was afterwards received from the other side saying they would have nothing more to do with him because he was an uncertificated insolvent. He went and saw Singer, and would have paid him, but he was afraid that Singer could not give him transfer.

Mr. De Waal closed his case, and having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: Defendant is quite right in saying that he is not bound to pay the purchase price unless and until the plaintiff is prepared to give transfer. But the plaintiff, in his declaration, tenders transfer. It is said, however, that there was a bond on the property, and the plaintiff could not give transfer. It does not follow that because there was a bond on the property he may not have made arrangements with the bondholder that the transfer should be passed as soon as the price was paid. The defendant never seems to have been ready with his money himself, and he has never offered to pay the money. The plaintiff now says that he is prepared to give transfer and in his declaration he tenders transfer. The defendant, on the other hand, has never tendered the price nor even expressed his willingness to pay the price on receiving transfer. The Court must order that the amount be paid, but not until the plaintiff is prepared to give transfer. Plaintiff tenders it and the defendant, therefore, must pay the money upon the transfer being given. The order of the Court will be that there will be judgment for the plaintiff for £4,225, with interest a tempore morae, to be paid upon transfer by the plaintiff to the defendant of the land mentioned in the declaration. Failing compliance with the said judgment, it is ordered that the sale be cancelled and £500 be paid to the plaintiff as damages, costs to be paid by the defendant.

SCHMIDT V. SCOTT. { 1906.
{ Feb. 27th.

Trespass—Right of road—Mistake in laying out a road—Road of necessity.

In an action for trespass in breaking a fence on the plain-tiff's land, the defendant, whose land adjoined the plaintiff's, pleaded that he had broken the fence at a point where it crossed a roadway made by him to give him access to a main road recently constructed by the Government on the boundary of his land. The evidence, however, shewed that although the Government had intended to make the main road on his boundary, the main road, as actually constructed, was well within the plaintiff's land, and that the alleged trespass had been committed where the defendant's roadway crossed the plaintiff's land.

Held, that so long as the main road remains in its present position, the plaintiff is entitled to an interdict restraining the defendant from trespassing for the purpose of reaching the main road by a roadway on the plaintiff's land to which the defendant had no right from necessity or otherwise.

This was an action brought by Wilhelm Schmidt, farmer, Cape Flats, against John Scott, Junior, tailor, Cape Town, for an interdict restraining him from trespassing on plaintiff's land, and for £50 damages.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he was the registered owner of certain land, situate in the field-cornetcy of the Downs, Cape division, and the defendant was the registered owner of certain land adjoining. In February and March, 1905, defendant himself, or his agents authorised by him, broke into and entered upon the land of the plaintiff. Defendant destroyed a fence, and had made roadways and tracks upon plaintiff's land, and continued to drive vehicles thereon against the will of the plaintiff, who had frequently requested him to desist. Plaintiff had been damaged in his property, and put to expense in herding his cattle. He prayed for a perpetual interdict restraining defendant from trespassing on his property, £50 damages and costs of suit. Defendant, in his plea, admitted the formal allegations, but said that plaintiff's title was subject to a qualification that the land therein referred to was granted to the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title by His Excellency the Governor upon condition, inter alia, that all roads and thoroughfares over the said land, whether described in the diagrams or not, should remain free and uninterrupted, and he said that such condition was still binding upon the plaintiff. He further said that, although the land of which he was registered owner, formerly adjoined the plaintiff's land, it was now separated by a certain road, to wit, the Lansdowne-road, and the land adjacent thereto was taken by the Colonial Government in or about the year 1899 out of plaintiff's property under powers reserved to them by the law commonly known as Sir John Cradock's Proclamation, of the 6th August, 1813, for the purpose of road-making. At the time of the grant referred to there existed a road or thoroughfare over the land taken by the Colonial Government, which gave access to the land now the property of the defendant, which road the defendant was entitled to use. Plaintiff at some time, the exact date whereof was not material hereto, wrongfully and unlawfully blocked the road mentioned in the preceding paragraph, and thereby deprived the defendant's land of its only means of entrance to and exit from to the Lansdowne-road, which obstruction plaintiff refused to remove, though requested to do so. Defendant admitted that he broke a certain fence, and that he made a track, but he said that the said fence stood upon and the said track was made over the land appurtenant to the Lansdowne-road taken by the Colonial Government as aforesaid, and that he did so in order to obtain an entrance to and exit from his own land. He denied that plaintiff had suffered damages in £50, or any other sum for which he (defendant) was liable, and prayed that the claim be dismissed with costs. For a claim in reconvention, defendant (now plaintiff) said that by reason of the wrongful and unlawful acts of the plaintiff (now defendant), he had suffered damages in the sum of £100, for which amount he prayed judgment.

Plaintiff, in his replication, craved leave to refer to the original grant to his predecessor in title. He said that the Lansdowne-road, which ran across his land, at no point touched the boundary between his and defendant's land. He said further, that defendant and his predecessor-in-title had at no time been entitled to claim access to the Lansdowne-road by going across his (plaintiff's) land, which ran between the said road and the land of the defendant. In his plea to the claim in reconvention, he denied that he had wrongfully and unlawfully deprived the defendant of his only means of access to the Lansdowne-road, and he prayed that the claim be dismissed.

Mr. Upington was for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin was for defendant.

Evidence having been led on both sides,

Mr. Benjamin, in argument, said that defendant no doubt had made a mistake as to his rights, but the plaintiff had taken up an unreasonable attitude. Defendant had committed a technical offence. He had attempted to ascertain what his rights were, but owing to a mistake of the Government he had infringed the rights of another, but he had infringed these rights in such a way as really to have done no damage.

Without calling upon Mr. Upington,

De Villiers, C.J.: For the purposes of this case, it may be taken for granted that when the Government made the new Lansdowne-road, they intended to make that road on the boundary between the plaintiff's and defendant's land; but, in point of fact, this intention was not carried out, for some reason or another. Whether it was through some mistake in the beacons, or for some other reason, the road went right through the plaintiff's land, and left a strip of land between the road and defendant's boundary, and it is upon this strip of land that the defendant came for the purpose of destroying a fence which had been placed there by the plaintiff before he became the owner. Now the Court cannot at this stage inquire what the intentions were, but what was actually done. The road, when it was made, was entirely upon the plaintiff's land, and his transfer deed, which has been put in, clearly shows that. The road at no point touches the boundary at all. There was always this strip of land between the road and the boundary. It is clear that the defendant, by coming upon this land and removing the fence, committed a trespass. It is impossible to avoid that conclusion. It is, no doubt, not an aggravated trespass, because the defendant himself was under a mistaken notion as to his rights, but he committed it at his own risk. When it was afterwards found that he had no right to destroy the fence, it would have been wiser for him to have paid some nominal damages for his trespass, and he ought to have consented not to go upon this road; but throughout he insisted upon using this road. It is said, however, that there was another road—an old road—which, after running over the defendant's land, ultimately comes into the Lansdowne-road at a point considerably to the east, and it is said that that road had been encroached upon by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff had refused to allow the tenants of the defendant to use the road. I do not see that that question can now be inquired into. There is no claim in re-convention for that road to be opened, and there has been no evidence given in regard to that road, because it does not enter into the case. But, assuming for the purposes of this case, that the defendant has a right of road over that road, that would not give him the right to make another road, which the plaintiff objects to. The road which he has now made is entirely new. It has not been contended that the new roadway on the plaintiff's land is a road to which the defendant is entitled, from necessity or otherwise. The sole ground on which the trespass is sought to be justified is that the defendant believed the land to be his, but this belief now proves to be mistaken. It is impossible for the Court now, upon the pleadings, to enter into the question whether the defendant is entitled to the use of the road to the east. I can only say this much, even assuming that he is entitled to that road, it does not follow that he is entitled also to make the new roadway, merely because he has been deprived of the right to the other road. He might either have removed the fence in the other road, or he might have brought an action. To my mind, it is always wiser to bring an action, because the Court can never regard with approval the act of a man who takes the law into his own hands. It is a mitigating circumstance in the present case that the defendant believed that the Lansdowne-road was on his boundary. If he had not entertained this belief heavy damages would have been awarded. It seems to me that he was under an erroneous impression, and that £5 damages will be sufficient to meet the case. The Court will interdict the defendant from trespassing upon the plaintiff's land, and give judgment for plaintiff for £5 damages and costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSION.

{ 1906.
Feb. 28th.

Mr. Bailey moved for the admission of Jacobus Willem L. Krige as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

VAN DER SPUY V. LA GRANGE.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

FORREST V. LOURENS.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £875, with interest, due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE STANFORD V. COHEN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,500, due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Mr. Alexander (for respondent) opposed the application, and read an affidavit by Cohen, setting out that a fire had occurred at his premises in January, 1906; that he made an arrangement with Mr. Gibson, agent of the bondholder (to whom the insurance policy had been ceded) as to the payment of insurance money to him and deduction of the sum of £45 due by way of interest, and that it was arranged that deponent should reinstate the property. Deponent had reinstated the premises to the satisfaction of the municipal authorities.

Mr. Jones read a replying affidavit by Mr. Gibson, who said that the policy was made out to him as agent of the estate Stanford. Witness had had certain work carried out at the premises, and he had a sum of £150 odd, which he was prepared to place to defendant's credit in reduction of the bond. A further affidavit by an architect was read, in which he said that the work done by defendant was unsatisfactory, and that the value of the property was less by £100 since the so-called repairs.

Mr. Jones argued that defendant was not entitled to have the balance of the insurance money remaining after expenditure on the repairs utilised for payment of interest on bond. The company paid over a sum of about £200, to be spent in reinstating the property, and unless the money were so expended the insurance company would be entitled to recover the balance from Mr. Gibson.

Hopley, J., observed that he should want some good authority for such a proposition. He was not aware of any case where an insurance company had sought to recover money paid under a policy that had not been spent upon restoring the property.

Mr. Jones (continuing) argued that the mortgagee was entitled to have the property placed in the same condition as it was in prior to the fire. Mr. Gibson would have this done, but defendant had refused permission to his workmen to come on the building after only £60 worth of work had been carried out. He had demanded that £45 should be deducted for the interest and payment of the balance.

Hopley, J., said it did not seem to him that this was a case in which provisional sentence should be given. The parties might, if they thought fit, go into the principal case. Provisional sentence would be refused, with costs.

HAMMOND AND CO. V. MACKINTOSH.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. Counsel said the debt alleged was that a certain sum of money, over £300, the property of the plaintiff's, had been embezzled by defendant. Plaintiffs alleged that he was insolvent, and that it would be to the benefit of his creditors if his estate were sequestrated. Defendant had been committed for trial on the charge of embezzlement, and he had filed an affidavit setting forth, among other things, that his criminal trial would be prejudiced if an order were now given. Plaintiff would be quite willing to let the matter stand over until the first day of next term.

Defendant consented to this course.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 17th April, provisional order of sequestration to continue.

SMIT AND SCHULTZ V. THOMSON.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

WHITE, RYAN AND CO. V. COHEN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

COETSEE V. GOLDBERG.

Mr. Inchbold moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

JUNKER V. SLAMANY.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and for attachment of rents accruing by the High Sheriff.

Ordered to stand over pending application by executors of Junker, who had died since issue of summons.

CHRISTIE V. WOOD.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £350, with interest and costs, and that the property be declared executable.

The defendant appeared in person and said that the plaintiff agreed to wait on the interest and then suddenly came down upon him for the money. He was now prepared to pay the interest.

Hopley, J., ordered the matter to stand over until March 12.

ALING V. DE VRIES.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for £5 and costs on a magistrate's judgment, and to attach certain property.

Mr. D. Buchanan appeared on behalf of a creditor of De Vries, who had bought the property, which it was sought to attach.

On the application of Mr. De Waal the case was postponed until March 12, in the meantime the Magistrate's Court judgment made a judgment of the Supreme Court, with costs.

VORSTER V. VORSTER.

Mr. Payne moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

OUTSHOORN MUNICIPALITY V. DEY.

Mr. Bailey moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

WAKELIN AND ANOTHER V. ROMAIN.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on an account under certain conditions of sale for £11 16s., balance of purchase price of certain property, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

INSOLVENT ESTATE STEPHAN J. 1906.
V. PARTRIDGE. { Feb 28th.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for judgment under Rule 319 in default of plea. Certain property was sold to the defendant, and he had not paid any of the instalments. Counsel moved alternatively for the cancellation of the sale.

[Hopley, J.: Is the defendant the man who vanished?]

Mr. Buchanan: Yes, my lord.

An order was granted cancelling the sale.

BLEIBERG AND OTHERS V. ABEL.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £13 17s. 5d., less £5 paid on account, balance of account, and costs.

Order granted.

ALLAN AND SHAW V. TWISS.

Mr. Bailey moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £295 5s. 9d., balance of an account for goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

DREYER AND PEARL V. SHUTTE.

Mr. Roux moved for judgment under Rule 329d calling on the defendant to restore a certain promissory note.

Order granted, calling on the defendant to return the note.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the release of Johannes H. van Rooyen's estate from sequestration.

Application granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE SNYMAN. { 1906.
{ Feb. 28th.

Mr. McGregor moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to cancel a certain mortgage bond.

Order granted.

Ex parte CONGO.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved to make absolute a rule authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte THE INSOLVENT ESTATE
HARTZ.

Mr. De Waal moved for an order authorising the Master to amend insolvent's name to Nicholas Herman Johannes Hartz on certain documents.

Order granted.

Ex parte LESTER.

Mr. Watermeyer moved to amend a certain order of Court by extending the return day for a period of six months. Petitioner's husband was last heard of in Wellington, New Zealand, and as he was moving from place to place, counsel asked for substituted service by publication in a Wellington paper.

Return day extended for six months, and publication ordered in a Wellington paper.

MILLS V. MACDONALD.

Mr. Sutton moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent, and for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the estate.

Application granted. Mr. H. Lewis appointed provisional trustee, with power to sell perishables and the horse, the only live-stock in the estate.

Ex parte GRAY.

Mr. Gutsche moved for an order authorising the amendment of petitioner's name in a bond.

Application granted.

Ex parte KRUGER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to the petitioner to raise money on mortgage. There was a consent paper by the heirs of the estate.

Leave granted to raise a mortgage of £1,500, money to be applied to releasing present mortgage, and the remainder to be used for educational purposes.

Ex parte ESTATE LATE SNYMAN.

Mr. Howse moved to have a certain compromise authorised.

Leave granted to enter into compromise as prayed.

MOSTERT V. BURMAN.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to sue respondent, now of Johannesburg, by edictal citation, in respect of a certain debt, and for attachment of certain land at Camp's Bay ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

Leave to sue granted, and property attached as prayed, citation to be returnable on the first day of next term, personal service.

Ex parte VAN HEERDEN.

Mr. Rowson moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property, to certain minors, and the appointment of petitioner as guardian to assist the minors so far as might be necessary. Property had been bequeathed to the children by the joint will of their parents. As the children attained the age of majority they were paid out. Two minors now remained and the surviving parent now wished to transfer to each of them a farm valued at £1,000. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ELLUS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the appointment of a curator to represent petitioner's minor child in the partition of a certain farm, Buffelsfontein, division of Ladismith, her husband having died intestate. Petitioner suggested the appointment of Edward Willem Cornelis Ellus, uncle of the minor.

Order granted appointing Mr. Ellus curator ad litem of the minor for the purposes of the arbitration, costs of this application to be borne by the minor and petitioner, as well as pro rata share of the arbitration expenses.

Ex parte GELDERBLOM.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the appointment of petitioner as curator ad litem of his minor children in the partition of the farm Buffelsfontein.

Order granted appointing petitioner curator ad litem, majors and minors to share costs of application and expenses of division.

Ex parte VAN WYK.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the appointment of petitioner as curator ad litem of his minor children in the partition of the farm Buffelsfontein.

Order granted as prayed, minors to pay all expenses.

Ex parte VAN WYK AND OTHERS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the appointment of Roelof Jacobus van Wyk as curator ad litem of certain minors in the partition of the farm Buffelsfontein.

Order granted as prayed, costs of application and partition to be borne by beneficiaries pro rata according to their beneficiaries pro rata.

Ex parte VAN TONDER.

Mr. Van Zyl made a similar application for the appointment of Johannes Petrus Jacobus van Tonder, J.P.J. son, to represent petitioner and his co-heirs.

Order granted as prayed, costs of application and partition to be borne by beneficiaries pro rata.

Ex parte VAN WYK.

Mr. Van Zyl made a similar application for the appointment of petitioner to represent certain minors.

Similar order as in preceding cases.

Ex parte ROSSER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the appointment of Isaac Johannes Marais, attorney, Ladismith, to represent petitioner's minor children in the passing of the partition transfers of certain farm, and for leave to sell the minors' shares and invest the proceeds in immovable property in the village of Ladismith.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

BERLYN V. BERLYN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved on behalf of petitioner for leave to sue his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a divorce. Respondent had left her husband, and was now believed to be residing in Johannesburg. Attached to the petition was a letter from defendant to petitioner saying: "I am dead to you now; I am no longer a wife to you."

Leave to sue granted, citation to be returnable on the first day of next term, personal service to be effected.

In re THE CAPE CANNING CO., LTD.
(IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Van Zyl presented the official liquidators' report. The statement of the financial position showed assets amounting to £6,456 9s. 6d., and liabilities amounting to £30,436 4s. 0½d., disclosing a loss of £23,979 5s. 6d., during a period of nine years. It was proposed to sell the property, the creditors being anxious to have a speedy liquidation.

The report was ordered to lie for inspection for a fortnight, one publication in the "Cape Times."

Ex parte COUSINS.

Mr. Roux moved for the amendment of petitioner's name in certain mortgage bond, in which he was described as Arthur Henry Vallentine Cousins.

Order granted as prayed.

PITKETHLEY V. PITKETHLEY.

Mr. Inchbold moved, on the petition of John Pitkethley, of Salt River, trading with the respondent, G. Pitkethley, as Shaw's Stores and J. and G. Pitkethley, for the appointment of a receiver pending liquidation of the partnership estate. Petitioner suggested that Mr. Alfred Newton Foot should be appointed receiver.

Mr. Russell read a replying affidavit by respondent, who denied several allegations made by his brother. Respondent suggested the name of Mr. John M. Shaw as receiver.

Mr. Inchbold read an answering affidavit by applicant, who strongly objected to the appointment of Mr. Shaw as receiver.

Mr. Russell suggested as an alternative the appointment of the Board of Executors.

Mr. Inchbold said he thought the Court might very properly appoint Mr. Foot as co-receiver.

The Court appointed Mr. Roos, secretary of the Board of Executors, as receiver of the partnership, pending an action to be brought by applicant, question of costs to stand over.

Hopley, J., remarked that it seemed to him that the dispute between the parties might be very well settled without further proceedings in that court.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. LE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

Ex parte LEVY. } 1906.
Mar. 1st.

This was an application upon notice to the Colonial Government for an order permitting the applicant to land in Cape Town from the steamer Surrey, and for costs of the application.

The affidavit of the applicant stated that he was a partner in the firm of Goldsmith and Levy, carrying on business in Cape Town. He had been purchasing extensively in horses, cattle, and mules in the Argentine. He was domiciled here before he went to the Argentine to purchase stock. He had been travelling to and fro between Cape Town and the Argentine four times during the past eighteen months, and had never previously had any difficulty in landing. He had resided in South Africa for a period of five years, and was a naturalised British subject, having been granted papers in 1904. He had ample means, and had never been convicted of any crime. He arrived in Cape Town from the Argentine on Wednesday by the steamship Surrey. He had been informed that he would not be allowed to land, and no reason had been given for this prohibition. He had come over from the Argentine in order to settle different matters with his partner. The steamship Surrey might at any moment leave the Docks.

The affidavit of Samuel Davis, detective head-constable in the urban police, Cape Town, stated that he knew one Harris Levy, alias Harris Plessner, who was at one time in Cape Town. He had known Levy for about two years. Levy was the associate of pimps and prostitutes while in Cape Town, and a frequenter of gambling houses and the like. One Sarah Goldberg, a convicted prostitute, was an associate with Levy. Witness had seen the photograph produced of a man and woman, and recognised the figures as Harris and Goldberg. The affidavit of C. W. Cousins, of the Immigration Department, stated that he that he had prohibited applicant from landing in this port as being a prohibited immigrant within the meanings of sections A and E of clause 2, Act 47, 1902, the applicant being unable to write and also known as a man of most undesirable character. Although applicant was in possession of letters of naturalisation, dated April, 1904, deponent had been unable to recognise his claim to exemption as being domiciled in this country, as he had established a business in Buenos Ayres, and he had made that place his residence during the period that had elapsed since he took out letters of naturalisation.

Mr. Burton for applicant. Mr. Nightingale for the Colonial Secretary.

Mr. Burton having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would require fuller information than appeared in applicant's affidavit.

Mr. Burton said that the steamer was expected to leave Table Bay this (Thursday) afternoon.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the matter might be mentioned again later in the day, when counsel was in possession of more definite information as to applicant's domicile and partnership.

The matter therefore stood over until a later stage.

De Villiers, C.J. (before rising later in the day) inquired if counsel was ready with the further affidavits which it was understood would be produced.

The Assistant Registrar said that no further affidavits had been produced, and the applicant apparently was not ready to proceed at present.

BERGL V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1906.
MENT. { Mar. 1st.

Contract of sale — Estoppel —
Novation.

The plaintiff sold to the defendant, for future delivery, certain sleepers of different kinds of Australian wood, including red mahogany. Before the arrival of the sleepers, the defendant, on discovering that the plaintiff intended to deliver white instead of red mahogany sleepers, gave notice to the plaintiff that the former could only be accepted at a reduced price. The plaintiff raised no objection beyond asking the defendant to reconsider the matter, and thereafter not only delivered the white mahogany sleepers, but received the reduced price and signed vouchers prepared on behalf of the defendant, which shewed the deduction on the face of the account.

Held in an action for payment of the balance of the price originally agreed upon, that, although there was no express contract for a reduction of price, the conduct of the plaintiff amounted to an acceptance of the terms on which the defendant had consented to accept white instead of red mahogany sleepers.

This was an action brought by Alexander Balfour Wright Bergl, formerly of Cape Town, against the Colonial Government, to recover certain sums alleged to be due upon a sleeper contract.

It appeared that the plaintiff sought to recover certain three sums alleged to be due under contract to supply sleepers to the Railway Department, entered into in February, 1903. The three sums in question were respectively £2,889 4s., £112 7s., and £101 6s. 10d. As to the largest sum, this was claimed as owing on account of 1½d. per sleeper deducted by the Government by reason of the sleepers being hewn instead of sawn sleepers. As to the amount of £112 7s., this represented in some cases 1s. per sleeper, and in other cases 6d. per sleeper, deducted by the Government in respect of certain white mahogany sleepers being supplied, which the Government said were not in accordance with the contract. The third item referred to certain sleepers which had been rejected, but which the Government said they would take at a reduction. As to the third branch of the case, defendants in their plea tendered to pay the amount claimed. The plaintiff in his declaration said that the contract was entered into in February, and March, 1903, that the sleepers had to be according to contract, and that the form of tender sent said that the sleepers should be sawn on both sides, and they had to be inspected, approved, and branded by an official of the New South Wales Government. Plaintiff said that the sleepers came from time to time, and the contract was executed. Defendants, in their plea, said that there were two contracts, one for the delivery of sleepers at East London, and the other for delivery at Port Elizabeth. They said that plaintiff continued to supply hewn instead of sawn sleepers referred to in the tender; that there was a separate agreement entered into in August between plaintiff and the Government, whereby the sleepers were taken at a reduction of 1½d.; that there was another agreement entered into between the parties in September that the white mahogany sleepers should be taken at a reduction of price, because red mahogany should have been supplied; and that they accepted the sleepers under those two agreements. The defendants tendered the amount claimed by plaintiff under the third head.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), was for plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Howel Jones), was for defendants.

Evidence having been led on both sides,

Counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J.: The contract between the parties was for the delivery by the plaintiff to the Government of sleepers, sawn on both sides, and cut from New South Wales timber, viz., black butt, grey box, brush box, and red mahogany in about equal proportions of each kind. It is not disputed that the sleepers which were actually delivered had not been sawn on both sides, but were hewn, and that, as to some of them, they were of white mahogany instead of red mahogany. It is clear from the evidence that some short time after delivery had commenced of the first load the Government objected to receiving sleepers hewn on both sides, on the ground that they required sleepers which had been sawn. Then there was some communication between the parties. Either Mr. Bergl or Mr. Buckley (his manager at that time) met Mr. Sinclair (the Government's representative)—I am inclined to think that it was Mr. Buckley—and what took place on that occasion is of some importance, although Mr. Sinclair's memory may not have been quite fixed as to which of the two it was, yet I am satisfied as to the substantial accuracy of the evidence given by him, and that is that it was understood between them that the Government was to deduct 1½d. in respect of each sleeper. It is quite possible that it may have been added, in the course of the conversation, that Mr. Buckley trusted to the Government thereafter reconsidering the matter, but a vague trusting of that kind could not affect the agreement which was actually arrived at. It is said that a contract of this kind, ought to be as clearly proved as the original contract. I quite agree, and to my mind it has been as clearly proved. As to the white mahogany sleepers, it is clearly proved that there was an agreement between the parties. All their actions in the matter amounted to an arrangement that the Government were to be entitled to make these deductions in respect to the white mahogany sleepers. There is one other remark which I wish to make in regard to the objection as to the sleepers being hewn, instead of being sawn. I find on the vouchers these words are added: "Deducted off each sleeper, owing to being hewn instead of sawn." Clear notice is given to the plaintiff as to the reason why the deduction is made. There is an unconditional acceptance of this deduction on behalf of Bergl, where he says, "Received that amount in part payment of account." Then Mr. Searle lays great stress upon the fact that a considerable proportion of the sleepers had already been accepted by the Government before the arrangement was made for the deduction of 1½d. per sleeper. In my opinion, however, the arrangement between the parties was intended to refer to all sleepers—sleepers already delivered as well as sleepers afterwards to be delivered, and the consideration for this agreement was that the Government thereafter should accept the sleepers. The Government thereafter consented to receive such sleepers, on condition that 1½d. was deducted. In my opinion, the parties intended to leave it entirely to the Government to consider at the end of the contract whether they would waive their right to a reduction. The Government, on completion of the contract, did not consider that they were bound to waive their rights. Therefore the contract remains, and they have a right to the deduction. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover in respect of claims 1 and 2, but in regard to claim 3, I understand that there is a tender. The judgment of the Court will be for the plaintiff for £101 6s. 10d., with costs to date of tender, but the costs subsequent to date of tender must be paid by the plaintiff.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and a Jury.]

JURITZ V. KALK BAY MUNICIPALITY. { 1906.
Mar. 2nd.
" 5th.
" 6th.

Municipality—Interference with natural flow of water — Damage to property.

This was an action brought by Chas. Frederick Juritz, of Cape Town, against the Kalk Bay Municipality, to recover £200 damages for the flooding of his property near Muizenberg, in consequence of defendants' alleged negligence.

The land on which Mr. Juritz's house stood was sold by the Municipality in 1900 to Mr. Wood, and the Council, in their advertisement of the sale, set out that these were choice building lots on the "Riviera of South Africa." Mr. Wood bought the ground, built a house on it, and subsequently this house was bought from him by Mr. Juritz. Between 1903 and 1905 the Municipality made a road between Mr. Juritz's house and the vlei, the road being composed of sand, with a coating of gravel on the top, so that water could soak through without any difficulty. Last May the Municipality, wanting to lay certain pipes in connection with their drainage system on the sea side of the road—desired to divert all the water in the vlei, and they thereupon proceeded to place a lot of sand bags, about 10 feet high, right across the vlei mouth, and made a dam. They made a small opening, which was not wide enough to allow the water to escape. The fall from the railway culvert, which was about a mile and a quarter from the bridge, was only 2 ft. 4 in., the result being that water came down through a culvert which was four times as big as the opening made by the Municipality. The Municipality took no steps to prevent a catastrophe. On the 7th June the water began to show itself round the corner of Mr. Juritz's house, which was being occupied by Mr. Kingon. On the 8th, things became worse, and on the 9th, Mr. Kingon, seeing the water all round the house, and hearing several loud reports, thought it wiser to clear out of the house. On the 10th the house was flooded all round. The Municipality tried to cut away below the bridge, so as to let the water out of the vlei, but so strong was the rush of water that the dam broke, although the bridge itself received only a shock. After the dam had broken, the vlei began to sink, and by the afternoon at three o'clock the water had almost gone down. The plaintiff's property was, in consequence of the flooding, damaged in several ways, and had suffered depreciation. The defendants' case was that, whatever flooding took place, the damage to Mr. Juritz's house was not caused by the vlei; that the plaintiff's land was waterlogged, and was always liable to flooding; that they (defendants) took all precautions which they could reasonably be expected to take, and that they were not liable to any damages. The defendants also said that the rainfall about the time of the flooding was excessive.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), was for plaintiff; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Swift), was for defendants.

Thomas Wilson Cairncross, civil engineer, formerly engineer of the Cape Town Municipality, said that he saw the spot in question about the beginning of June. Formerly there was no bridge at the vlei mouth, but simply a broad opening to the sea. The bridge was built about nine or ten years ago. In May last the municipality began to make a coffer dam so as to enable them to lay certain pipes in connection with their drainage. The area which drained into the vlei was the slopes of Tokai and below. A great part of the water passed under the railway. The railway culvert had an opening of about 200 square feet, while the new exit made by the municipality at their bridge was 49½ square feet, whereas the bridge was about 290 square feet. The fall from the railway culvert to the municipal bridge was about two feet, the distance being about a quarter of a mile. Witness described the results of his observations of the flooding from the 8th June. On the Friday the water was going through the new exit at the rate of nearly a mile an hour. The opening in the railway culvert being four times the size of the exit in the bridge, the inevitable result was that the water in the vlei must rise. There was no way of avoiding that. The exit was nothing like sufficient to carry away the rainfall. Witness saw the vlei after the dam had broken. The water carried the sand embankment away, but the bridge remained. After this had happened, the water fell a good deal, although the rain had not ceased.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness took observations on the instruction of Attorney Steer, who, he believed, was acting for Mr. Van Reenen, a farmer. A case came on in the Magistrate's Court, in which Mr. Van Reenen sued the municipality. He believed the Magistrate decided in favour of the municipality. The rainfall during the week previous to the 10th June was exceptional, and there were several instances of damage done by the storm in the Peninsula.

Hugh Stewart Kingon, a former tenant of the plaintiff's house, said that about the end of May he noticed that the water was beginning to rise, and he saw that the municipality had adopted a foolish move. The only conclusion he could come to was that the water was running through the sand road from the vlei. Three or four days before witness's home was flooded, his neighbour, Norman, had had to vacate his house. On the 8th June the water had reached the foundations of his house. On the 9th it had got to the steps. He went to town, and when he returned in the evening the water was about three-quarters way round the steps. On making an examination, he found that there were two cracks in the stoep and that the front door had jammed. While they were at tea they heard several booms, and afterwards found cracks in the yard. He then left the house. On the 10th the front of the house was completely isolated. The rental of the house was £6, the rent having been reduced on account of the winter months. Witness occupied the house two months.

Cross-examined: There had been heavy rains extending over about ten days before the dam broke.

By the jury: The water about the house had not subsided when he left on the Saturday afternoon, after the sand-bag wall had broken. He did not know whether any change had taken place.

William Westhofen said that he had considerable experience of bridges and waterways. He subsequently corroborated the evidence given by Mr. Cairncross.

John Henry Wood, the first owner of the building, said that prior to June last he never saw water standing on the ground.

Cross-examined: Witness was Mayor of the Kalk Bay Municipality when he purchased the ground. He acquired the ground because there was a frontage for boating on the lake and a view of the mountain.

Mr. Searle: I believe you bought more ground near the vlei?

I am sorry to say I did.

Further cross-examined: He bought the ground for about £86, the extent being 50 ft. by 100 ft. The builder (Pinker) he believed was the architect of the house. The ground was part of a sandhill, high and dry. The contract price for the building was about £435, and there were extras which brought the cost to £501. Witness sold the ground and building to Mr. Juritz for about £800 two years ago.

John Augustus Simon, of Lakeside; Mr. Auret, another resident in the locality; Frederick William Fischer, of Retreat; William Fischer (son of the previous witness); Everett White, building and quantity surveyor; and E. J. Sherwood, of Cape Town, also gave evidence for plaintiff.

Alfred Tier, builder and contractor, Retreat, described the damage done to Mr. Juritz's property by the flooding in the early part of June last.

The plaintiff, Charles Frederick Juritz stated when he saw the house in March last before the flood there was no crack in the stoep.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Herbert Wallace, Assistant Engineer of Muizenberg, stated the level of the temporary outlet originally was practically the same as that at the bridge, but the rush of water underneath the bridge had scoured out the ground to a further depth of from four to five feet. He did not think it possible for water to percolate from the vlei through the road towards the plaintiff's house, because the sand had consolidated, and there was a mixture of clay in the road.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: If the road were taken away the ground would be just below the high flood level of the vlei.

On the 8th June the Engineer reported that the channel would carry a normal overflow, but not the abnormal overflow then prevailing. On the 8th June both you and the engineer agreed that the exit was not sufficient to carry off the abnormal flow. What did you do?—The rain was so abnormal no one could do anything. It would have been a silly thing to attempt anything. He found the intake more than twice as large as the exit, but the intake might have been too large for its purpose.

Thos. Bennett, engineer to the defendant Municipality, stated the drainage work was commenced about May, and it was to be completed about November, although it was not yet finished. It was necessary that the main drainage should pass at the mouth of the vlei, in order to reach the outfall. Under the Act 26 of 1897, the work could not have been commenced in summer, and so it was commenced in May. But for the heavy rains early in June, the work at the vlei would have been finished at the end of that month. Every precaution was taken to prevent flooding. A channel 10 feet wide was constructed down to the sea to carry off flood water. During the period of five days, taking the drainage area of 23 miles, eleven times the quantity of water fell than was contained in the whole of the reservoirs on the mountain. Though the sand on the road was very fine, when it consolidated, it became very dense, and it was almost impossible for the water to get through.

S. Kendal, partner in the firm of Baker and Masey, said the foundations of the house were put in very irregularly. He would not consider the foundations sufficiently good for a house like the one in question. A house with such foundations was extremely likely to crack. Precautions ought to have been taken to provide against possible flooding.

Ernest Baker, who was Municipal Superintendent of Works at the time of the flooding, said he remembered the building of the house. Water was always lying about the house in the winter time. The stoep had been cracked for the past two years, and there was a crack from the top to the bottom of the wall.

George Powell, a member of the Kalk Bay Municipality at the time in question, said that he visited the neighbourhood the Monday after the flood. In his opinion, water could not have percolated through the road. He had seen the cracks in the house, and attributed them to the loose soil of the foundation.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The site was a choice building lot, as was stated by the advertisement of 1900, when witness was a member of the Council.

A. H. Barnes, Municipal Clerk, stated that during May and June he was constantly along the road. Part of the road was practically solid, and the remainder of it was a sand embankment, with a couple of layers of clay, with one each of stone and gravel. Witness would have taken the house previous to the accident, but for cracks in the stoep and the walls. There were no visible signs of the water having percolated through the road towards the plaintiff's house.

Albert Edward Gower, who had kept the rain gauge at Tokai, stated during his eleven years' experience there had never been such a heavy rainfall as that which took place early in June. On the 5th June, there was a fall of 3.80.

Wm. Thos. Olive, Civil Engineer, of Cape Town, stated that last year he acted for a time as engineer at Muizenberg, during Mr. Bennett's absence. The site in question he had visited several times, and had made levels of the place. It was impossible that levels could be taken inside the house. At the back of the house there was no guttering, and the down-spouts did not carry the water away from the walls of the house outwards. There was a crack in the wall at the back of the house.

Charles Stewart produced the rainfalls over a long period, and said the one in June was unequalled in his time.

Mr. Searle closed his case, and counsel having addressed the jury on the facts,

Maasdorp, J., said the broad legal principle was that no man had a right to interfere with the natural flow of water for his own benefit in such a manner as to pen it back on to the land of another, and if he did so he was liable for any damages which might be incurred. The plaintiff said that the defendant had penned back the water and interfered with the natural flow of the water, and if the defendant had left it to its natural flow it would not have reached his ground. Supposing a man had penned back water in a reasonable manner so that it could not be expected to go on to the land of another and then by some extraordinary natural convulsion an accident happened, the jury would always in such a case give a reasonable benefit of consideration that such a thing could not have been foreseen. But in the present case it was not a sudden flood; it was a large flow of water, and the question would be, could the further rising of the water have been prevented? There was a road with rising water on the one side above the level of the plaintiff's ground on the other. The plaintiff said that the result was that the water from the vlei came on to his land. The defendant denied this, and said that the water came from the culverts up above. If the water came from above the culverts and did the damage, it was a matter for which the jury could not hold the defendant responsible in this case. If the jury held that the water came from the vlei and caused the damage the question would be the amount of damages. The witnesses for the plaintiff put the damages at the highest at £150 and some others put it at £120.

The jury, after about thirty minutes' retirement, returned a verdict for the plaintiff for £125 damages.

Judgment was entered for that amount with costs, the costs of preparing three plans to be allowed by the taxing officer.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TRIAL CASE.

DRUMMOND V. WOOD.

{ 1906.
Mar. 2n.
" 23rd.
Apr. 3rd.

Breach of contract—Damages.

The hearing was continued in the action instituted by Hildyard Home Drummond, who claimed £1,000 by way of damages in respect of a breach of agreement between the defendant's foreman and plaintiff in reference to the printing of a paper called "South African Truth."

At the last hearing his lordship adjourned the case in order that the plaintiff might reply to a plea in abatement, and put in the evidence of Mrs. Leeson.

The evidence of Mrs. Leeson, the plaintiff's mother-in-law, taken on commission, was read, and it set out that the plaintiff asked her for £50 to pay the printer's bill, and he said that he would register the paper in her name as security. On July 1 the plaintiff told her that he did not require the money, as the defendant had broken his agreement. Deponent verbally re-assigned the paper to the plaintiff on July 1.

The plaintiff conducted his case, and Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan) was for the defendant.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the defendant was clearly entitled to absolute from the instance unless the plaintiff could clearly prove the re-assignment. Counsel having been heard in argument, Hopley, J., said he thought there had been a re-assignment, and ordered the case to proceed on its merits.

The plaintiff, in the course of his evidence, said that the machinery of the defendant was so old and antiquated that the work was not completed in time. Apart from that, the defendant had not enough paper to print the whole issue. On June 9 he met the defendant for the first time, and drew his attention to the atrociously bad printing, and pointed out that it was useless going on if the paper did not come out to time. There was scarcely a word correctly spelt in the proofs. In a letter to the defendant witness pointed out that the publication was causing him loss instead of paying handsomely. The second issue was printed on different paper from that of the first. The defendant mutilated the paper, sub-edited it, and turned it out just as he liked. It was stipulated that the contents bill should be printed on yellow paper, but the defendant printed it on salmon colour. In the exhibits put in his lordship would see an advertisement from the Ocean Guarantee Association, along with which was a plate of a burglar and a safe. It could not be said whether the man was a burglar or not, and a copy of the "Owl" showed how it should have appeared. Witness, in a letter, pointed out to the defendant that he was splitting up the leading articles, doing what he liked, and making witness's position a perfect sinecure.

Advertisements were withdrawn on account of bad printing. The defendant conducted the paper as if he were owner, proprietor, and everything else; in fact, he turned it out how and when he liked.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He put a proposition to Mr. Wood to rent the place, as the defendant was totally incompetent to carry on his business.

Samuel McKeag, of the "South African News," stated his firm estimated for the production of the "South African Truth." The first issue of the paper he did not consider properly printed. In his opinion there had been a bad distribution of ink, and the machine should have printed better. His experience was that small suburban printers wanted to do the work cheaper and superior to the "South African News."

Alfred da Costa, of Da Costa, Jacobs and Co., stated it would require £40 or £50 to pay for 5,000 copies of the paper of six pages. Another couple of pages would bring the cost to between £50 and £60. The paper was badly printed, and the client would be a good one that would be satisfied with the paper. There was no question that the paper was badly got up. In his twenty-two years' experience he had never seen proofs such as those produced.

Portas Moses, manager of the Cape Town "Argus," said his firm would charge about £6 a page to print the paper of 3,000 copies. The printing was not satisfactory in the first issue, but some of the copies were fairly well printed.

David M. Smaile, assistant general manager of the Cape Times, Ltd., stated that the paper was badly printed; it was a poor production. For 5,000 copies of eight pages he thought the cost would be about £60. The printing press had been in the hands of Messrs. Richards for a good many years.

By Mr. Benjamin: The defendant must have lost on the contract.

The plaintiff (recalled) said he did not see the machine until after the failure of the defendants.

Mr. Benjamin produced a medical certificate in reference to the condition of Mr. A. E. R. Wood, son of the defendant, whom it had been intended to call in support of defendant's case. Mr. Wood, jun., had been ordered away for a complete rest on account of ill-health.

William Henry Stokes, advertisement canvasser and contractor, said that he should give about £40 a week for the advertising rights of a paper like the first copy of "South African Truth," dated 3rd June last. About a year ago he should have given an additional £10 for the space, because advertising was then very much better.

Cross-examined: Witness was proprietor of the "Silver Leaves Annual." [Hopley, J.: What is the "Silver Leaves Annual"?]

It is a pictorial annual got up for sending to people at Home, printed in the style of "Country Life." For the last issue I got £850 out of it for advertisements in South Africa and England. He had canvassed for the "South African Guide." He had also canvassed for a monthly called the "Property Register." He had not canvassed for any newspaper in this country of the class of "South African Truth."

By the Court: He had not gone to any newspaper in Cape Town and offered a price for space. He did not offer anything for space in "South African Truth" when it was first published.

Re-examined: Witness claimed to be an expert in advertising.

Plaintiff said he claimed that "South African Truth" was a journal, not a newspaper; it was not devoted to news.

[Hopley, J.: I am looking at your contract with Prideau, which is for getting out a "newspaper."]

It is wrongly described there.

[Hopley, J.: Well, it is in your own handwriting.]

Edward Milton Gardener said that he was employed by defendant as canvasser for his printing business when the "South African Truth" was produced.

[Hopley, J.: What are you now, Mr. Gardener?]

Witness: Canvasser for a monumental mason. He was introduced to plaintiff as a canvasser for "South African Truth." He got several advertisements, in the first instance, providing that the paper was brought out all right. He got 20 or 30 advertisements, all of which appeared in the first number. Two or three were paid for. The paper when produced was the laughing-stock of the advertising community; after that they would have nothing more to do with it. The first number was delivered in town by motor-car. Some of the copies were folded and others not.

Cross-examined: Witness was employed at the Progressive Works, after he had left Mr. Wood's employ. When he left Mr. Wood's employ there was no suggestion of shortness in his accounts. Mr. Wood gave him an excellent testimonial. He received three weeks' imprisonment for defalcations while he was employed at the Progressive Works. Witness got an advertisement from Mr. Hartley, but he did not tell him that the charge was to be £2. The arrangement was that the first advertisement was to be gratuitous, and that the advertisement was to be continued if he (Mr. Hartley) liked the paper after the first issue. He also canvassed Dalton and Reid and the Ratner Safe Company, the arrangement being the same as in the case of Mr. Hartley. He could not explain why the charges in the plaintiff's books against various people should appear.

Re-examined: Witness was engaged as canvasser for "South African Truth," and the defendant's printing business, and he was recommended to witness by defendant or his agent, Prideau. The conviction referred to was in relation to a sum of 2s. which he claimed was commission due to him. Plaintiff closed his case.

John Wm. Wood (defendant) said that he was some years ago Mayor of Claremont, and had resided at the Cape about 20 years.

Mr. Benjamin: You are owner of the Peninsula Printing Works?

Witness: I am. The contract with plaintiff was entered into while he (Mr. Wood) was on his way back from Graham's Town. Prideau, who was managing his business, acting during his absence. The only other paper that he had produced on his press was the "S.A. Spectator," which he printed for about six months. He did not at first undertake supervision of the publication of "Truth," but, after the second issue, he found that plaintiff had made his way into the composing-room and had introduced whisky there, generally creating pandemonium and making the men "tight," so that imperfect work, and only imperfect work, could be turned out. Witness spoke to certain three paragraphs which he had to exclude from the paper on the ground that they were defamatory. If there was any delay in the production of the paper, it was not due to any fault on his part or his workmen's part.

By the Court: He did not know of his own knowledge that plaintiff introduced whisky into the composing-room.

Witness (in further evidence) said that he thought the paper was printed as well as the "S.A. Spectator." He thought it was as well printed as a paper like the "Midland News." He did not think there were many papers in the country that were better printed than the "S.A. Truth."

Cross-examined by Plaintiff: The defendant employed men at lower wages than are recognised by the Typographical Society.

[Hopley, J.: Did you have a competent staff?]

Witness: We had a competent staff and competently paid.

[Hopley, J.: Why didn't you repudiate the contract when you came back?]

I wish I had done.

Cross-examination continued: Witness endeavoured to carry out the contract to the best of his ability. He was not a practical printer.

Cross-examination continued: Witness refused to have his dispute with plaintiff referred to an arbitration of printers. He meant to come to the Court rather than a "tickey" should go out of his pocket to plaintiff.

Plaintiff: You had a conscientious objection to this matter going before arbitrators?

Witness: I had a conscientious objection to pay you £50 to clear out. There were a number of issues of the "S.A. Spectator" that witness had not yet been paid for. Mr. Peregrino did not refuse to pay because of the "diabolical printing" of his paper; Mr. Peregrino had given him promissory notes, and he excused himself from paying on the ground that he had not got the money. Witness considered that he would have lost very little on the plaintiff's contract if it had been continued, running the contract in conjunction with the jobbing work. He would not be willing to enter into a contract again for the publication of a weekly paper, and watching against libels even at £100 a week. He got out of the contract when he discovered that it was not in the name of H. Home Drummond, but in the name of Mrs. Leeson, whose address was given under another name from plaintiff's house.

Plaintiff: You thought it was a "fishy" thing that a man should live in the same house as his mother-in-law?

Witness: Not at all—a splendid thing. I thought it was a curious thing to have one house registered in two names.

[Hopley, J.: Do I understand that your ground for giving up the contract was that there was a conspiracy?]

I carried on the contract, and fulfilled my portion of it, as I consider, the applicant failing to carry out his part by failing to pay moneys when they were due. I got tired of watching against libels.

[Hopley, J.: The reason was that he had not paid the money?]

And I had no expectation, because I never knew anybody that he did pay. He wanted to get out of the contract, because he knew plaintiff was an absolutely worthless fellow.

I suppose you admit that the printing of this paper is about as beautiful a mess anybody could possibly make of it?—No, I do not.

Henry John Cannon, compositor, said that the hands employed by defendant were competent to bring out the plaintiff's paper. The machinery was good. Witness considered that plaintiff had put in as exhibits some discarded copies of the paper. It seemed to him that the plaintiff had picked out some of the worst copies. He regarded the paper as up to the average of the "Peninsula Herald," and the "Free Press." He should not consider the paper of the same standard as the Cape Town dailies, but he certainly thought it was equal to the average country paper in this colony. Plaintiff came to the composing-room with a bottle of whisky on two occasions, and handed it to the men.

Plaintiff objected to Mr. Buchanan putting leading questions to the witness.

Thomas Scragg, compositor; James H. Hartley, provision merchant, Observatory; Charles H. Kinsley, law-agent; Arthur E. Rowse; Frederick Dalton, of Dalton and Reid; Archibald P. Mummery, confidential clerk to the South African manager of the Rock Life As-insurance Co.; William Cooper, advertising manager for Clegghorn and Harris; Harold R. Peck, of Aitken and Peck, chemists; John Forsyth, of Forsyth and Co., art dealers; and Thomas Smith, printing works manager, Wynberg, also gave evidence to the effect that they had not engaged to pay for advertisements in the plaintiff's paper.

Albert Wm. Bowers, stationmaster, Claremont, said that they received a batch of copies of "S.A. Truth" to be forwarded up-country. The papers were despatched, but plaintiff did not pay the charges. They declined to send a second consignment.

The witness Smith said he considered that "S.A. Truth" was up to the standard of the generality of newspapers in this country, which was bad. Smith added he used to run the "Suburban Herald" for about five months. He used to lose a minimum of £40 a month.

A good deal of the evidence was directed to showing that various amounts had been debited against advertisers in plaintiff's books, while, as a matter of fact, no agreement was made to pay for the advertisements, and it was understood that they were to be inserted gratis.

Mr. Benjamin said that, in view of the fact that his lordship would be absent from Cape Town for a considerable time, he would not apply for a postponement of the case to enable the evidence of A. E. R. Wood to be taken on commission.

Mr. Buchanan read the evidence, taken on commission, of James Arthur Prideaux, formerly works manager for defendant, who said that, after a time, plaintiff became very confidential with him. Plaintiff suggested that he should put into the paper a libel on some friend of his. He asked whether defendant was a man of property or means. Plaintiff seemed very anxious to get hold of the works. Witness communicated this conversation to Mr. Wood and his son. Witness complained of plaintiff's interference with the compositors. Robert Greening made an offer of money to witness, to enable him to go up-country, provided he would swear an affidavit for plaintiff. Witness made a declaration (annexed), at Greening's dictation. Witness was hard-up at the time, and the offer of money tempted him to make the declaration. He was offered £50 in cash, his fare up-country, and one-third of the damages when the case was decided. Having been duped by plaintiff, he communicated with Mr. Wood from Bloemfontein, and informed him of the circumstances under which he had made the declaration. Witness was very hard-up when he was prepared to sell his evidence.

Plaintiff, in his address to the Court, submitted that, owing to the acts of defendant, he had been deprived of a handsome profit from the paper. The paper was badly printed, it was delivered late, and nothing like the number of copies contracted for was issued. He contended that defendant really had no claim in reconvention, because he (plaintiff) had had no profit from the work he had done.

Mr. Benjamin having been heard in argument, and Plaintiff having replied,

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (April 4th.)

Hopley, J.: On May 5, 1905, the contract annexed to the declaration was entered into between the plaintiff and one Prideaux, the agent of the defendant, whereby the latter undertook to print and supply a newspaper of six pages of a specified size for £10 for 1,500 copies, £12 for 3,000 copies, and £15 for 5,000 copies, per issue, and the plaintiff, as owner of the said paper, undertook to pay on the first day of every month for the work done during the preceding month, including any extras during the month. The paper was published on the 3rd, 10th, 17th, and 24th of June, under the name of "South African Truth," and a further issue was printed, but never accepted or sold. There was during the short existence of the paper a considerable amount of correspondence between the parties, from which it might be at any stage have been surmised that their differences would end in a law-suit. Now, though there was considerable grumbling by the plaintiff at the way in which the paper was turned out, and at the delay or unpunctuality in its appearances (to which complaints the defendant retorted that they arose mainly, in so far as he admitted them, through the acts of the plaintiff himself). Yet it appears to me that the plaintiff did accept the newspapers as tendered to him weekly, and that he cannot now claim large damages by reason of the class of work which was turned out by the defendant. On the other hand, the defendant became alarmed when he found that he had entered into a contract with a man of no means, who, as experience proved, was not averse to incurring the risk of an action for libel by reason of defamatory matter published or attempted to be published in the newspaper. In case of such libel action the defendant rightly feared that the loss would fall upon himself, though the plaintiff had given his personal guarantee for £500 to meet anything of the kind, since such guarantee was in the circumstances worthless. The defendant for these reasons grew anxious to get out of the contract, and on the last day of June prepared his account for the work alleged by him to have been done under the contract, including the work for the issue of the paper of July 1, about which issue the parties were in dispute at the time. The account amounted to £96 5s. 5d., of which £15 was for the issue of July 1. This account, with letter of demand for its payment, the defendant caused to be delivered at plaintiff's office on July 1, and it appears that it reached plaintiff on Monday, July 3. On the evening of July 1, however, the defendant wrote a letter, putting an end to the contract, alleging as his reason the non-payment on that date of the amount due according to the amount sent in. The defendant gave an additional reason for putting an end to the contract, which was that the plaintiff had unlawfully assigned the paper to Mrs. Leeson, and he proceeded to give some irrelevant reasons for being not sorry that the contract was at an end. These reasons affect the past life of the plaintiff, and the reference to them was couched in such terms as to indicate that the plaintiff would get into trouble if he should endeavour to assert his rights in any action founded on the contract. I think that such portions of the defendant's letter were intended to frighten the plaintiff from seeking a legal remedy for the breach of contract, and that they were a somewhat unworthy or dangerous weapon to employ. They have failed to accomplish their purpose, and seem to prove that the defendant knew that on strictly legal grounds he was in the wrong. In my opinion, neither of the grounds given by the defendant justified him in putting an end to the contract. I see nothing in the assignment of the undertaking to Mrs. Leeson which is contrary to the terms or the spirit of the contract, and as to the non-payment of the amount demanded, even the defendant now admits that the account forwarded contained an overcharge, or at all events an item which was not due until August 1, and which has since been taken out of the account. Even if the proper amount had been demanded, and not promptly paid on the due date, I do not think that the defendant had the right immediately, and without any further steps or inquiry, to declare the contract at an end. Since I hold the view that the defendant acted arbitrarily and wrongly, there must be judgment in convention for the plaintiff, but a somewhat difficult question arises as to the measure of damages to be awarded to him. No evidence has been led to convince me either that the newspaper would have been a great financial success, or that the plaintiff would in the first six months of its existence (if, indeed, it would in any case have lasted so long), have drawn considerable profits from it. It is true that it had space for advertisements; but no profitable contracts to fill that space had been entered into, except to an extent which in the circumstances is negligible. At the same time I cannot but feel that the actual results of the first few issues of a new journal, before it has had time to become known as a medium for news and advertisements, would afford a fallacious test by which to be guided. The contract when broken had still five months to run, and in that time the fruits might have begun to be reaped; while there is evidence to show that at the cheap rate at which the defendant had contracted to produce the paper, there was small risk of loss to the plaintiff. On the whole, I am of opinion that the plaintiff should have more than nominal damages, and I think the sum of £60 should be awarded to him for the breach of the contract. With regard to the claim in reconvention, the defendant thereto sets up as defences the allegations which appear in paragraphs 5 and 6 of his declaration, and in the first paragraph of the plea in reconvention. As to the last-mentioned, it is wholly unsupported by credible evidence, and as to the matters originally set forth in the declaration, I am of opinion that after acceptance of the papers from week to week at such times as they were tendered and in such conditions as they came from the defendant's works, it is not open to the plaintiff to say in defence on the reconventional claim for the work and labour done under the contract that he is not liable therefor. As to the manner in which the contract was carried out the evidence is conflicting, and while the preponderance thereof tends to show that the work was not of the highest class, still I hold that the work, considering the whole nature and terms of the contract, was reasonably done. The highest class of work could not have been expected at the price agreed upon, and at the place where it was to be performed, and I am of opinion that the defendant, in reconvention, received as regards quality very much what he bargained for, and ought to have expected. But he also asserts that there was short delivery, and on this point I am inclined to think that the evidence for the plaintiff in reconvention is not very strong. Everything seems to have been done in a hurried and unbusinesslike way, and no exact tallies were kept of the numbers of papers actually delivered to the defendant in reconvention, or, if any were kept, they were not produced in evidence. Such as they were they were received and disposed of by him. As far as I can follow the evidence, the four issues delivered to defendant in reconvention or placed at his disposal were respectively about 3,000, 3,000, 4,000, and 3,000. Each of the first two issues had two extra pages. As I can find no evidence to satisfy me that there was a special contract as to the additional sheets, I must take a pro rata figure as representing the with leave given to the receiver, if so advised, to leave the property in the hands of the respondent, upon payment by the respondent to applicant of her half-share of the due valuation of the joint estate. No order as to maintenance.

SCHLAG V. BARRY.

This was an application brought by Christian John Schlag, of Montagu, calling upon George Joseph Barry, to show cause why he should not be declared to be disqualified from holding office as a Councillor, or as Mayor of the Municipality of Montagu, and to declare his election as such null and void.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the ground of the application was that the firm of Barry Bros., trading at Montagu and Cape Town, of which respondent was a member, had entered into contracts for the supply to the Council of forage, tools, water, plant, etc., the applicant annexing a list of items abstracted from the Municipal books of account, which showed that the Council had purchased from Barry Bros. goods to the amount of £118. The respondent's case was that his firm had not entered into any contracts with the Municipal Council for the supply of goods, and that he had not used his position either as Mayor or Councillor in order to influence business in favour of his firm. The secretary of the Council said that he had instructions from the Council to purchase goods in the village of Montagu at places where the best article was procurable at the lowest possible price, and that he had purchased goods from Barry Bros., but only in cases where they alone stocked the articles required or the prices they quoted were decidedly lower than the prices of any other people.

Applicant, in his replying affidavit, called attention to an entry in the minutes of the Council for the 10th January, 1904, from which it appeared that the Council had accepted a tender of Barry Bros. for the supply of cement.

Mr. Watermeyer was for the applicant; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J., said that he must have some information on the point as to when Mr. Barry was elected, and whether he had been re-elected since he was first elected in 1903. It was quite consistent with the application that Mr. Barry might have been re-elected after these contracts were entered into. Therefore, he should like to have information as to whether there had been any election—whether the respondent had been re-elected since the date of the contracts complained of, and at the same time an opportunity ought to be given to Mr. Barry to meet the statement made in the replying affidavit of applicant as to the tender for cement, because, whatever might be said upon the other facts, he (the learned Judge) had no doubt whatever, he might say, that if it were proved that during the term of office of Mr. Barry a tender was accepted from his firm for the supply of cement that would be such a contract as was contemplated by the section of the Act, and it would incapacitate him from continuing in office in the Municipal Council of the village, for which he had been elected. Therefore, if that tender were accepted during the period and that period had not yet expired, there would be no doubt whatever that Mr. Barry would be declared to be disqualified. The matter would stand over for further information on the point named.

MCCALLUM V. STEVENS.

This was an application by Alexander John McCallum, attorney, Cape Town, to make absolute a rule nisi restraining Charles Henry Stevens from parting with certain 45,000 shares in Sacco, Limited, and a sum of £150. Mr. Burton was for applicant; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for respondent.

Mr. Buchanan read an affidavit by Mr. James Smith Howard, of the firm of Gilchrist and Purcell, who said that his principals were the holders of the shares.

Mr. Burton read an affidavit by the trustee in the insolvent estate of Stevens, and added that he had also an affidavit by insolvent, who said that he was the owner of the shares.

Rule made absolute.

GREEFF V. AHMED. { 1906.
{ Mar. 6th.

This was an action brought by Henry G. Greeff, a farmer, to recover from Shaik Ahmed, of Wale-street, Cape Town, £51 15s., for 45 sheep sold and delivered. The defendant, in his plea, denied that he purchased the sheep, and that they were purchased by one Abdurahman.

Abdurahman, in his evidence for the defence, said he purchased the sheep, and that he would be responsible.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Lewis was for the defendant.

Maasdorp, J., said he believed that Abdurahman came forward to save the defendant in the case, and he gave judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, with costs, the plaintiff declared a necessary witness.

Water—Perennial stream—Boundary — Prescription — Aqua crumpens in mo—Servitude.

Plaintiff was the proprietor of a farm situate on the Ongars River. Defendant was the proprietor of a farm situate higher up the river. It had been held by a Circuit Court that at a certain upper part of its course the river was a public perennial stream, but it was shown that as far as the portion in dispute was concerned, the "river" consisted merely of certain pools fed by springs which originated on various private properties, the water of which the owners of such properties had used as their own beyond the term of prescription. There was no continuous flow in the river save after heavy rains, and then only for a few days.

Held, that the portion of the Ongars River in question was not a public perennial stream.

Held further, that the evidence did not disclose that the plaintiff had any servitude or prescriptive right in virtue of which he could claim any portion of the water of the river.

This was an action brought by Frans Willem Kock, of the farm Jan de Lange's Fonteijn, division of Richmond, against Johannes Frederick Theron, also of Richmond, for a declaration of rights.

Plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is Frans Willem Kock, a farmer, residing on the farm Jan de Lange's Fonteijn, in the division of Richmond; the defendant is Johannes Frederick Theron, residing in the village of Richmond.

2. The plaintiff is the registered owner of the said farm Jan de Lange's Fonteijn, and the defendant is the registered owner of the farms Bethel and Vernietwerk, being sub-divided portions of the farm Gegundefonteijn, in the said division.

3. Portions of defendant's aforesaid farms adjoin plaintiff's farm, and the Orange River, a perennial stream, flows through part and past the farms of plaintiff and defendant, the bed of the said river being the boundary between plaintiff's and defendant's properties for a considerable distance.

4. In the original diagram of the plaintiff's said farm, which was granted to one G. G. van Niekerk in the year 1846, the said river is shown as being the boundary between it and the portion of Gegundefonteijn, now known as Bethel, and there is a provision in the title deed of plaintiff's said farm, that a certain pool in the river shown on said diagram shall be used in common between plaintiff's said farm and Gegundefonteijn.

5. The said river consists, in ordinary times, of a number of pools supplied from water arising in the bed of the river, and the plaintiff and his predecessors in title have always enjoyed the use of the water flowing in the river from the sources aforesaid for the purpose of watering their stock and irrigating their lands.

6. And the plaintiff further says that as a riparian proprietor he is entitled to a reasonable share of the water in the said river for the purpose of irrigation and of the watering of the stock.

7. In or about the years 1893 and 1894 the defendant, by himself, his servants or agents, constructed a furrow upon his said farm Bethel, and by this means let out and diverted all the water in the said river on to his own lands at a point above the aforesaid common pool, and uses the same for his own purposes.

8. As a result of defendant's operations, there is no water flowing in the said river available for plaintiff, and the common pool is dry; plaintiff has been deprived of all water in the said river for watering his stock, and for the irrigation of his lands.

9. And the plaintiff further says that the defendant has diverted and used far more than the reasonable share of the water of the said river to which he is entitled.

10. By reason of the aforesaid wrongful and unlawful acts of the defendant, the plaintiff has been greatly injured in his property and has suffered loss in the sum of £100 sterling.

11. The plaintiff claims: (a) An order restraining defendant from diverting all the water of the said river on to his own lands, or from diverting more than a reasonable share in the water of the said river, or from diverting the water in the said river in such manner as to cause the said common pool to be dry. (b) Payment of the sum of £100 sterling, being damage sustained by the plaintiff by the wrongful and unlawful acts of diversion aforesaid. (c) Alternative relief. (d) Costs of suit.

Defendant's plea and claim in reconvention were: For a plea the defendant says:

1. He admits the allegations in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration, save that he says that the correct name of the farm referred to as Vernietwerk in the latter paragraph is Botha's Kraal.

2. He admits that portions of his farms adjoin plaintiff's farm, and that part of the course of the Ongers River passes through his (defendant's) property, and that, as to another part, it passes past plaintiff's and his (defendant's) farms, and (subject to what is stated in paragraph 10 hereafter) the bed of the said river is the boundary between their respective properties for a considerable distance, but he denies that the Ongers River is a perennial stream, in so far as that portion is concerned by which plaintiff and defendant are affected or as to any other portion.

3. He does not admit the allegations in paragraph 4, and puts the plaintiff to such proof thereof as he may be prepared to adduce at the trial.

4. He admits that in or about the year 1905 he constructed a furrow upon his farm Botha's Kraal, and led out of the Ongers River the waters flowing from two fountains, both on his (defendant's) farm Bethel, situate in the Ongers and Leeuwpoot Rivers respectively, but he says that the said waters were not portion of a perennial stream, and plaintiff possessed no rights therein, and what he (defendant) did was done lawfully, and as of right and in respect of water rising on his lands and not forming portion of a perennial stream.

5. He denies that he has acted wrongfully and unlawfully in anything which he has done, and that plaintiff has suffered damage in the sum of £100 or any part thereof by reason of any act for which he (defendant) is liable.

6. Save as herein admitted, the defendant denies the allegations in paragraphs 5 to 10 (both inclusive) of the declaration.

Wherefore he prays that the claim be dismissed, with costs.

And for a claim in reconvention, defendant (now plaintiff) says:

7. He craves leave to refer to the allegations in the preceding paragraphs.

8. He annexes hereto a diagram on which is approximately indicated inter alia the course of the Ongers River over his property, and its further course, in so far as it forms a boundary between the respective properties of the parties hereto.

9. He says that at the points S and L and X and Y the river possesses double river beds, the one being indicated by a red line and the other by a black line.

10. He says that the true river boundary between plaintiff's (now defendant's) and his properties is indicated by the black line running from the point C to L, thence by the red line to the point X, thence by the black line to the point Y, and thence by the red line to the point K, but plaintiff (now defendant) wrongfully and unlawfully claims that it runs along the red line from E to K, and has wrongfully and unlawfully erected a fence, which is indicated by the dotted black line, and has thereby deprived defendant (now plaintiff) of the triangular portions of land marked CLE and XZY respectively.

Wherefore defendant (now plaintiff) prays: (a) Declaration that in respect of the portions of the boundary in dispute the true boundary is that indicated by the black lines CL and XZY, and that the triangular portions of land indicated by the spaces CLE and XZY are the property of plaintiff. (b) Such further and other relief as may seem meet, together with (c) costs of suit.

Plaintiff's replication and plea to the claim in reconvention were: For a replication to defendant's plea the plaintiff says that, save in so far as the said plea admits any of the allegations in the declaration he denies all and singular the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in the said plea contained and joins issue thereupon and again prays for judgment with costs of suit. And for a plea to the claim in reconvention the plaintiff, now defendant in reconventions, says:

(1) He denies that the true river boundary between his property and that of plaintiff in reconvention is represented partly by the black and partly by the red lines on the plan annexed to the claim in reconvention, and says that it is represented approximately by the red lines on said plan.

(2) He admits that he has erected a fence along the river bank, but says that he does not claim the fence as his boundary, but the middle of the river, on the bank whereof the said fence runs.

(3) He denies that the triangular portions marked C L E and X Z Y are the property of plaintiff in reconvention.

(4) He does not admit that the pool marked as common on the diagram of plaintiff and defendant is upon the course of the river as marked in black lines on the said plan.

Save as above, he denies the allegations in the said claim. Wherefore he prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan), for plaintiff. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for defendant.

Petrus A. Maskew, Government Land Surveyor, Cape Town, said that in January last he surveyed the river in dispute and prepared the plan produced. There was a well-defined course, but no water in the river.

Mr. Schreiner cross-examined witness at considerable length in regard to the position of affairs on the ground.

The plaintiff was next called.

In cross-examination, witness said he claimed that the true boundary of his property was the fence which he had erected. The fence was within his property, but the boundary line, he maintained, was the bed of the river. He claimed that he was entitled to take his fence to the middle of the river. In the average year the river for six or seven months flowed down in a good stream to Petruisfontein. Richmond had a very erratic rainfall. The rain-gauge showed a fall of from 10 to 15 in. per annum. The water from the fountains ran for six or seven months a year in such a stream as to reach Mr. Booysen's farm at Petruisfontein; he referred to the period prior to the diversion. He claimed that the common pool that received the fountain water referred to in his declaration was in the river bed. He could not say where the pool was now, because it had been washed away. Witness had only about 20 years' knowledge of the farm.

In re-examination, witness was proceeding to say that he made an arrangement with Mr. Theron, but—Hopley, J. (interposing): I am sorry you did not come to an agreement with Theron instead of coming here, because this litigation is going to cost a good deal of money. I don't know which of you will have to pay.

Philip Jacobus Kock (brother of the plaintiff), formerly residing at Jan de Langefontein, and Johan G. du Plessis, farmer, Tarka district, a former resident and owner of the farm, having been called,

George Doran, a farmer, of Richmond, stated if the fountain water was not taken out of the river there would be a strong continuous flow.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Andries Jacobus Burger, a retired Richmond farmer, who had been farming in the district from 1854 to 1896, and Rudolph Phillipus, described the neighbourhood and the system of taking water from the river. The latter stated when he first knew the place there was no spring in existence like the one in question.

Further evidence having been called for the defence, Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Mr. Searle: The plaintiff claims that the Ongers River is a perennial stream, and that the defendant has interfered with his (plaintiff's) reasonable user of the same. In 1903 the defendant constructed a furrow, and the result was that the pool to which both parties had a right of user became dry. In this case there are two points to be considered: (1) As to the water; (2) as to the land. In January, 1846, grants were made of both farms within fourteen days of each other. In the oldest diagram the Ongers River is given as a boundary and that shows that our predecessor in title had a right to water. Then in a subsequent diagram a "pool in common" on the river is marked. In the transfer deed of Vernietwerk it was stated to be Government ground. In 1853 one Du Plessis became owner of Jan de Lange Fontein, and his diagram shows the river in the same position. Old Mr. Burger then came to live upon Gegundfontein. In the diagram of 1873 the river is represented by Mr. Meiring as falling within plaintiff's property, and so also in the diagrams of 1864 and 1865.

The diagrams show the river boundary and a common pool in the river. The diagram of 1865 was made when J. de L. Fontein was cut off from the remaining extent. As to the common pool nobody now knows where it was or when; but documents do not bear out the statement that it was 380 yards from the river. It has again been suggested that the pool may have been in the old bed of the River. Du Plessis' farm has been occupied by himself, and his predecessors in title have lived on the farm over 50 years. Du Plessis' three sons have lived on the farm over 20 years. The veld was very good in the neighbourhood of the river. If it was a dry farm how came these people with flocks and cattle to live on the farm for fifty years. From 1862 to 1873 there was no irrigation and no cultivation. Then Pretorius married the widow Burger, and did some cultivation, especially from 1874 to 1876. Pretorius was there in 1863, though he may not have been on Botha's Kraal, and not on Bethel. In 1863 Surveyor Meiring recognised that the river was the boundary, and Stretch's diagram agrees. Du Plessis farmed as a stock farmer till 1884. Kock and Theron then purchased the place. Theron watered his stock at the river for some seven years, apparently with Kock's permission.

My next point is: "Has this River a permanent source, a well-defined course, and is it capable of common use?" Those are the three points the Court will consider in determining whether it is a permanent stream. See Van Heerden v. Wege (1 Appeals, 180) and Juta's Water cases (427, 440, 441). That is the law on the subject. Defendant's own witnesses admit that this river is capable of common use, though it is occasionally dry. That is the evidence on both sides, and it would be most inconvenient to hold that this river is a permanent stream at Richmond and again at Enslin, but it is not permanent between those two places.

The water is taken some 1,450 yards from the Lange Fontein boundary, first in the river, then in a sluic, and then in a pipe, and that is a very important point. No one may take water for irrigation until the lower proprietors have had their user for ordinary purposes. Hack v. Van der Merwe (Buch. 1874—148), Retief v. Louw (Buch. 1874—165), Juta's Cases (432), Maasdorp's Colonial Law (Vol. 1, 114, 115).

Then again it cannot be argued that if the old course of the river was the boundary and the river has changed its course that an original riparian proprietor can be cut off from the river.

[Hopley, J.: Suppose the river had changed its course, say, 500 miles, would an original riparian proprietor still be a riparian proprietor?]

That is a different question, but see Beaufort W. Municipality v. Maddison (11 C.T.R. 582). There is very little authority on the point, but see Angell on Water Courses, par. 57 and the footnote there. Voet (41—1—18 to 20) refers rather to the rights of the Crown. Hunter's Roman Law (p. 129, 1st edition), citing Justinian. In an American case it was held that where a river had changed its course the land between the two courses had not changed its jurisdiction. The old diagrams all seem to show that the river has not changed its course. See Maskew's diagram and compare it with the diagrams of 1864, 1866, and 1873.

Libenberg said that the water was running in both channels. See Vermaak v. Palmer (Buch., 1876, 25), particularly the judgment of De Villiers, C.J., at p. 35. Here there has been user of the water for over 30 years, and I submit that it has not been proved that it ever changed its course.

Mr. Schreiner: The plaintiff alleges that we have diverted certain water which supplied a common pool, that he is entitled to use the water of the river for primary and secondary purposes and that we have obstructed him in the exercise of that right. As to the common pool, it is referred to in the titles of both parties. This pool was either in the river or outside of it. There is a pool which was used in common, but we do not say that the pool referred to was in the river. It would appear that there were two pools: one perhaps in the river and the other some distance away. We contend that there was a pool on the boundary between Lange Fontein and the neighbouring property. Possibly the so-called "pool" at the beacon may merely have been a fresh water vley. The pool may have been by the old loop but not by the new, which is over 200 or 300 yards from the stream. See Mouton v. Van der Merwe (Buch., 1876, 18 and 22). Also see 26 of Land Beacons Act. In subsequent cases it has been admitted that the Court must be guided by the position of beacons.

Then we know that this pool is 120 yards from the old loop and 263 from the new. These pools would be far from the beacon, but the beacon was far from the river. Taking the evidence it would seem that the pool about 25 yards from the river was the one referred to. If the pool was in the river, was it in the old loop or in the new. There is no question but that the old loop is of considerable antiquity. The probability is that the pool was in the old loop.

[Hopley, J.: We have nothing to guide us save probabilities.]

The evidence does not support the contention that this is a public perennial stream. We have a source and a defined channel, but there is no continuous flow. There is no flumen, but in parts there is a rius. From Hough v. Van der Merwe (Buch., 1874, 148) our law as to water is judge-made, but in no case has it been laid down that a river which does not flow throughout the greater part of the year is a public stream: see Vermaak v. Palmer (Buch., 1896, 25) and Jordaan v. Winkelman (Buch., 1879, 79) where it is shown that a negative servitude cannot be acquired by prescription. There must be proof that the river is a flumen publicum. Here the river runs only for a day or two after rain. In Van Heerden v. Wiese (1 Ap., 5) the river flowed for months after a day's rain. The decision of this Court tend to extend the meaning of the term "public perennial stream," but the line must be drawn somewhere. The water of the Ongars River is not capable of public use.

[Hopley, J.: If this is not a flumen publicum, Hough v. Van der Merwe does not apply.]

Here there is a small spring rising on my client's land, and the plaintiff attempts to contend that we must let the water run down to the lower farms. Even if this be held to be a public perennial stream do we make any unreasonable use of it? There is no rule that the lower proprietor is entitled to preference over the upper. The upper proprietor has a preferent right to the use of the water for primary purposes and nothing more if the stream be capable of common use. This stream is not capable of common use. As to the claim in reconvention, we do not press very much for the triangular piece of ground. As to the loop the evidence is very scanty, but it goes to show that the plaintiff annexed the ground between the old loop and the new. There is but little case law bearing on this case, but see Angell on Water-courses (Sec. 57) Grotius De Jure Belli ac Pacis (Bk. 2, Cap. 8, Secs. 8 to 17). Here alluvion is the only title by which they can come in. There are side lights on the question of alluvion in Voet (41, 1, 18), Burge (Vol. 3, p. 418), Instit. (2, 1, 20).

[Hopley, J.: These authorities are irrelevant as here there is no question of alluvion.]

If they have not a title by alluvion they have no title at all. Grotius (2, 9, 12, 13 and 18).

Mr. Searle (in reply): The differences between us and the other side are two. In Vermaak v. Palmer, Jordaan v. Winkelman, and De Wet v. Hiscock (1 E.D.C. 249) there was no question of prescription, but of natural right. In Southey v. Schoombie (1 E.D.C. 288, 289) the river in question was very similar to the Ongars River. Here, as in Southey's case, the upper proprietor claims to divert all the water. Then again, I can find no authority for saying that a perennial stream must flow during the greater part of the year. Then as to common user, it is said that if the upper proprietor uses water for irrigation there would be none left for the lower proprietors. That is the very position overruled in Relief v. Low (Buch., 1874, 181) and Ap., 1856) which was approved in Hough v. Van der Merwe.

N

[Hopley, J.: The Courts have never had to deal with a public stream which was just capable of supporting animal life and no more.]

But such a case is quit possible. In Van Heerden v. Wiese (1 Ap., 5) this river was treated as a permanent stream at Richmond. In some years the river is quite dry, and yet the Court held it to be a perennial stream. The water in the Ongers River is capable of common use because it has actually been used by a number of stock farmers on its banks.

Hopley, J.: The first point to be decided is the nature of the Ongers River at the locality in question in this case. I was naturally predisposed to hold that this was a perennial stream, seeing that it had been decided in the case of Van Heerden v. Wege (1 Ap. 180) that the same river is a perennial stream some thirty miles below the point with which we are at present concerned. On considering the report of that case it is apparent that the finding of the Circuit Court Judge and the subsequent judgment of the Court of Appeal largely depended on the fact that the Circuit Judge had believed evidence to the effect that at that portion of the River a day's rain would cause the river to flow continuously for two months. In considering the merits of the present case, I am not bound by that finding, nor by the decision in that case, and as far as the present case is concerned the evidence certainly is not to the same effect; since the utmost that has been deposed is that a fairly good rain will cause the river to flow for three or four days, and an exceptionally heavy rain for some time longer. Now this river has (so it is said) its source on Toon Bothasfontein, and the evidence shows that on that farm there is a fountain arising in the bed of the watercourse, the water from which fountain the owners of the farm have always used and entirely diverted for their own purposes upon their own farm; so that none of it goes down the river, or reaches the next farm. I do not think that such a water can properly be called the source of a river. It seems to me rather of the nature of a private water, arising, it may be in a watercourse, but used and treated entirely as a private water. The only water that runs along this water-course from Toon Bothasfontein to the properties lower down is that which finds its way into it from the area which it drains when there is rain. The next farm in the course of the river is Driefontein, on which is situated the town of Richmond, and which is the Commongage of that town. On that farm and in the watercourse in question a strong fountain breaks out. That is the main source of the Richmond water supply. Its water is taken, carefully conserved, and every drop of it used for the water supply of the town, so that none reaches the next farm along the course. Other fountains lower down, and before we come to the water in dispute, arise in the river-bed, and on each farm they are treated in precisely the same way as the two I have mentioned; the farms on which they arise taking the exclusive use of their waters, and allowing none to go down to their next neighbours. Confining ourselves to original grants and neglecting modern sub-divisions; the fourth farm which this river reaches is the farm Gegundefontein which has been sub-divided into four portions two of which are named "Bethel" and "Botha's Kraal," both the property of the defendant. The boundary of Botha's Kraal on its eastern side is the river in question, which there divides it from the farm Jan de Langesfontein, the property of the plaintiff. Before it reaches this boundary the Ongars river flows over Bethel, on which farm it is joined by a small river called the Leeuw poort River. In this latter river, a little way from the junction is a weak spring, and in the Ongars River, also before the junction, there is a fairly strong fountain. These springs are both on "Bethel," which, as I have said, belongs to the defendant, and they have both become stronger and slightly changed their positions in comparatively recent years owing to the washing away of soil by floods, such processes disclosing more of the underground water and deepening the course by which it can escape. The united water of these two fountains the defendant has diverted below the junction of the two watercourses and has taken to his land at Botha's Kraal, where all the water (about sufficient in ordinary times to fill a three-inch pipe) is used. It is practically upon the flow of these two fountain that I am asked to declare the Ongars River a perennial stream at this point, for any other flow of water there is due to rain, and the average rainfall in the district is said to be about 15 inches. Such rainfall is distributed throughout the year, and the water in these watercourse after a rain flows only for a few days, unless the rain be of an exceptionally large and universal nature. I cannot in such circumstances hold that the River in that locality is a perennial stream, and I think it would be an absurd abuse of language so to describe it. I think that these fountains are private waters rising on the defendant's ground, and that he has used them as he lawfully might, and as all those living higher up the river use their waters, which arise in the bed of this river.

The next point is whether over these private waters the plaintiff is entitled to any servitude. The only trace of any such right is to be found in the terms of the deeds of grant which for both farms J. d. Langersfontein and Geguldfontein were made in January, 1846. In those deeds it is a condition that a certain pool, described as being at the southern beacon on the boundary between the two properties should be in common to the two farms. Now there is no beacon actually on the bank of the river, although I think that possibly the surveyor who surveyed J. d. Langersfontein in 1830 may have intended that it should be erected there; but it stands some distance from the river. It must, however, on the evidence, be taken to be the original beacon; and no evidence has been adduced that there ever was any pool in the river at or near the point. It was urged for the plaintiff that the pool must have been in the river; but on referring to the original diagram of 1830 I cannot find that any pool is shown in the river, or that any locality is exactly assigned for its position.

There is evidence of the existence at one time of a small vlei between the beacon and the river; but that has disappeared as a sluic from it to the river has been formed, and the water is no longer retained. It may be that it was the "common pool," but, if so, it has disappeared; and if the pool in 1830 was in the river that likewise has disappeared through the river bed having been washed out, so that no water lies collected at that place. In any case there is no evidence on which I can find that at present any servitude over the waters of these fountains exists.

I come lastly to the consideration of the question whether there has been such use of the water as to give the plaintiff's farm a right by prescription to a share of it. The rights of the parties must be taken to date from 1846, when their original grants were made. The neighbouring owners were for more than half a century on the most friendly terms, there were no fences and practically no boundaries, the cattle of each farm grazing unmolested beyond the boundaries of their owner and finding water at any portion of the river where it might be conveniently obtained. In 1862 and again in 1874, 1875 and 1876 the defendant's predecessors in title turned out the water of these fountains, much in the same way as the defendant is now doing, for the purposes of agriculture, without any protest from the predecessors of the plaintiff. It is true that no inconvenience to the latter arose as their stock were free to get water at the point of diversion or anywhere they could find it; but at the same time there was such an assertion of a right to use this as a private water, which right was put into practice at such a time as to exclude the possibility of the acquisition of prescriptive rights by the plaintiff and his predecessors. I hold therefore that the plaintiff has established no rights to any portion of this water, and that his claim in convention must fail.

With regard to the claim in reconvention I was disposed to the view that the present flow of the river at the point in dispute should be held to be the boundary, unless it should be proved satisfactorily that at the date of the grant the course was different. The original diagrams and grants clearly show that, whatever may have been the exact spot at which the beacon between the two farms was intended to be placed, the river was the actual boundary fixed upon. That in my view means the river as it then ran and not as it afterwards might run. Close to the boundary beacon is the piece of land in dispute, lying between the present course of the river and a considerable sluice to the east of it which has been spoken of throughout this case as the "Onde loop," or ancient course of the river. That is now silted up at its mouth and has been dammed up near its exit by the plaintiff, who has thus caught a considerable quantity of water at that point; but he has placed his fence right up to the bank of the present, or western course of the river. The piece of land between these two courses is about four morgen. I have come to the conclusion on a careful examination of the diagrams and on the evidence especially of Mr. Burger, senr., and of Mrs. Liebenberg, that the Eastern arm on the "Onde Loop" was the course of the river in 1846 and was what was intended to be the boundary.

Another small piece of ground near Patryfontein has also been similarly enclosed by the plaintiff, but no evidence has been adduced to show that the present course of the river up to which he has fenced was not the original course. As to that portion therefore his fence has been rightly placed; but as to the fence at the beacon it has enclosed land belonging to the defendant, who is plaintiff in reconvention, and his claim to this land must be allowed. By consent, however, of his legal representatives it is agreed that in setting back his fence to the "Onde Loop" he may place it along the western bank of the "Onde Loop" so as to have exclusive use of the water which he has dammed in that place.

Judgment in reconvention must therefore be for the plaintiff as to his main claim with the modification now consented to.

The plaintiff must pay the costs in convention and as defendant in re-convention he must pay the costs of the claim in reconvention.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and a Jury.]

LIQUIDATORS OF ROYAL { 1906.
HOTEL CO. V. RUTHERFORD. { Mar. 7th.

Builder—Retention—Insolvency.

In an action by the trustees of an insolvent to eject the defendant from a portion of certain buildings which he had built by contract for the insolvent, it was proved that he still had the keys of the rooms in his occupation, and that the amount still owing to him for the building of those rooms was £2,000.

Held in a charge to the jury, that the defendant was entitled to retention of the rooms until that sum was paid.

This was an action brought by the liquidators of the Royal Hotel Company, Limited, against Charles Thomas Rutherford, builder, for an order of ejectment from certain portion of the company's property in Plain-street, Cape Town.

Plaintiffs, in their declaration, said that in 1903 a contract was entered into between the company and the defendant whereby the latter undertook to erect certain buildings and works at the Royal Hotel. Defendant proceeded to carry out the works and supply materials in connection therewith in terms of the contract, and received certain payments from time to time in respect of work done upon the architect's certificates, but none of such payments were ever appropriated to any particular portion of the said works. The works were completed on the 12th December, 1904, and on the 10th January, 1905, there was still unpaid by the company £3,324. Certain arrangements were made between the defendant and the company, and that a payment was made of £2,000 on the 27th January, 1905, to the defendant, who thereupon gave the company possession of the bedrooms, servants' quarters, and kitchen, and also of the Arcade. The hotel was formally reopened in January, 1905, and the company had since then had possession of the said premises, with the exception of the shops in the Arcade, of which defendant had retained possession. In September, 1905, the company went into liquidation. The plaintiffs desired to dispose of the premises, and for that purpose wished to obtain possession of the premises. The plaintiffs had tendered and again tendered against delivery of the said shops the sum of £750, with interest at 6 per cent. from the completion of the said contract, which they said more than represented any sum to which defendant might be entitled by virtue of any legal preference or lien that he may have. Plaintiffs prayed for an order of ejectment against defendant.

Defendant, in his plea, denied that he agreed to give up possession of the Arcade or the shops, that he gave the company possession of the Arcade, or that they ever had possession thereof. He said that there was a sum of £2,036 due to him in respect of work done and materials supplied in connection with the erection of the Arcade and shops, and that he was entitled to retain possession until payment of the said sum.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) was for plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), was for defendant.

Mr. Burton said that the defendant apparently accepted the basis that he had only retained possession of what he was in possession of as against work done and materials supplied in respect of that particular portion of the building, so that it seemed that there could only be two substantial issues. One was whether defendant ever gave plaintiffs possession of the Arcade, which defendant denied, or what would be the value of the Arcade and shops, or the shops alone.

George Charles Starkey, secretary to the liquidators of the company, and formerly secretary of the company, said that the company was formed in 1902, and the final order of liquidation was granted in September, 1905. The total amount of the defendant's contract in the first instance was £20,532, but afterwards certain extras were agreed upon which brought the amount to £22,786 6s. 4d. The balance remaining unpaid on the whole contract was £2,736 6s. 4d., exclusive of interest, which to date would be £193 12s. 6d. On the 10th January, 1905, the amount unpaid on the architects' certificates was £3,324. On the 27th January, 1905, £2,000 was paid to defendant, leaving £1,324 still due, to which had to be added the final certificate of the architects, viz., £1,412 6s. 4d. The Arcade running through from Plein-street to Zieke-street, could be closed at each street by telescopic gates. In the early portion of January, 1905, the keys were in the possession of the defendant, but about the middle of January the keys were handed over to Mr. McCarthy, who was then resident director of the company. Mr. McCarthy was not now in the Colony. Defendant himself told witness that he had given the keys to Mr. McCarthy. From that date onwards the Arcade gates at both ends were daily opened and shut by the servants of the company. There was a formal re-opening of the hotel on the 13th January, 1905. Witness had seen the public making use of the Arcade as a public thoroughfare. There were 11 shops in the Arcade. Defendant had kept the keys of the shops. This state of affairs continued right up to the liquidation, and to the present time. Since the liquidation repairs had been executed by the liquidators on the roof of the Arcade, owing to damage done by wind about six or eight weeks ago. The defendant commenced an action against the company some time ago, but did not proceed with it.

Cross-examined: Witness believed that the summons was issued before the liquidation. The company owed defendant £2,734. The liquidators had disposed of the property, including the shops. Witness did not know whether the final certificate of £1,400 given by the architect included £1,000 retention money.

Further evidence was given on behalf of the plaintiffs by John Frederick Glogg, manager of the hotel; Charles Dance, night porter; Arthur Thos. Babbs, quantity surveyor; Francis Ed. Masey, architect; and Wm. Hawke, architect.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Charles Thomas Rutherford (defendant) said that under the contract the company were entitled to retain 20 per cent. until they had £2,000 in hand. Then witness was to be paid in full. In May they had £2,000 in hand. In September the hotel premises were practically finished, with the exception of small patching-up work. There was nothing finished at that time in the Arcade. Practically, the whole of the work in the Arcade was done after September. The stanchions, with the brickwork round them, formed part and parcel of the party walls inside the shops. Witness declined to give up any part of the place until he was paid his money, though he gave the company possession of the kitchen and back part of the premises. Witness retained control over the Arcade, and the building. In January, 1906, the company paid him £2,000—£1,000 retention money and £1,000 which he took as part of the other money. He had never agreed with the directors to give up the Arcade. The first proposal made to him by the directors was that he should retain a lien on the Arcade for the balance of the account. He subsequently told Mr. Starkey that he could not enter into such a thing, as his attorney advised him that it was impracticable. Witness gave the company the keys of the lounge, bar, and lavatories. He told Mr. Starkey when he received the £1,000 that he was giving nothing away. He had two keys for the telescopic gates of the Arcade, but afterwards he received a letter from Mr. McCarthy requesting him to let him have the Plain-street key. Witness gave up no rights, but he handed the key to Mr. McCarthy as a personal favour. He subsequently discovered that the key opened both the Plain-street and Ziekie-street gates. Of the retention money of £1,000 paid to him, he attributed a proportion to the work done on the Arcade. He took the proportion to be in the ratio of £9,000 to £22,000.

Evidence was also given by Joseph Dunn, of Dunn and Co., builders and merchants; Thomas Davy, plasterer; Charles Armstrong Gibbs, formerly of the Asphalte Company; Johan Jansen, one of the directors of the defunct company; Thomas Hitchin, quantity surveyor; and Maurice Cowan, architect.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J., said that whatever doubts there might be upon the different points raised in this case, there was no doubt upon one point, that there was still due to Mr. Rutherford, as the contractor for the rebuilding of the Royal Hotel, the sum of £2,736 6s. 4d. Unfortunately, however, the company, who were the owners of the hotel, had become insolvent, and now it became a question in competition with creditors of this company whether Mr. Rutherford was to receive the payment tendered by the plaintiffs or whether he was to receive the payment which he himself claimed by his plea. The plaintiffs tendered £750, and said that was all that was owing. Defendant said that he was quite willing to deliver the shops, the part of the building that he had possession of, upon payment to him of the sum of £2,036, not the full sum. So that, even if judgment were given for the defendant, he would still be a loser to the extent of £700, unless, as a concurrent creditor, he could obtain that amount from the estate. The claim of the defendant was that he was entitled to retain this property or so much of it as he was in possession of, until the money in respect of the portion occupied by him was paid. It became a matter of great importance to the jury to decide what was the property actually in possession of the defendant. Defendant said that he had the shops as well as the Arcade, while plaintiffs said that he had the shops only, and not the Arcade. Plaintiffs relied upon the fact that defendant had handed over the key of the Arcade to the manager of the hotel, and under all the circumstances he (the learned Judge) would have great difficulty in holding that after the defendant had lost control of the Arcade, he could still be said to have actual possession. As to the shops, it was common cause that these shops were still in the possession of the defendant. Then the further question arose as to what constituted the shops. Plaintiffs' counsel seriously contended that the girders and stanchions which were fitted into the walls of the shops were really not part of the shops. Well, he (the learned Judge) thought that the contention was wholly untenable. He considered that the value of the shops, of which defendant had possession, was £7,972.

The jury found: (1) That the contractor had no lien on the Arcade; (2) that the contractor had a lien on the shops; (3) that the value of the shops was £7,972; (4) that £1,000 of the £2,000 paid to the contractor by the company in January, 1905, was retention money; and (5) that the amount claimed by the contractor is due, viz., £2,036.

Judgment was entered for an order of ejectment against defendant upon payment to him by plaintiffs of £2,036, plaintiffs to pay costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

Ex parte MOZES. { 1906.
Mar. 8th.

Dr. Greer again mentioned this matter, which was an application for an order requiring the A.R.M. of Cape Town to issue a special marriage licence to the petitioner, Abm. Mozes. Counsel said that the matter was originally mentioned before the Chief Justice on Monday last, and had been allowed to stand over for production of the Magistrate's reasons for refusing the licence and to enable him (counsel) to look into the Belgian law as to divorce. He understood that the Magistrate's reasons had now been filed.

Maasdorp, J., said that as the application was originally mentioned before the Chief Justice, it had better stand over until his lordship was sitting, so long as there appeared to be no urgency.

LEVY V. INSOLVENT ESTATE { 1906.
EPSTEIN. Mar. 8th.
" 9th.

This was an action brought by Sophie Levy (born Epstein), of Kimberley, and formerly of Worcester, against the trustee in the insolvent estate of Dora Epstein (plaintiff's mother), for restoration of certain property, alleged to have been wrongfully seized, and also for damages.

Plaintiff, in her declaration, said that she was married out of community of property to one Percy Levy, and was by him assisted as far as needs be in this action. Defendant was the duly elected trustee in the insolvent estate of Dora Epstein. In April, 1905, he wrongfully and unlawfully seized and removed certain four cattle, wearing apparel, and household effects, property of the plaintiff. Portion of the goods had been returned, but defendant wrongfully and unlawfully detained the cattle and certain other goods of the value of £300, and, although requested to do so, refused, and still neglected to deliver the said cattle and goods to the plaintiff. In May, 1905, plaintiff obtained a rule nisi restraining defendant from selling the said four cows as assets in the insolvent estate of Epstein. By reason of the defendant's wrongful and unlawful acts, plaintiff had suffered damages in the sum of £100. Plaintiff prayed for the rule nisi be made absolute, an order compelling defendant to deliver the said cattle and other goods forthwith, or, in the alternative, payment of £300 for the cattle and goods, and £100 damages.

Defendant, in his plea, said he did not admit that any of the said wearing apparel, and household effects, retained by him were the property of the plaintiff, and he put the plaintiff to proof thereof. Plaintiff had not furnished to him any proof of ownership. He denied having removed the cows, which, at the time of the voluntary surrender, and at all times material to the suit, were in the possession of one S. Smeaton, who claimed to have a right of pledge over same. He prayed that the claim might be dismissed.

Plaintiff, in her replication, said that the cows were wrongfully and unlawfully removed from the possession of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, by the duly-authorised agent of the said Smeaton. She denied that the said Smeaton had a right of pledge over the cows.

Mr. Alexander was for the plaintiff; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. De Villiers) was for defendant.

Sophie Levy (the plaintiff) said that she was the wife of Percy Levy, and resided with him at Kimberley. About five years ago she was engaged to one Davis, in Liverpool. She came out to this country with her four sisters in March, 1904. She brought out all the things that appeared on the list, except a glass case, a blanket, quilt, rug, pictures, two bedroom carpets, two chairs, and a sewing machine. She had prepared the list from memory in Kimberley. The reason why she brought so many things was that they had been preparing a home in England. At that time, Davis was in Liverpool, and witness was in Manchester. When witness arrived in Cape Town she was met by Davis, who had come out to this country about nine months previously. Davis handed to her £80, and she had in her possession £35, which she had saved from her work. Witness had earned her own living since she was 12 years of age. From Cape Town witness went to Worcester, and stayed with her mother. She took the goods up to Worcester. Witness had a quarrel with one of her sisters, and she took a room with another lady, residing at 17, Tulbagh-street, Worcester, about two months before her mother surrendered her estate. She took away all the things comprised in the present claim. Somebody broke into the room afterwards, and removed the things. Witness was not there at the time.

Mr. Alexander: They were taken under a search warrant.

Witness (in further evidence) said that among the goods taken by the trustee were articles belonging to Mr. Levy, including a Jewish Bible. The trustee had returned some goods both to Mr. Levy and witness. She was married to Mr. Levy in June last. Her mother had carried on business in Worcester, and witness had handed over to her, first, £35, and £20 afterwards. Witness went on to describe her transactions with Mrs. Johnson, who had handed to her the four cows in security for £66, money lent. Dr. Smeaton, who had the cattle, was the landlord of the premises where witness had a room, and also of the premises where her mother carried on business. She suspected that Smeaton was not acting fairly, and she then sent Johnson to take away the cattle. Witness had not pledged the cattle to Smeaton; he had not lent money to her, but he advanced loans to her mother. Witness's attention was afterwards called to an advertisement in the "Worcester Standard" of a sale of the cattle, and she instructed her attorney to stop the sale.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness left England by the Durham Castle on the 19th March, 1904, and two days after her arrival in Cape Town she went to Worcester. The receipt given by Mrs. Johnson for the loans from her had not been altered from "Mrs. Dora Epstein" to "Miss Sophie Epstein." The pen that witness was using was bad, and she went over the paper twice. All the receipts were in her handwriting. She denied that any of the documents had been altered from her mother's name to her own.

Mr. Upington put in a number of the receipts, and asked his lordship to judge of whether they had not been tampered with.

Witness emphatically denied that any of the receipts had been altered. One of the receipts which Mrs. Johnson had signed with a mark witness said was in Mrs. Johnson's handwriting. Her mother had borrowed £20 from Smeaton, and had signed an IOU. Her mother only signed one document at that time. Witness did not see a pledge. The insolvency was rushed on her mother.

Mr. Upington: You were not bringing out a stock for a drapery business? What you brought out was a sort of wedding trousseau?

Witness: There was some drapery bought on the Parade. I did not buy it; Mr. Levy bought it.

What were you going to do with this huge collection of stuff?—I wanted to have a home.

You could have a fairly "happy home" without 27 pairs of sugar-tongs?—Well, that was bought on the Parade. Mr. Lewy bought it in job lots.

Your comfort would not be materially diminished if you did not have 133 pillow-cases?—Well, I could have as many as I liked, couldn't I?

Certainly, but you bought this for the "happy home." Were you going in for entertaining, on anything like a large scale when you got to Kimberley?—I am not supposed to say what I am going to do.

There are 76 tablespoons?—I can have as many as I like.

As a matter of fact, we have had this stuff brought down here for identification. There is about half a ton weight of goods—drapery, crockery, tin-openers, and chocolates?—I suppose there was only a box or two of chocolates; nothing whatever belonging to my mother.

Where did you get the chocolates?—I was given presents of them.

Where?—I did not steal anything.

They were large boxes?—Yes, I was given presents of them.

At Worcester?—Yes, at Christmas time.

In further cross-examination, witness said that they received a draft for about £39 before they left England. This was to pay for the passage of witness (who was then 21 years of age) and the other members of the family. She believed the draft was sent by her mother. Witness also received £20 from Davis, who was at that time in Bloemfontein.

Further evidence was given on behalf of plaintiff by Mrs. Greenfield, of De Korte-street, Cape Town; Mrs. Francis Johnson, of Worcester; John Johnson, farm labourer (husband of the previous witness); Mrs. Lena Love (sister of the plaintiff), a housemaid employed at Rondebosch; Clara Taylor, of Cape Town, formerly of Worcester; Sarah Epstein, of Cape Town (another sister of the plaintiff).

Mr. Alexander closed his case.

Daniel Bland (trustee in the insolvent estate and defendant in the present case) said that the schedules of the insolvent showed the following: Assets, £76; outstanding debts, £66; liabilities, £160; deficiency, £18 2s. 6d. As a matter of fact, at the second meeting debts were proved amounting to £175. It was impossible to trace the proceedings of the insolvent through her books. In consequence of certain information he received from Mrs. Leigh (the landlady of the room where plaintiff had the goods stored), witness had a search warrant taken out. He applied for the key, but it was refused. The door of the room was forced, and certain things were found. He got a key from Mr. Townson, and closed the room for the night. Next day witness had the goods removed to the police station. He had made careful inquiries as to the goods since the claim was made, and he had made a demand for proof of ownership. In reply, he received a letter from Mr. Hirschberg (plaintiff's attorney), saying that he was prepared to produce proof of ownership. Witness sent back certain apparel, and a violin. Witness had never had possession of the cows. Smeaton had the cows. He arranged with Smeaton to bring the cows to the sale. Smeaton filed a preferent claim against the estate, and claimed that he was entitled to the cows under a pledge. Witness had not deprived plaintiff of possession of the cows, but he disputed the ownership claimed by plaintiff.

[Maasdorp, J.: Do you claim the cows for the insolvent estate?]

Mr. Upington: Smeaton claims the cows under a right of pledge in security for a debt.

Witness (in further evidence) said that Smeaton wanted the cows to be realised to pay out his claim. Witness thought that the proceeds would be more than sufficient to pay Smeaton's claim, hence he arranged for the sale. Plaintiff had not produced any proof of ownership of the goods, which witness had retained.

Cross-examined: The cows had been sold by Mr. Smeaton since the interdict was obtained. Witness had not moved to set the rule aside. Mr. Smeaton had withdrawn the preferent claim of £20, which he had proved in the estate.

Mr. Alexander: As a fact, the rule of Court has been absolutely evaded?

Witness: Not by me.

Cross-examination continued: Witness had not tried to obtain an account as to the sale of the cows by Mr. Smeaton. He did not know whether there was any balance after Mr. Smeaton's claim had been satisfied and the expenses paid.

Daniel Cornelis Boonzaier was called to give evidence as a handwriting expert in regard to the receipts put in by plaintiff. He said that he was formerly in the Master's Office, and it was at that time his duty to scrutinise handwriting. The receipt signed by Francina Johnson had been altered from March to May; the date on the stamp had been altered. He was almost sure the word "Mis" had been altered. The date on another receipt had also been altered. The name had also been altered, it was now "Miss Epstein," but originally he should say it was "Mrs. Epstein." In a receipt dated the 17th August, 1904, he thought that there had been a subsequent addition of the letter "s" to the word "Mis." In another receipt it was evident that the name of the person to whom the receipt was made out had been altered. It might originally have been "Mis" or "Mrs.," but it was now "Miss." In other receipts it was apparent that alterations had been made. In several cases it was difficult to say whether originally the receipt had been made out to "Mis Epstein" or "Mrs. Epstein." It was apparent that an "s" had been added, and the letter "i" in each case was more heavily dotted than the other vowels in the rest of the documents. In one receipt the name "Miss Sophie Epstein" had been written over another name, which, in view of the information he had been given, was, he believed, originally "Mrs. Dora Epstein."

Cross-examined: Witness was told the theory of the defence that the receipts had been altered from the insolvent's name to the daughter's name before he examined the documents. The alterations were very glaring. In one of the receipts the name was clearly written "Mis Epstein"; no attempt had been made to add another "s" to "Mis," although there was plenty of room in the line.

Daniel Bland (the defendant) was then recalled.

In cross-examination, witness said that the amount of debts proved against the estate Epstein was about £179. The value of the stock taken over from Davies was about £140. That was the value of the stock list, according to Mrs. Epstein's books. Witness could not give the stock that he took over as trustee. The stock at the sales realised £41 6s. 10d. There were a few other articles that he had kept back, which he should consider to be of the value of 25s. He did not think that the goods which he had retained, and which formed the subject of the present action, would realise above £75. He did not include the cattle in the estimate. They were principally people from the location that dealt at the insolvent's shop. Mrs. Johnson called upon him after he had advertised the cattle for sale by auction, and she implored witness not to sell the cattle, saying that they were her bona fide property. She had a document, from which it appeared that she had borrowed £50 on the cattle. The document did not show that the cattle were her property. The rule nisi was served on witness on the 12th May. He gave Mr. Smeaton notice that he was interdicted from selling the cows, and that he should not bring them to the place of sale on the following day. Smeaton sold the cows after the morning market in July. Witness still had his recourse as trustee against Smeaton. Smeaton had given notice to withdraw his claim against the estate on account of money lent.

Evidence was also given by Attorney Theron, Worcester; F. Lindenberg, Deputy-Sheriff, Worcester; S. Ley, boarding-house keeper; the Messenger of the Resident Magistrate's Court; Daniel Joseph, painter, Worcester; Henry Deenik, confectionery manufacturer, Woodstock; Alexander Turnbull Law, traveller for Alford, Wills and Abbott; James Wm. Bam, traveller for Van der Byl and Co.; Henry George Fisher, general dealer, Worcester; and Samuel Smeaton, a retired railway servant, Worcester. The last named said that he did not know the cattle had been interdicted when he sold them.

Several of the witnesses were called to speak to goods which they had supplied to Mrs. Epstein or had seen on her premises.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: The Court has to decide whether the goods in dispute belonged, at the time of the insolvency of Mrs. Dora Epstein to the insolvent, or to her daughter (the plaintiff). Firstly, with regard to the cattle, it would appear that there had been certain transactions between Johnson and Mrs. Epstein in respect of the cattle. Whether, in the first instance, she was directly interested or her daughter, it would be difficult to decide; but the transaction ultimately came to this, that the parties considered it necessary to go to Mr. Theron to have it reduced to writing, and the matter there reduced to writing was comprised in a receipt, dated the 12th January, for a sum of £66, in settlement of the purchase price of the cattle. Now, it is quite clear, in the face of this document, that it amounts to nothing else than this—supposing it to be genuine—that Johnson had sold to Mrs. Epstein the cattle, together with other things, and the payment was made in full settlement of the purchase-price. Mr. Theron says that he drew up the document on instructions from both parties, and both were present at the time. Then the cattle at that time vested in Mrs. Epstein. I will consider afterwards whether the genuineness of this document has been destroyed by further evidence. Some days afterwards Mrs. Epstein obtained a loan from Mr. Smeaton, and he consults Mr. Fisher in respect to it. The loan is arranged for, and an I.O.U. is received from Dora Epstein, and we have the evidence of Fisher that within a very few days a pledge was given in security of that loan, and he says that the pledge was in writing, and consisted of these very cattle, which, according to the receipt, were sold by Johnson to Mrs. Epstein. That was the position in which affairs stood, if we are to believe Mr. Fisher, in March. Both these documents are put in evidence. In March these documents were again seen by Mr. Fisher, the pledge being still in its original state, but he said that shortly afterwards it was altered. So, up to March, the genuine documents—because I believe Mr. Theron and Mr. Fisher—the genuine documents, untampered with, proved property in Mrs. Dora Epstein. Notwithstanding that the property is now claimed by the plaintiff, and she says that she can also produce genuine documents to show that the property was hers. She says that they consisted of receipts received from Mrs. Johnson, in which she acknowledges sums of money advanced by her to Mrs. Johnson, and that was the £66 which was afterwards represented to have come from Mrs. Epstein. I wish to say at this stage that it may be said that what passed between Dora Epstein and Johnson and Theron should not be taken as evidence against the plaintiff. But I accept the evidence of Smeaton, in so far that the plaintiff was the very person who handed him this pledge, upon which it appeared that the property belonged to her mother. She now puts in a certain number of documents to prove receipt of moneys advanced by her to Johnson, and I will say at once that, without going into detail, I have no doubt in my own mind that every one of these documents has been tampered with, and that alterations have been made in them with respect to the plaintiff's name upon the documents. I base my decision on my own observations, though I admit I was largely assisted by the expert evidence in this case of Mr. Boonzaier. It is very often dangerous to rest one's judgment simply upon the opinion of an expert, but the expert has made the reasons for his opinion so clear and has drawn the attention of the Court to certain features in these documents, which prove beyond doubt that they are not the documents in their original state. Now, it is said that in finding that, one throws a doubt upon the evidence of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, and that they are wholly uninterested in this case. Whether they are interested or not, it is impossible for me to say, but I do find that they have made statements which are inconsistent with the statements of witnesses, whose evidence I accept. With reference to the other goods, the position seems to be this, that Miss Epstein, as she was at that time, was living with her mother. She had just arrived from Europe, and she had brought with her certain property which may have been necessary for her own use. At the time of the insolvency all the goods now in dispute were on the premises of the insolvent, and were distributed about the house in the same way as her own property would have been. There were also goods which were in the shop. When Mrs. Epstein got into difficulties the plaintiff set about removing a portion of the goods, and it is now found that the goods which she removed were of considerably more value than the goods she left. Now, what does the evidence amount to? That she clandestinely and under suspicious circumstances, accompanied by falsehood, removed property from her mother's premises that would ordinarily be regarded as her mother's property. I do not believe that the property had been collected as plaintiff says it was for the future home of herself and her intended. We have further evidence from which I am satisfied that the property that was removed was not the property of the plaintiff. I am dissatisfied with the evidence of Sophie Levy, because if her story had been true it would have been corroborated by the evidence of the insolvent, and because of the character of the evidence given by the plaintiff upon the other branch of the case. I have come to the conclusion, therefore, that the plaintiff has wholly failed to prove that these articles belonged to her, and from the evidence given by the plaintiff, I am satisfied that they have come out of the insolvent estate, and that they belonged to the mother. If there are any articles that belonged to her, they must be the merest trifles which the Court cannot consider now. There is some evidence that as she was passing through Cape Town and staying for a few days, people seemed to force things upon her, which she collected, and took away with her, but the evidence is altogether unsatisfactory. There may have been some trifles which came into her hands in that way. Under the circumstances, I give judgment for the defendant, with costs, the rule nisi to be discharged.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.)]

KRYNAUW V. DE BEER. { 1906
{ Mar. 10th.

Agent — Power of attorney — Disclosure.

The applicant having appointed the respondent as her agent under a power of attorney, revoked the power, appointed another agent, and requested the respondent to give full information as to his acts under the power to such agent. The respondent replied saying that the power was irrevocable and that he was only bound to give information to the applicant herself. In an application to compel the respondent to return his power to the applicant:

Held, that the position taken up by the respondent justified the applicant in making the application, but as the respondent might require the power in support of his costs done thereunder, it was ordered to be handed over to the Registrar of the Court.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi, calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not deliver up a certain power of attorney granted to him by the applicant in or about the month of December, 1905, the rule having operated as an interim interdict. Mr. Van Zyl was for applicant, Mrs. Anna M. Krynauw, of Somerset West; Mr. Upington was for respondent, Johannes J. de Beer, agent, Somerset West.

The matter arose out of a power of attorney, granted by applicant to respondent to sell on her behalf a farm known as Helderfontein, division of Caledon. Applicant said that she did not intend to grant an irrevocable power to respondent, and she also said that she specified that the purchase price should not be less than a certain sum. She did not understand the English language, and at the time of signing did not know the exact terms of the power. The power was now alleged to be irrevocable, and no sum at which the farm could be sold was named in the document. Respondent said that he had a customer for the farm, but he would not disclose particulars to applicant. Respondent said that an attempt was being made to take the work out of his hands, and place it in the hands of Fagan and De Villiers.

Mr. Upington submitted that the application for the rule had been prematurely made, and that the respondent should have been allowed an opportunity of properly placing the facts before applicant.

Mr. Van Zyl contended that the application was quite reasonable, because respondent withheld from her certain information that she was entitled to as owner of the property. If he had sold the farm, then the applicant was prepared to pay his commission. Surely the power of attorney did not give him a lien for his commission. The applicant had taken up the position all along that she would ratify what had been done by the respondent acting under the power. What she objected to was the purchase price being paid into the hands of the respondent.

Mr. Upington said that, as to the necessity for the rule, there had been no question of taking out the purchase price. The applicant had acted in hot haste, and had upon an ex parte application rushed into court for a rule.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is clear law that it is the duty of an agent when asked for information to make a full disclosure to his principal of everything done by him under the power. The principal is entitled at any time to revoke that power, with certain exceptions not necessary to be mentioned now. If the agent is asked to say what he has done, he is bound at once to make a full disclosure of everything which he has done under the power. But if the principal had the power to revoke, the principal also had the power to appoint another agent, and if that agent is authorised to ask for information from the first agent as to his acts under his power, the latter is not justified in withholding such information. The respondent however, took up the attitude that this is an irrevocable power, and that he is entitled to withhold the authority, unless applicant herself came in person to him, and got the full explanation from him. He did not give the full information to the applicant's husband, nor to her second agent. If he had given the full information, I should certainly have said that the applicant ought not to have applied to compel him to hand up the power. I think, under all the circumstances, that the applicant, having not succeeded in getting the full information to which she was entitled from her first agent (the respondent), she was justified in coming into court for the purpose of compelling him to hand over the power. Now that he has given the explanation, it is another matter. For myself, I think he should not be ordered to hand over the power to the applicant. The suggestion that respondent makes—but makes at the last moment—that the power should be handed over to the Registrar of the Court, is, I think, very reasonable. The Court will make the rule absolute, with this alteration, that the power be handed over to the Registrar of the Supreme Court, but I think that the respondent should pay the costs of the application.

BLACK V. BLACK AND ANOTHER.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan said that this was an application in an unfortunate dispute between partners, the partners being the father (for whom he appeared) and certain sons. An interdict was asked for against the respondents, and the appointment of Mr. James Douglas, chartered accountant, as liquidator of the assets and liabilities of the firm. A settlement had, however, now been arrived at, whereby it was agreed that there should be a dissolution of the partnership, and that Mr. Harry Gibson be appointed receiver and manager of the partnership, costs between party and party to come out of the estate.

Mr. Benjamin (for respondents) consented.

Judgment entered in terms of settlement.

MCKAY AND CO. V. MCKAY.

This was an application by Mrs. McKay and Peter Bischoff, of the firm of McKay and Co., music dealers, Church-street, upon notice calling upon Clarence McKay to show cause why a certain writ of attachment should not be set aside. Mr. Gardiner was for the applicants; Dr. Rainsford was for respondent.

Mr. Gardiner said that the application arose out of an action recently heard before Mr. Justice Buchanan. Mrs. McKay, who was the widow of the late J. T. McKay, and Mr. Bischoff and Mr. Clarence McKay (the present respondent) were bequeathed the business of McKay and Co., and they were all made partners by the will, and had been carrying on in partnership, Mrs. McKay having a half-share and the other partners a quarter share each. Certain salaries were stipulated to be paid. A dispute arose between the partners, Clarence McKay claiming that he was entitled to an increase in salary. The matter came before the Court upon a question of the interpretation of the will. Judgment was given in favour of Clarence McKay, awarding him a sum of £125, as the increase due to him. The order of the Court was that costs should be borne by the defendants individually, and in their capacity as executors of the estate of J. T. McKay. His Lordship, in his judgment, said that the plaintiff would not be entitled to press his claim in competition with other creditors. An attachment had been made under the judgment of certain pianos and other musical instruments belonging to the firm of McKay and Co. The applicants sought to have the attachment set aside on the ground that it was not against their individual property.

Respondent, in his affidavit, said that applicants would not make any proposal to him in regard to his claim, and that they were trying to keep him out of his money.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J., said he thought this was a case in which the parties should endeavour to come to some settlement.

Dr. Rainsford said he thought probably they would be able to arrive at a settlement, because, of course, it was not to the advantage of respondent to force McKay and Co. into insolvency.

De Villiers, C.J.: If no settlement is arrived at, then either party may apply again to the Court. At present the case must be postponed sine die to enable the parties to come to an arrangement; in the meantime the respondent is restrained from selling in execution any goods of the partnership that have been attached. As at present advised, my opinion is that the question now raised can only arise in insolvency. Until there is insolvency, or clear proof of insolvency, one partner would have the same rights against the estate as other creditors.

FLEMMER AND ANOTHER V. J. 1906.
OOSTHUIZEN. Mar. 12th.

Insolvency—Deed of assignment.

O. had assigned his estate to his creditors and they had accepted the assignment and disposed of a portion of the estate. They now applied for the final adjudication of defendant's estate as insolvent.

Held, that as it was not competent for the creditors to take advantage of the deed of assignment and then treat it as null and void, the provisional order of sequestration must be set aside.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent, the petitioners being the assignees under a deed of assignment in the estate.

Mr. Burton appeared for the defendant, who is a farmer in the district of Steynsburg, and opposed the application.

Affidavits having been read and counsel heard in argument on the facts.

Maasdorp, J.: The applicants in moving for the sequestration of this estate, desire to treat the deed of assignment as wholly void and ineffectual, and they do so on the ground that the respondent has failed to comply with some of the conditions of this deed. Now, it seems to me, from what has taken place between the parties, that it would be wholly impossible now to treat this assignment as void, and to place the respondent back in the position which he occupied before the agreement was entered into. Certain portions of the property have already been disposed of by the applicants under this contract, and it appears that they advertised for sale the landed property, and the bond is actually in force which was passed by the respondent in favour of the applicants for the debts due before this bond was passed. It seems to me that the applicants are now in this difficulty, they wish to say the deed of assignment is ineffectual, and at the same time they take proceedings upon it, because the debt, which is alleged as the ground of the application, is a debt due under this bond. Now, it is not open to the applicants to act in that manner. If they treat the deed of assignment as partially good, then they can enforce a further compliance with the remaining terms by the respondent. But they cannot take advantage of the deed, and at the same time treat it as no release of the respondent from his liabilities. It seems to me that if this agreement was to be a release from his liabilities on giving up the property, then the respondent is not insolvent. It has been treated so by the applicants. But, going into the merits of this case, it appears to me that the more important provisions of this agreement have been carried out. It seems that there has been a holding back on the part of the respondent with respect to some portion. He should certainly have done his best to have brought in the wagon and oxen, which certainly were a very small part of the property, but the applicants seem to have taken possession, and he should have been compelled under the deed of assignment to do his duty, but, instead of taking what I would regard as the more direct course, and getting hold, through the respondent, of the cart and oxen, when the whole matter would be disposed of, they have taken advantage of the fault of the respondent in that respect to set aside the whole of the important transaction which has been partially carried out. Under the circumstances, I think the sequestration order should be set aside, with costs.

THOMPSON AND CO. V. PALMER, HERBERT AND BRIGHT.

Promissory note — Consideration — Libel — Publication.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence upon a promissory note for £300, dated November 30, 1905, and payable on the 28th February at the "Owl" office, Mutual Buildings, Cape Town, the defendants having signed the note jointly and severally.

Dr. Greer appeared for the first defendant; Sir H. Juta, K.C., for the second and third defendants.

Affidavits having been read and counsel heard in argument on the facts.

Masendorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case sues the defendants on a promissory note for £300, signed by all three defendants, and the defence set up by them is that they received no consideration for the making of this note. The issue between the parties in this case arises from the following facts: It seems that there was an agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the "Owl" Syndicate, under which the plaintiff undertook the publication of the "Owl" newspaper from the 1st April, 1905, to the 1st April, 1906, and one of the terms of this agreement was that in case the plaintiff should become liable in an action for damages in respect of any libellous matter published in the newspaper, that the syndicate would reimburse the plaintiff, and hold him harmless. It appears that in respect of an issue of this paper on the 31st March an action was brought for some libellous matter, and judgment was given for the plaintiff in a certain sum, and involving an amount of costs altogether amounting to some £600. The plaintiff claimed payment of a portion of this amount from the syndicate, and three of the defendants gave a promissory note in respect of £300 being part payment of that amount. The defendants now say that they were not legally responsible for that amount, and consequently they gave this note without consideration; in fact, they allege they did it as an act of grace. The point upon which the defendants proceed is this: that this particular paper was published on the 31st March, and published by the Central News Agency, and that consequently there was no publication on the part of the plaintiff. As a matter of fact, it appears that a certain number of copies were handed to the plaintiff in this case. Now, it seems to me that if the publication of that particular paper ceased with the Central News on the 31st March, the whole of the publication of that issue would not cease, but the publication of it go right on, and it went on on the 1st April and after. Consequently I can see no reason why it should not be under this agreement. The agreement makes no reference to the date of printing of any particular issue, but it says that the paper as printed and bound shall be handed to the plaintiff for publication. Well, this particular copy, though dated the 31st March, a large number of it remained still for publication, and the nature of publication simply seems to be this: that after delivery of a number of copies to the plaintiff, the plaintiff was to set about selling them, and account for the money for the copies sold and return the unsold copies. I cannot see why that should not take place with regard to the paper published on the 31st March; as a matter of fact, there was a part publication by the Central News Agency on the 31st March. The publication continued thereafter, and this paper was handed over by Mr. Palmer, the registered proprietor, acting on behalf of the syndicate. On the 1st April these papers were handed over for publication, and they were duly sold, which amounted to the publication here mentioned. The publication of that particular copy of the "Owl" consequently falls under the agreement. They become liable under the agreement for the payment of these damages and costs, and under the agreement that liability falls upon the syndicate. Three of the syndicate made this promissory note, and they made it in respect of a debt for which they were liable, and consequently on the whole there is sufficient proof there was consideration. Provisional sentence will be granted, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

LANGERMAN V KEUR. { 1906.
Mar. 13th.

This was an action brought by Frederick J. B. Langerman, of Sea Point, against Barend C. Keur, also of Sea Point, to recover the purchase price of a horse and wagon, and money lent and advanced.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that on the 1st October, 1902, he sold and delivered to defendant certain horse and wagon for £60, on condition that the purchase price should be paid at the rate of £10 monthly, with interest from date of sale to payment of purchase price. Defendant had failed to pay the purchase price or any portion thereof. Defendant was further indebted to plaintiff in the sum of £20 1s., money lent and advanced. Plaintiff claimed £60, with interest from the 1st October, 1902, at 6 per cent. per annum, and £20 1s., with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Defendant, in his plea, admitted that on the 1st October, 1902, he bought a horse from plaintiff for £16, but he denied that he had purchased a horse and wagon, or had promised to pay the purchase price in monthly instalments.

He admitted having received delivery of the horse, but denied that he had received delivery of the wagon. He admitted having received the advances of money. He said, further, that after issue of summons, he tendered to plaintiff payment of £16 and £20 ls., but this tender was refused by plaintiff. He again tendered £36 ls., with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Mr. Burton was for plaintiff; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for defendant.

Mr. Jones applied for leave to amend the plea, so as to read that defendant admitted having bought the horse, "for which £16 would be a fair and reasonable sum to pay." Counsel added that no price was fixed at the time of the transaction.

[Maasdorp, J.: Well, then, there was no sale.]

Mr. Jones: Strictly, there is no sale in law.

[Maasdorp, J.: I don't think that the plea requires any amendment.]

Mr. Jones: I don't want the objection to come later on that I have not substantiated the plea.

F. J. B. Langerman (the plaintiff) gave evidence. Defendant, he said, lived close to his place, and witness had known him for many years. About three and a half years ago he procured a situation for defendant with the Sea Point Municipality as stableman. Witness went to England, and on his return he found that Keur had lost his situation, and he asked witness to help him to get a horse and cart. Witness bought a horse and van from Mr. Breda for £55 10s. After some negotiations, defendant bought from him the horse and another wagon that witness had had in his possession for about a year. The price agreed upon was £60, to be paid in six monthly instalments. He had bought the wagon the year before from Mr. Morrison for about £9. The horse and wagon and harness that witness threw in were delivered to defendant, and had been kept at his mother's place. Defendant had been in the habit of riding sand for the Municipality and doing other work. Defendant was repeatedly in trouble, and only six weeks ago he was sold up, after an action in the Magistrate's Court. Witness did not proceed against defendant, because the latter had been without money. An inheritance of £90 came due to defendant under his mother's will, of which witness was executor. Witness then told him that he would have to pay the debt out of the inheritance. Defendant protested, and eventually told witness that he could take half of the inheritance. Witness had known defendant's dishonesty for about three and a half years.

Cross-examined: Witness could not give any definite instances of defendant's dishonesty.

Mr. Jones: You must not say these things without having some justification for them. You wish the Court to believe, in a general sort of way, that Keur is a dishonest man?

Witness: I don't wish the Court to believe that.

Mr. Jones: Do you withdraw it, then?

Witness: Well, I don't know that I should. As far as I can say, I cannot call him honest, because I have always found him the most unmitigated liar that ever existed.

Henry C. van Breda, of Sea Point, said that he was offered £60 for the horse before he sold it to Mr. Langerman. He became dissatisfied with the conduct of his coachman, and decided to sell the lot out and have finished with it. At a sacrifice, he sold the horse, van, and harness to plaintiff for £55.

Daniel van der Spuy, formerly employed by plaintiff as coachman, gave corroborative evidence as to the sale of the horse and wagon to defendant.

Frank Frost, cabman, formerly a cartage contractor at Sea Point, said that he had seen Keur using a four-wheeled American van, on which the name of Mr. Morrison had been painted.

Thomas Edward King, an employee of the Sea Point Municipality, said that he had seen the van in Mrs. Keur's yard. The van was only once taken out. Eventually the wheels were taken from the van, and put on to Mrs. Keur's milk cart. He regarded the wagon as lumber.

Cross-examined: Witness considered the value of the van to be about £3 or £9. Mrs. Keur's business was quite distinct from defendant's.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Barend C. Keur (defendant) said that he was a cartage contractor, and used to ride stone, bricks, sand, and builders' materials. He had not carried on a parcels business. He carried furniture for Mr. Langerman to Milnerton in a van he got from Mr. Breda's before he took the horse. Plaintiff a few days afterwards offered him the wagon and horse for £60, but witness declined to have the wagon, and said that it was no use to him. Witness afterwards got the horse, but no arrangement was made as to the price. He agreed to give plaintiff some payment each month, about £5. Witness had never used Mr. Morrison's old wagon. The wheels were taken off the wagon, and put on his mother's milk cart. He had not agreed to pay interest to Mr. Langerman. He bought the horse simply for use in his Scotch cart. His mother died on Christmas Day in 1904. About October last he mentioned to Mr. Langerman that he should want some money from his mother's estate. He owed plaintiff £20 ls. for money advanced up to that time, and also payment for the horse. Witness had sold the horse for £15 10s. He considered that £16 was a fair price to pay for the horse.

Cross-examined: The sale of the horse took place early last year. He sold the animal because he had no work for it. The horse was over ten years old. Witness was not surprised to see the van in his mother's yard, because plaintiff used to give her old goods.

By the Court: Witness kept his carts and horses at the tramway terminus, and not at his mother's yard.

Pieter Langeveld (nephew of the defendant) said he took the van from Mr. Langerman's place to Mrs. Keur's yard. The wagon was a "ramshackle affair." A pair of wheels was taken off for Mrs. Keur's milk cart, and the body of the wagon was afterwards chopped up for firewood.

Robert Morrison, of Sea Point, said that he was the original owner of the wagon, having sold it about seven or eight years ago to plaintiff. The wagon was very old at that time.

Reginald Metcalfe, attorney, of the firm of Silberbauer, Wahl, and Fuller (defendant's attorneys), said that he had endeavoured to make a settlement on the basis of £16 for the horse. Witness described an interview that he had with Mr. Berrange (plaintiff's attorney), who insisted that Keur had had the wagon. Witness had been prepared to "spring" up to £25 or £30 for the horse.

Mr. Jones closed his case, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts, Maasdorp, J., said he found that plaintiff had proved his case, and he gave judgment for plaintiff as prayed, with costs.

MARAIS V. ADAMSTEIN.

Dr. Rainsford moved on the petition of Pieter J. Marais, for leave to sue one Adamstein by edictal citation and for the attachment of certain property in Cape Town ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Petitioner said that he held a mortgage bond for £6,500 against the property, and that the capital had become due by reason of the non-payment of interest, and he proposed to sue for provisional sentence and payment of insurance premiums. Respondent formerly lived at Laingsburg, but his present whereabouts were unknown.

Leave to sue granted, and property attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem, citation to be returnable on the 1st June, personal service to be effected.

Maasdorp, J., observed that he did not think sufficient effort had been made to trace respondent's whereabouts, and he did not feel disposed, as requested, to allow substituted service at the present stage. Petitioner might, after proper efforts had been made to trace respondent, move the Court for substituted service.

Potgieter, for an order authorising the Master to pay out a sum of £220 from certain inheritance in the estate of their late parents, the money being required by petitioners for their farming operations. The Master, in his report, recommended that the application be not granted.

Maasdorp, J., said that the Master had come to the conclusion, from his inquiries, that petitioners, who were boys of 18 and 16 years, had no knowledge of business. He also said that he had been unable to ascertain what the real position of the minors was in this case. The application would be refused, as recommended by the Master. Of course, it would still be in the powers of the minors to give the Master further information, and then the application could be renewed.

MARAIS V. COLLINS.

Mr Douglas Buchanan moved for leave to sue the respondent, James Collins, by edictal citation, for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £3,000, and for the attachment of certain property in Cape Town ad fundandam jurisdictionem. ALING V. DE VRIES. { 1906.
Mar. 15th.
" 22nd.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan mentioned this matter, which was an application to have certain property at Elliot declared executable to the provisional sentence obtained on a Magistrate's Court judgment. Mr. Buchanan appeared for one Bezuidenhout, who claimed to be the owner of the property in question. He now produced an affidavit by his client's attorneys, from which it appeared that an inquiry addressed to Elliot had elicited the information that Bezuidenhout was in possession of the property, and that the purchase price was paid several months ago. The deponent went on to say that the consent of the Governor to the transfer of the property in question had now been obtained.

Mr. De Waal (for plaintiff) pointed out that there was no allegation that Bezuidenhout had been in possession since the 5th March, or any other date.

[Maasdorp, J.: I think what the Court required was an inspection of the grant.]

Mr. De Waal put in the grant.

[Maasdorp, J.: The matter will be considered.]

Postea (March 22nd).

Maasdorp, J.: In this matter the plaintiff, Aling, moved for provisional sentence on a Magistrate's Court judgment, and also for certain land registered in the name of the defendant to be declared executable. Bezuidenhout, whom I may call the respondent in this case, appeared on the return day and opposed the prayer with respect to the property being declared executable. It appears that De Vries is the registered owner of certain land, which he holds under somewhat peculiar circumstances. He holds it under quitrent title, and at the same time it is not in his power to dispose of it without the consent of the Government, nor can he subject it to any hypothecation or security for any debts.

of his. This property was sold by De Vries to the respondent. The respondent has paid the purchase price and taken possession; he has also obtained the consent of the Government to the transfer of the property to himself. Plaintiff bases his claim solely on the ground that this land is still registered in the name of De Vries, and that consequently, on the authorities which have been cited, he is now entitled to have it declared executable in the same way as a trustee in insolvency would be entitled to claim the property for the benefit of creditors. Now, it seems to me that in considering a case of this kind the question of ownership is not the only one to be considered. There are various interests of creditors when persons have contracted with a defendant which the Court will protect, and we have had a case before this Court not long ago in which the Court decided that certain property belonging to a native which passed into the hands of another native subject to certain rights, which did not convey ownership, and which still left the ownership in the defendant, that those rights were still of such a nature that the Court will protect them from the judgment creditor. A trustee in an insolvent estate stands in a very different position from a judgment creditor. The former has to deal with property in the insolvent estate for the benefit of creditors, and the Court has held in such cases that he is entitled to claim the property for the benefit of creditors which still remains registered in the name of the insolvent. Now, the plaintiff in this case has not shown that he has exhausted all the remedies by means of which he might have obtained the payment of his debt. He simply comes into court on the ground that this property is still registered in the name of the defendant; there is nothing to show that there is not other property by which his debt might be satisfied. It may be that there is none, but there is nothing to show that to the satisfaction of the Court, and, consequently, in the circumstances of the case, I do not think that the Court would have granted the prayer to declare the property executable, and the result would therefore be that plaintiff would have failed and the respondent be successful in that matter. Plaintiff now admits that defendant has been declared insolvent. The property, therefore, will be dealt with under the Insolvent Ordinance, and what the rights of the parties will then be it is not necessary for me now to decide. Consequently the only question the Court has now to decide is the question of costs. Costs would have had to be paid by the unsuccessful party. To my mind, plaintiff would have had to pay costs on that ground. As to the costs incurred upon the first day of hearing of this matter,

I might say that plaintiff came into court in ignorance of the claim of respondent, and, consequently, he cannot be called upon now to pay costs of the respondent's appearance on that occasion, but all subsequent costs to the first appearance must be paid by plaintiff (Aling).

ROSS V. WOODSTOCK LICEN- { 1906.
SING COURT. { Mar. 15th.

Licensing Court—Informality— Declarations of canvassers.

R., having applied for a retail liquor licence, produced the usual declarations of canvassers in terms of Schedule B, to Act 28 of 1883. The names of the canvassers had been filled in by themselves at the beginning of the declarations, but they had omitted to sign their names at the end. The Licensing Court held that the declarations were informal and refused the licence.

Held on review, that the Licensing Court was justified in its action, but as the said Court did not oppose the granting of the licence, and as the Court was satisfied that the declarations were genuine, it condoned the irregularity.

This was an application by Carl Ross upon notice calling upon the Woodstock Licensing Board to show cause why an order should not issue rescinding a ruling given at the annual meeting of the Licensing Board on the 7th March, 1906, in respect of petitioner's application for a retail liquor licence at Parow, and, further, why the Board should not consider his application on its merits. Mr. Alexander was for the applicant; respondents did not appear.

From the applicant's affidavit, it seemed that the Licensing Board had held that the declarations of canvassers put in at the sitting of the Court in reference to the signatures of voters appearing on this memorial were informal, inasmuch as the declarants, instead of signing at the foot of the document, signed immediately after the pronoun "I," at the commencement of the declaration. The Board held that this was informal, and postponed the application until the 21st March to enable applicant to obtain a decision of the Supreme Court on the point raised.

Mr. Alexander having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J.: There is no opposition by the Board here. In this case there is no doubt that there is an informality and that the proper way in which a declaration of this kind should be signed is at the foot of the declaration, and it is for this reason, because the name that appears in the body of the declaration may have been written by any other person, and very often that is the case—that the name in the body is written by one person and the signature when the declaration is made before a justice of the peace is the person who makes the declaration. The Licensing Board were perfectly right in regarding it as an informality, an informality which put them in a difficulty, and one which, considering that it was to some extent in conflict with the requirements of the Act, they thought justified them in refusing the application. It has now been made quite clear that the name which was written in the body of the document when it was declared was written by the declarant himself, and under these circumstances there is the necessary evidence required by the Act to authenticate the signatures of the voters. Under these circumstances, as it was only necessary that the Court should have such evidence on which to proceed, I consider that this declaration may now be accepted, but in the first instance I think the Board was justified in regarding it with some doubt, and, looking upon the informality as one which they could not pass over.

Mr. Alexander mentioned that the Licensing Court had quite as much evidence before it as his lordship had now.

It is very fortunate for you that the Board does not oppose. The Court now finds there is sufficient evidence to make these declarations satisfactory evidence of the genuineness of the signatures. The Court holds that the declarations are admissible as proof of the signatures; it does not hold that the declarations are in proper form, but under the circumstances they are sufficient.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte DA COSTA AND OTHERS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on the petition of Alfred da Costa and others, shareholders or creditors of the South African Trade Protection Society and Trust Company, for an order for the compulsory liquidation of the company. Petitioners said that the company's head offices were in Johannesburg, but there were branches in this colony, at Cape Town, Kimberley, Port Elizabeth, East London, King William's Town, and Queen's Town, the head offices for this colony being in Cape Town. The principal business of the company was the publication of a weekly newspaper, giving particulars of judgments given in South African Courts of Law, of interest to commercial people and other mercantile matters, but publication had been discontinued for some two months. In February, 1906, the High Court of the Witwatersrand made an order for the provisional liquidation of the company in the Transvaal. The liabilities of the company exceeded its assets, and it was unable to pay its debts. The assets in this colony consisted of cash at the Standard Bank amounting approximately to £60, furniture at the various offices probably worth about £300, and outstanding accounts amounting to about £2,000, while the liabilities in this colony were approximately about £6,000. Petitioners applied for an order that, so far as its assets and liabilities in this colony were concerned, the company be placed under compulsory liquidation, and suggested that Mr. John Burnett Hobday, manager in Cape Town, be provisional liquidator. [Maasdorp, J.: Is the company registered in this colony?]

Mr. Jones: No, my lord; it is registered in the Transvaal, and has branch offices throughout the Colony.

Maasdorp, J., said that he did not see any need to appoint a provisional liquidator, as Mr. Hobday would no doubt continue as manager. A rule nisi would be granted, calling upon all persons interested to show cause on the 17th April why the company should not be placed under compulsory liquidation, rule to be published once in the "Cape Times," and to be served on the provisional liquidators in the Transvaal and the manager in Cape Town.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte BROWN AND WIFE.

Mr P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to register an ante-nuptial contract to have the effect of keeping the petitioners' estates separate and to enable the first petitioner to cede to the second petitioner a certain life policy and furniture. The parties said that they had been under the impression that a marriage in Cape Colony had the same effect as a marriage in England, and that the Married Women's Property Act applied.

Order granted in terms of first prayer of petition, saving all just rights of creditors.

Mr. Close moved, on the petition of the New Great Damara Syndicate, for leave to sue one John William Stanley by edictal citation, and for the attachment of certain 16 shares in the syndicate ad fundandum jurisdictionem. Counsel explained that petitioners had entered into a contract with respondent in respect of certain copper mining interests in German South-West Africa, and Stanley was described in the agreement as of Kanhandja, German South-West Africa. It was intended to bring an action against Stanley for a declaration of rights and damages.

Leave to sue granted, shares attached as prayed, citation to be served upon Mr. Tennant, attorney, and to be returnable on the 1st May.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPKIN.]

Ex parte MCINTOSH. { 1906.
Mar. 16th.

This was an urgent application calling upon Mr. A. T. Hennessy, as curator bonis in applicant's estate, to show cause why he should not pay over to his (McIntosh's) solicitor a sum of £30 for his defence at the Criminal Sessions now sitting. Dr. Greer was for applicant; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for respondent.

From the affidavits, it appeared that applicant was awaiting trial at the Criminal Sessions on a charge of embezzling a sum of about £400, the moneys of Messrs. Hammond and Co., whom applicant represented in Cape Town. The moneys which he was accused of having embezzled were, he said, his own, and not those of Hammond and Co., and he desired a sum of £30 to be paid over to his solicitor for the purposes of his defence. His estate had been provisionally sequestrated, and Mr. A. T. Hennessy had been appointed curator bonis. The curator's position was that he had no funds belonging to the estate from which he could make any payment to applicant's attorneys. Owing to lack of information, he had been unable to collect any of the moneys set out in the assignment. He had ascertained that certain debts claimed to be due to applicant, were by him purported to have been ceded to one Hildyard Home Drummond.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J.: Any order that the Court may make will be confined to assets belonging to the applicant. The Court cannot dispose of the property of other people for the purpose of defending the petitioner. The Court will, therefore, direct the respondent to pay to the applicant's attorney a sum of £25, out of any funds coming into his hands and belonging to the applicant, for the defence of the applicant at the Criminal Sessions now being held, the applicant undertaking to give every assistance to the respondent, and point out any debts of the applicant which may be collected.

Dr. Greer: I take it that the costs of this application will come out of the estate?

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think that had better be applied for afterwards.]

Mr. Jones: Curator's costs, I take it, would come out of the estate?

[De Villiers, C.J.: Oh, yes. Leave is reserved to the applicant hereafter to apply as to the costs of this application.]

OLIVIER V. BREYTENBACH.

This was an application by plaintiff in the suit for removal of trial to the Circuit Court at Oudtshoorn. Mr. De Villiers was for applicant; Mr. Russell was for respondent, for whom objection was raised that insufficient time would be allowed in which to prepare his defence. Respondent did not object to the case going to the Circuit Court after the one now pending.

The trial was ordered to be removed to the Circuit Court, costs to be costs in the cause, order to be telegraphed.

CAPE ELECTRIC TRAMWAYS, LTD. V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1906.
Mar. 16th.
" 19th.
" 27th.

Railway Company—Working railway—Rights of cessionary—Arbitration—Privilegium—Debentures—Act 44 of 1905.

The plaintiffs bought a line of railway, with the right of working the same, from a syndicate which in turn had purchased the line with the same right from the official liquidators of a company who had been authorized by the Court to effect the sale in the course of the winding up of such company. The Government recognized the plaintiffs, as well as the syndicate, as owners of the line and entitled to work the same, and afterwards introduced a Bill, which became Act 44 of 1905, authorizing the Government to take over the line of railway at a cost to be settled, pending agreement, by arbitration.

Held, that in estimating such cost, the arbitrators should include the value of the right of working the line of railway.

This was an action brought by the Cape Electric Tramways, Ltd., against the Colonial Government for a declaration of rights in respect of a certain line of railway known as the Sea Point Railway.

Plaintiffs' declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are the Cape Electric Tramways, Limited, a company with limited liability, incorporated and registered in England and carry on business in this colony. The defendant is the Honourable T. W. Smartt, in his capacity as Commissioner of Public Works, and as such representing the Colonial Government.

2. Power to construct and work a line of railway from Cape Town to Sea Point and various other powers in connection therewith were granted by Act 23 of 1899, to a company styled "The Metropolitan and Suburban Railway Company, Limited," which was duly formed, which constructed the said line hereafter called the Sea Point Railway, and exercised the powers under the Act.

3. The said line was worked principally with rolling stock hired from the defendant, the Cape Town terminus was upon the defendant's ground, by virtue of an agreement with the defendant, and the line ran partly over private property transferred to the said company and partly over land vested in the Table Bay Harbour Board, the Cape Town Municipality, and the Green and Sea Point Municipality, with all of whom agreements were entered into.

4. By virtue of the Act the said company issued in the months of December, 1893, and February, 1894, debentures to the amounts of £25,000 and £9,000 respectively, and on the 28th July, 1898, the said company was placed in liquidation by order of this Honourable Court.

5. On the 16th March, 1899, the Official Liquidators of the said company reported to this Honourable Court that they recommended the acceptance of an offer from a syndicate called the Sea Point Railway Syndicate to purchase the whole undertaking of the said company as a going concern, for £20,000, upon the syndicate agreeing to take over all agreements existing between the company and other persons.

6. All the necessary legal requisites were observed with regard to this report, and the said recommendation of purchase and sale, which were duly approved of and confirmed by this Honourable Court, by order dated the 13th day of April, 1899, and pursuant to such order the official liquidators on the 10th August, 1899, sold and ceded and made over to the syndicate the said undertaking with all rights, powers, privileges, running powers of the said company, and also certain agreements in the third paragraph hereof referred to, and the said liquidators duly reported their action on the 15th September, 1899, to this Honourable Court, which report specially stated "that the steps necessary to secure the completion of the sale owing to the nature of the company's agreements and running and other rights has taken longer than would have been the case under more ordinary circumstances," and which was—after the necessary legal requisites—duly presented to and accepted by this Honourable Court, no objections being lodged.

7. Among the said agreements ceded and made over by the said official liquidators to the said syndicate were certain agreements with the Cape Town Council by which the said company had undertaken to pay certain annual sums in consideration of certain running rights; the said syndicate raised the sum of £26,000 by debentures upon the said undertaking sold to them under the said order of Court, and a bond was duly registered, securing the said debentures, which said bond and debentures have been paid by the plaintiffs, who hold the cancelled debentures.

8. Thereafter, the said syndicate, having duly received possession of the undertaking sold to it, spent considerable sums in repairing the said line and ran trains over it, and entered into arrangements with the defendant, who had full knowledge of the facts hereinbefore stated, for the supply of rolling-stock, but owing to military exigencies the same could not be supplied, and eventually the said syndicate sold all its rights in respect of the said undertaking to the plaintiffs. The said syndicate had been treated as the owners of the whole of the said railway as a going concern, and with all the rights, powers, and privileges of the original company by the Cape Government Railways, the Table Bay Harbour Board, and the aforesaid two Municipalities, and when, in 1901, the plaintiffs purchased all the rights of the said syndicate and the undertaking sold to it, due notice thereof was given, in writing, by the plaintiffs to these said persons. All the aforesaid agreements were duly taken over by the plaintiffs, who have duly performed all obligations resting upon them thereunder.

9. No objection was raised by the defendant then or at any time prior to the validity of the said order of this Honourable Court or to the said syndicate exercising all the powers granted by the Act No. 23 of 1889, but, on the contrary, the Colonial Government recognised the said order and powers.

10. Thereafter the plaintiffs, desiring to convert the said line of railway into a double line, to be worked by electric instead of steam power, took the preliminary steps for the introduction into Parliament in 1901 of a private Bill to amend the Act No. 23 of 1889 in these respects, and negotiations took place with the Colonial Government and the other bodies mentioned in paragraph 3 hereof in respect thereto, and similar steps were taken in 1903.

11. No agreement was arrived at and the Bill was not introduced, and from 1902 the ratepayers of the Green and Sea Point Municipality urged upon the Colonial Government to exercise its power of expropriation under Act 23 of 1889, and on the 26th November, 1904, the Colonial Government, through its duly-authorised agent, the General Manager of Railways, gave notice to the plaintiffs that the Government would request Parliament at its next session to authorise them to exercise their powers of expropriation of the Sea Point Railway, under section 21 of Act 23 of 1889.

12. At that time, and since April, 1903, an agreement, of which the Colonial Government had knowledge, existed between the plaintiffs and the Table Bay Harbour Board, by which the Sea Point Railway has been worked by the latter body for goods traffic, and the said agreement was in force when Act No. 44 of 1905 was promulgated in June, 1905. The said Act is the authority referred to by the General Manager of Railways in the notice of November, 1904.

13. On or about the 18th July, 1905, the defendant, in the "Government Gazette" of that date, gave notice purporting to be in terms of section 4 of Act 44 of 1905, that it was the intention of the Government to enter upon and take over forthwith the said line of railway, and calling upon all persons and companies claiming to have legal claims therein and thereto to lodge their claims with him.

14. Thereupon the plaintiffs, on or about the 22nd of July, 1905, addressed to the defendant a communication complaining of the terms of the said notice, inasmuch as the plaintiffs were, as the defendant was well aware, the owners of the said line of railway, and the usual and proper notices of the Government's said intention had not been given to them as such owners, but the defendant, wrongfully and unlawfully, and in defiance of the plaintiffs' rights, maintained that there had been no legal assignment of the rights acquired by the company under Act 23 of 1889, and that both the order of Court aforesaid and the said agreement, by which the said railway was sold as a going concern, were ultra vires and bad in law, and that the plaintiffs had no right or title to the said undertaking, which they had so purchased as aforesaid.

15. In any case the defendant lay by and with full knowledge acquiesced in all the proceedings above set forth, and in the said order of Court, the reports of the liquidators and the said agreements, and then and thereafter recognised the position, first, of the said syndicate, and afterwards of the plaintiffs, as entitled in succession to the railway company, to the entire undertaking aforesaid as a going concern, and the defendant is not entitled in law to question the validity of the said proceedings, order, reports, and agreements, or of the legal position and rights of the plaintiffs, as above set forth, but is by his conduct aforesaid debarred and estopped from raising any such question.

16. Thereafter, in pursuance of the defendant's said notice and contention, he proceeded on or about the 18th July, 1905, by himself, his servants or agents, wrongfully and unlawfully, and in spite of the plaintiffs' protests, to trespass upon and take possession of the said line of railway and the private property of the plaintiffs, without giving to the plaintiffs any notice of expropriation beyond the public notice in paragraph 13 hereof referred to.

17. On or about the 25th of August, 1905, the plaintiffs, in consequence of the said acts of the defendant, applied to this Honourable Court for an order, restraining the defendant from entering upon or interfering with the plaintiffs said property and undertaking, save and except under and in conformity with the provisions of Acts 23 of 1889 and 44 of 1905, especially as to compensation. The plaintiffs crave leave to refer to the records of the said application from which it will appear, inter alia, that the defendant denied that the plaintiffs had any legal claim to be treated as owners entitled to compensation and claimed that they had no title in respect of the said railway.

18. Upon the hearing of the said application this Honourable Court made the following order by consent of parties: "That the applicants, without prejudice to their rights, consent to the Government taking immediate possession of the line of railway known as the Sea Point Railway, and that the compensation to be paid to the applicants therefor be settled by arbitration in terms of the Lands and Arbitration Clauses Act of 1882, such arbitration to be held over pending an action to be brought for a declaration that the applicants were the purchasers of the said railway as a going concern and are entitled to be compensated upon the basis of the value of the said railway as a going concern."

The plaintiffs now claim: (a) A declaration of their rights in the premises. (b) A declaration that they were the purchasers of the said railway as a going concern, and that they are entitled, in any arbitration by which their compensation for the said expropriation shall be settled, to be compensated upon the basis of the value of the said railway as a going concern. (c) Alternative relief. (d) Costs of suit.

Defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraph 1, and as to paragraph 2 craves leave to refer to Act No. 23 of 1889, for the powers conferred upon the said company.

2. As to paragraph 3, he craves leave to refer to paragraph 2 of the said Act, whereunder it was agreed that the said line of railway should commence at such a convenient junction with the Western Railway System at Cape Town as may be agreed upon between the Commissioner and the directors of the company; the only agreement arrived at with the said company was terminable at three months' notice, and he craves leave to refer to the same when produced. With regard to the course of the said line, he craves leave to refer to paragraph 2 of the said Act, and to such agreements as may be produced by plaintiff, referring thereto; there is no agreement in force between the plaintiff and defendant as to the said terminus, and no such agreement has ever been entered into.

3. He admits paragraph 4, and as to paragraph 5 craves leave to refer to the liquidator's report for the terms thereof.

4. As to paragraph 6, he admits the presentation and confirmation of the said report, and refers to its terms when produced. He admits that no objections were filed or were taken to the said reports, but he says that upon the said company being placed in liquidation, all the powers of running or working a line of railway under the terms of the said Act ceased and determined, and he craves leave to refer to the terms of the said Act.

5. As to paragraph 7, he admits that there were agreements between the said company and the Council, and craves leave to refer to their terms when produced; he says that he was no party to the said agreements, and does not admit that the same conferred the rights on the syndicate which they may have purported to do. He admits that debentures were issued, and a bond registered, but does not admit the other allegations in the said paragraph.

6. As to paragraph 8, he admits that the syndicate took possession of the railway line, and ran certain trains over it, and entered into certain arrangements for the supply of rolling stock by the Government, but says that the said arrangements never came into force or were acted upon, and the rolling stock could not be supplied owing to military exigencies. He denies that he treated the syndicate as alleged, and has no knowledge of the treatment by the Harbour Board and Municipalities. He admits that notice was given to him in writing that the plaintiff had purchased the syndicate's rights. He does not admit the other allegations in the said paragraph.

7. He admits that no objection was raised to the order of Court as alleged in paragraph 9, but denies the other allegations in the said paragraph.

8. He admits that there were negotiations with Government as alleged in paragraph 10, and craves leave to refer to the correspondence containing the same, when produced. As to negotiations with other bodies, he refers to such proof as may be adduced.

9. As to paragraph 11, he refers to the said notice of November, 1904, for its terms, and admits the other allegations in the said paragraph.

10. He denies that the Government had knowledge of the agreement in paragraph 12 referred to. He admits that Act No. 44 of 1905 was the Act contemplated in the notice of November, 1904.

11. As to paragraph 13, he craves leave to refer to the said notice, when produced, for the terms thereof.

12. As to the allegations in paragraph 14, he craves leave to refer to the correspondence between plaintiff and the Government, and to the proceedings in this Honourable Court when produced; he admits that he contends that the plaintiff has and had no power or rights to run or work the said railway; but he admits that the plaintiff is entitled to reasonable compensation, to be assessed by arbitrators under Act No. 44 of 1905, for the value of the material, plant, etc., forming portion of the said railway line or used in connection therewith, and for the value of any land, their property, so used, and he is willing to pay the said sum when assessed. He denies that the plaintiff is entitled to compensation on the basis of the said railway being a "going concern," if by that is meant that it had or has running powers in respect of the said line.

13. As to paragraph 15 he denies that he acquiesced as aforesaid in any manner which can prevent him from taking up the position that the plaintiff has not in law running powers in respect of the said line, and he denies that any acts of his did or could act as an estoppel, with regard to what are the legal rights under Act No. 23 of 1889.

14. As to paragraph 16, he admits that he took possession of the said line, and says that he did so under the powers conferred by paragraph 4 of Act No. 44 of 1905. He admits that plaintiff protested.

15. As to paragraph 17, he admits that plaintiff is entitled to be compensated for the value of the materials, plant, etc., in and upon the said line of railway or used in connection therewith, whether placed there by the company or the syndicate or the plaintiff, and for any land, plaintiff's property, used for the said line; and he tenders to pay such amount as may be assessed by arbitration for the same.

16. He admits paragraph 18, but, save as above, denies the other allegations in the said declaration.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs. And for a claim in reconvention, the defendant (now plaintiff in reconvention) says:

17. He craves leave to refer to the matters above pleaded.

18. Subsequent to the taking possession of the said line of railway by him as referred to in paragraph 14 of the plea, he has necessarily expended considerable sums of money in repairing the said line of railway and the works in connection therewith, in order to enable the said line of railway to be placed in a condition fit to be worked and run as a railway, and the said railway is now in such condition.

The plaintiff in reconvention claims: (a) That it be declared that the defendant in reconvention is entitled to compensation upon the basis of the value of the material, plant, etc., in or upon the said line of railway or used in connection therewith, such as stations, gate fences, etc., when taken over under Act 44, 1905, and in addition, for the value of any land duly transferred to the defendant in reconvention, over which the said railway passes, and which has been taken possession of by the plaintiff in reconvention. (b) That in the event of the Court deciding that the plaintiff is entitled to compensation on the basis claimed by him, in estimating the amount of compensation to be paid to defendant in reconvention, the necessary expense incurred by plaintiff in reconvention in placing the said railway in a fit condition for traffic, be deducted, in any arbitration. (c) Alternative relief. (d) Costs of suit.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C., and Mr. Burton), for plaintiffs. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Evans), for defendant.

Mr. Schreiner outlined the pleadings and the points at issue between the parties.

De Villiers, C.J. asked counsel whether the difference would be great between the line as a going concern and otherwise.

Mr. Schreiner replied that it would. He went on to say that up to the "Court stage," as he might call it, the defendants made no recognition of the rights of the plaintiffs. They then offered to pay something, but it was found that they took up the position that the plaintiffs had no rights to run the line, and that they put the value at scrap heap prices. They were willing to pay the value of the land.

Mr. Searle said that it might simplify matters a good deal if he explained that the Government were prepared to admit that they had treated the plaintiffs as though they were in the same position as the company. They took up the position that the Government, as a Government, were not aware of these rights claimed by the plaintiffs.

Conraed Christian Silberbauer, chairman of the Sea Point Syndicate, formed to take over the Metropolitan and Suburban Railway Co., said that the latter company went into liquidation in July, 1898. The syndicate took over in April, 1899, but at that time the railway had got into a very neglected state. The syndicate had discussions regarding the railway with the Commissioner of Works at that time, Mr. Sauer. The Commissioner said that he would recommend to the Railway Department the hire of the rolling-stock to the syndicate on the same terms as the Metropolitan Railway had had. At first he said he was averse to any company going on the same site for a railway station in Cape Town, because of the inconvenience caused to the Government Railways. He also said that if any other Government land could be found in the neighbourhood he would strongly recommend the grant of such land for the purpose of the Cape Town terminus. The conveyancers searched the matter thoroughly, but could only find Harbour Board land. Witness communicated this to the Commissioner, and then the latter said he would recommend that the terminus be granted at three months' notice. They saw the Commissioner again subsequently, and he then said he would only carry out that promise if the syndicate would give the Government the right to purchase the railway. They did not consent to that. On the day prior to the order made in the liquidation of the old company, the syndicate was registered with £25,000 worth of debentures. Then they began to put the line into order. Witness communicated with the General Manager of Railways on the subject of the hire of rolling-stock, the Cape Town Station, and the repair of engines. An agreement was come to. The Cape Town Station was to be on six months' notice. The syndicate's engines were repaired, tickets were printed, and a time-table framed, and every preparation was made for opening the line on the 1st September, 1899. Bye-laws were procured, and submitted to the Commissioner of Public Works. Then the stoppage came, because the Government could not supply rolling-stock when the war broke out. The syndicate had appointed a superintendent and general manager, staff, and engine drivers. They had received transfers of all the private lands over which the line ran. The only other bodies concerned would be the Harbour Board, military authorities, the Colonial Government, and the Municipalities of Cape Town and Sea Point. The Sea Point Municipality wanted the Beach-road widened so as to straighten the line. This was done. The Cape Town Municipality also recognised the rights of the syndicate. Recognition was also given by the Imperial Government, the Colonial Government, and the Harbour Board. He was not aware of anyone else whose consent was required to enable the syndicate to work the railway.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did you actually work the railway?]

Witness: We did not. First of all there was the crisis before the war broke out, the Government could not supply the rolling-stock, and then the war actually broke out, and the Government were unable to supply the rolling-stock. We had no rolling-stock of our own, except the two engines. Proceeding, witness said that in 1900 the present plaintiffs closed upon the option which had been given them by the syndicate, and on the 16th November, 1900, witness gave notice of the sale to the Tramway Company of the syndicate's undertaking to the General Manager of Railways, Harbour Board, Sea and Green Point Municipality, and Cape Town Municipality. The syndicate, having sold the undertaking, went into voluntary liquidation.

Cross-examined: The line was never worked by the syndicate either for passenger or goods traffic. They paid no rent to the Government for the use of the terminal station, but they put the station into good order. The Tramways Company obtained the option of purchase in August, 1899. The company bought out and out from the syndicate, when the latter took over the railway, 55 per cent. of the undertaking, and took an option for one year of the remaining 45 per cent.

Samuel Solomon Blumenthal Mills, a director of the Sea Point Railway Syndicate, said that the syndicate went to considerable expense in repairing the line, so as to make it fit for working. About £3,200 was spent in the way of wages and materials upon construction work. Medworth, the general manager of the Sea Point Line, made purchases of oil and so on from the Government for the construction work and with a view of running the line. If the Government could have supplied rolling stock the syndicate would have opened the line on the 1st September, 1899.

Cross-examined: The option given by the syndicate was that the Tramways Company should take over the line at the price paid by the syndicate, with 5 per cent. interest added. The syndicate did not attempt to get out rolling stock of their own. They found it would be impossible to get out rolling stock, and, furthermore, their financial resources were very limited.

In re-examination, witness said that the purchase was made by the syndicate in order to facilitate the connection of the Mills' Camp's Bay Syndicate with Cape Town. The plaintiff company acquired their rights in the Sea Point line by the negotiations which gave the Camp's Bay Company running rights over the Cape Town Tramway's lines.

By the Court: The idea was not, as far as he was aware, to shut up the Sea Point Railway; they had intended to work the railway.

Edward Ridge Syfret, the plaintiff company's representative in this colony, said that he held the company's power of attorney here. The option over the Sea Point line was exercised through witness. The company took over the line about two months later. Witness had nothing to do with arranging the terms. They had many interviews with Ministers from time to time concerning the railway. There had never been any failure to recognise the rights of the company until the notice appeared in the "Gazette" last year. Witness was present at various interviews when the Sea Point people were pressing for the taking over of the railway. In January, 1902, Sir Gordon Sprigg received a deputation from the Sea Point people. The transcripts put in of shorthand writer's notes was a fair report of the utterances of Sir Gordon Sprigg. Before 1902 witness had had communications with the then Commissioner (Dr. Smartt) on the same subject. Witness pointed out to Dr. Smartt what the company would be prepared to do, and Dr. Smartt said that as long as the company treated the Sea Point people fairly the Government would not interfere. Dr. Smartt spoke strongly at that time in favour of electrification of the railway. The plaintiff company had always been treated as successors of the Metropolitan Company. In December, 1900, witness had an interview with a deputation from the Sea Point Council, who recognised the plaintiff's position. After exercising their option, the company were going to introduce a Bill for the electrification of the railway so as to work it in conjunction with the tramways. That would have necessitated a broader gauge and laying down an extra rail. They communicated with the different municipalities, and the Government in connection with the scheme. The company spent a considerable sum upon preparations for introducing a Bill into Parliament. Witness saw Mr. Douglas upon the subject. In the first instance Mr. Douglas seemed wishful to assist the company in every way, but afterwards he took an antagonistic view. At a later stage Mr. Douglas asked them what they would be prepared to take for the line. Neither in 1902 nor in 1903 did they introduce the Bill, on account of the opposition. They did not abandon the scheme. Subsequently in 1903 they received notice from Mr. Douglas that he would like to bring a motion into Parliament to expropriate this line and others. Witness had never quoted any figure to the Government. The company paid £29,000 odd for the line.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What do they claim from the Government?]

Witness: They have made no claim.

Would they take £29,000 from the Government?—I think you could hardly expect them to do that, my lord.

I mean in addition to your expenses?—But they have been out of interest, and they have expended other moneys on the line.

Would they take the amount they have paid and their interest and expenses?—I am not in a position to say, but I think that would hardly be fair, because they bought the line at a time when no one else would touch it. They stood a certain amount of risk in buying it, and they certainly should get something for their risks and their rights.

[Hopley, J.: You mean to say that the line has appreciated?]

Witness: Oh, yes. In further evidence, witness said that the company had not worked the line, their only rolling-stock being two engines. In 1901 the Harbour Board ran traffic over the line. The company also gave the military use of the line to the Green Point Camp. The C.G.R. applied to the company for leave to run stock over the line for the military. The Harbour Board used the line gratuitously down to April, 1903. At the end of 1902 the company approached the Harbour Board, and insisted upon receiving some payment for the traffic over the line. An agreement was arrived at between the company and the Board on April 4, 1903. The Board were given sole right to run traffic over the line, and they were to pay the company so much per ton. Coal and stores were run out to the terminus at Sea Point, to be transhipped into cars to Camps Bay. The agreement with the Harbour Board continued until the Government interposed in 1905. Had he known that this would have been the Government's line of action, the company would have taken the opportunity of being heard in opposition to the Bill introduced by the Government in the last session of Parliament. The company had not spent any considerable sum on the upkeep of the railway, the maintenance being taken over by the Harbour Board under the agreement.

Cross-examined: The company had not run any passenger traffic over the line. He believed that originally it was principally a passenger line. Any one could have had good traffic carried one could have had goods traffic carried over the line through the Harbour Board. Goods brought out from England had been carried over the line for delivery at Sea Point. Witness believed that Mr. Searle drew the company's Bill. He did not know that the Government had opposed the Bill all the way through, on the ground that four lines would be required in Dock-road. The company's position was that at the date of expropriation by the Government they (plaintiffs) had the right to run over the line. They would have run between Sea Point and Cape Town, and would have tried to get a station on the present site. He admitted they would have had to come to some arrangement with the Government before they could run the railway, but he did not contemplate being unable to arrive at an arrangement. About the time they got the notice of expropriation from the Government, about November, 1904, the company began laying out considerable sums upon the improvement of the tram lines. He did not consider that that expenditure would have been unnecessary, even if the railway had been run by the company on the electric system.

Re-examined: The company prepared for promotion in Parliament three dif-forent Bills, and at no time did the Government raise any objection to the principle of the Bills. The Cape Electric Tramways did not have any interest originally in the Sea Point Syndicate.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Alexander James Robb, Assistant General Manager of Railways, said that he acted as General Manager in the absence of Mr. McEwen. Mr. McEwen was now absent in Natal in connection with the Customs Conference. Witness could speak as to the attitude of the Railway Department towards the question of electrification of the Sea Point Railway. The reports by officers of the department were universally against the electrification of the line. No point was raised as to the running powers of the railway, but there were minor difficulties. They regarded the quadruplication of the lines on the Dock-road as an impracticable proposition. As to the terminus at Cape Town, the department would object to another company running into their goods yard, because it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to work the goods yard with an outside company exercising control there. The terminus that the old company had was now actually merged into the goods yard. The present terminus was nearer the sea, upon recently-reclaimed land. The plaintiff company had not made application to the Government for rolling-stock for the Sea Point line. The cost of rolling-stock for that line would be about £60,000. The Railway Department carried traffic over the line for the military during the war at a very low rate, about sufficient to cover cost of haulage.

Cross-examined: Witness did not draw out the reports which had been prepared on the company's Bills. He believed that Fillis's Circus formerly stood on the site of the present station, at the foot of Adderley-street. He believed that the value of the rolling-stock at present on the line will be about £25,000 to £30,000. That was the value as second-hand rolling-stock. When witness said that the department were opposed to the Bill, he meant that they were opposed to the details; they were not inimical to the electrification of the line.

Harry Horne Elliott, Resident Engineer of the Western System of the Cape Government Railways, said that when he looked at the line last year the railway was not fit for heavy goods traffic or passenger traffic. So far as passenger traffic was concerned, it had the appearance of an abandoned railway. The Government had reconstructed the line, and had spent a very large amount upon it. They had spent between £24,000 and £25,000 in putting the line into order. That included about £1,500 for a little new work. The line, as it was previously, would not have been passed by the department as fit for traffic. They would not consent, if they could possibly help it, to another administration coming into the C.G.R. goods yard.

Cross-examined: The old Metropolitan Company used to run into the goods yard, but the traffic was then very much less. That was under a three months' agreement.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Mr. Schreiner: The case is much simplified by the admissions which have been made on behalf of the defendant. The disposal of the old company was, I submit a legal disposal. They sold the railway as a going concern, and if that was a lawful sale the Court will give judgment in our favour. Act 23 of 1889 authorised the construction of the railway. Sec. 5 gives the Company authority to take possession of vacant Crown land, but they never did so. Sec. 11 repeals Act of 1864 and gives the Company power to mortgage. A debenture is a floating charge. It is similar to our general bond. In England a railway company has no statutory power to mortgage its property; but it is not so with us. In England a railway company cannot be wound up under the Company's Act, and when the company goes into liquidation the debentures become valueless, but that is not our law. The English railway Acts give no power to issue debentures. True all English railways constitute themselves into companies, and as such issue debentures, but the debenture holders cannot foreclose.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Why not?]

It is only an inference from Marshall v. Staffordshire Tramway Company (72 L.T. 542) which shows the distinction between railway companies and tramway companies. A railway company in England cannot be wound up, and a railway cannot be sold by the company to which it belongs. In 1884 our debenture holders had no statutory recognition and hence the difficulty of financing a railway; but in 1889 that recognition was granted.

[De Villiers, C. J.: If you acquire rights to the ground over which you pass you may take your railway wherever you like.]

Certainly; but it is not the same with tramways. See Act 19 of 1861, and compare with the various Tramway Acts.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Is there anything to compel a railway to run trains?]

Not a word. The Cape Central Railway was authorised by Act 16 of 1883, which is closely parallel to Act 23 of 1889, but the Act of 1883 gave no power to issue debentures. The Cape Central went into official liquidation in England. Because it was a Colonial railway it also went into liquidation here; and in 1891 the English Court sanctioned the sale of the railway to the liquidators here. The property was purchased and the present Cape Central is working under no other authority than that sanction, and that purchase from the original proprietors. In Act 42 of 1898 we find that concession money was provided and the New Cape Central Railways acquired the property. That showed that Parliament was satisfied that the acquisition was lawful. See also Cape Central Railway In Re (1 C.T.R. 84) and the same case at (2 C.T.R. 352 and 380). The defendant must show where our practice as established by this Court in 1899 is wrong; a decision which was anticipated by the Court of Chancery in 1891 and 1892. Act 24 of 1899 clearly recognised that Government was to enter into an agreement with the plaintiffs and not with a dead company (viz., the old Metropolitan and Suburban Company). The purchase was made from the Metropolitan and Suburban Company subject to all equities, Sec. 21 of Act 24 of 1899 gives the directors a free power of sale, and Act 44 of 1906 distinctly recognises the rights of my client. As to electric power, see Act 25 of 1905. Anyone may use steam wherever he pleases, but not electric power. We purchased this railway as a going concern.

[De Villiers, C. J.: I do not see how a company can sell as a going concern when it is not under liquidation. Would not "with running powers" be a more correct term?]

"Running powers" is a technical English term; it would not imply what we mean: "working powers" might be better. Our point is that we stand in the same position as the Metropolitan and Suburban Railway Company.

Mr. Searle: There can be no question of estoppel here. The question is whether Act 23 of 1889 came to an end when the old company went into liquidation, unless 44 of 1905 revived it. That it could not do; and this brings me to the position of companies authorised by Private Acts. Take, e.g., the Milnerton Railway Company, they had no power of assignment and therefore they had to go to Parliament to assign. From the case of the Wellington Railway (see Act 15 of 1872) downwards, our Parliamentary practice shows that unless power to assign has been granted by the Legislature it must be acquired by subsequent Acts. See Hardcastle's Statutory Law (p. 284).

In case not only of Railway Companies but of all public companies, a company can neither give up its powers nor delegate them. Brice on Tramways, etc. (p. 545) and Gardiner v. L.C.D. Railway Company (2 L.T. 201 and 211). That was a case in which debentures had been issued. A Railway Company cannot transfer its business to other companies. Hodges on Railways (p. 54, 7th Edit.—citing Beaman v. Ruff). As to procedure in winding up companies, Hodges (p.p. 425, 537, 695). As to running powers, see Beaman v. Ruff (2 L.J. 1 Ch: 437), Winch v. Birkenhead Railway (5 D. G. and S., 562), Midland Railway v. G. W. Railway Company (42 L. J. Ch., 438), L. and B. Company v. L.S.W. Company (4 J. and J., 362). In re Richmond Water Works (3 Ch.D. 82, 99).

[De Villiers, C. J.: Why cannot a railway company hand over its rights to another company?]

Because an Act of Parliament may not be bought and sold. This is no question of cession of action, but of cession of powers and privileges. These cannot be ceded.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Suppose that a railway company here wishes to hand over its rights to another company, who could prevent it from doing so?]

Anybody having an interest.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Who would that be?]

Any public body, such as a Harbour Board or a Divisional Council or Primus e populo. The main question is whether a railway company has any powers of delegation. If these powers are inherent in such a company, why are there clauses in many modern Acts giving such powers? A liquidator could not carry on a railway; at all events it could not be done at once. The Kowlo Company went into liquidation, and by Act 33 of 1894, Sec. 6, their powers were conferred on their successors. As to our law, the preamble to Act 23 of 1889 shows that powers under an Act of Parliament cannot be assigned. See Acts 25 of 1884 and 8 of 1887.

[De Villiers, C. J.: The Act of 1884 was never acted upon.]

No, but why was Act 8 of 1887 passed. That shows that a new company must go to Parliament before it can avail itself of a previous company's Act. Compare Act 16 of 1896 with 16 of 1902, as to the Milnerton Railway.

[De Villiers, C. J.: A line of railway may mean either the line itself or the running powers over the line; what is the use of the rails without powers to run over them?]

If the property is serviceable we should have to pay for it. All our law goes to show that you cannot assign railway rights without a special enabling clause in your Act. As a running railway the Sea Point line was derelict. No doubt there was property there. If Act 23 of 1889 was still in force the Government might have assigned under Sec. 21.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Suppose one company sells to another its line of railway, would not the purchaser have running powers?]

No, the sanction of Parliament should be obtained, or the concession would be too obscure. But here we have a concession to the railway and to work the railway. It had been disused for years, and had not been kept open in terms of Act 19 of 1861. It is a valuable right not to work a railway, and we fear that the plaintiffs will claim that right. They have done nothing to utilise this railway; they do not want it, but they do want to throw all the traffic on the tramway. Our contention is that they should get compensation for such of their plant as would be serviceable for a railway, but we object to pay for privileges which no longer exist. See Attorney-General v. G. N. Company (5 Ap., 481). If the Company has no right to assign they are prohibited from assigning, Maxwell on Statutes (p. 363, 2nd Edit.). As to powers of liquidation, see 149 of the Insolvent Ordinance, but no person has power to sell Parliamentary privileges. As to estoppel, see Queen v. Hutchings (6 Q. B. 300). This case was cited with approval in Everest v. Strodle.

[Hopley, J.: Suppose the company had neglected to work the railway for six years, could they not have resumed working?]

I think not.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Then the question of assignment has nothing to do with your case.]

Oh yes; the disuse of the line together with the cession show that the Company were exceeding their rights.

[De Villiers, C. J.: The words of the concession were "as a going concern," why then could not the creditors of the original company come in?]

Like everybody else, they took what they could get, and there is but little chance of such an action now. On this point the liquidator was very careful. He only sold such legal rights as he might have.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Should not the arbitration have come first, and then you could have come to Court if there was any doubt as to the basis of arbitration?]

The application has been made by consent.

[De Villiers, C. J.: I do not see how the Act of 1882 is to tell the arbitrator how to decide on a point of law.]

[Mr. Schreiner: Possibly it may not go to arbitration.]

[Counsel having argued further on the facts.]

Mr. Schreiner was heard in reply.

Cur. Adv. Fult.

Postea (March 27th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The 4th section of Act 44 of 1905 empowers the Governor "to take over at a cost to be settled, failing agreement, by arbitration under the Lands and Arbitration Clauses Act 1882, the line of railway known as the 'Metropolitan and Suburban Railway,' authorised by Act 23 of 1889 to be constructed by the Metropolitan and Suburban Railway Company, together with all buildings and plots of land acquired by the said company and used in connection with the working of the said railway, as also all rolling stock, engines, carriages, plant, machinery, telegraph, or telephone apparatus, wire, instruments, and every matter or thing connected with the said railway or the working thereof." If that railway company had still been in existence at the date of the passing of the Act of 1905 there would have been no reasonable doubt as to the meaning of the section. The Act of 1889 had authorised the company not only to acquire, construct, and equip, but also to work and maintain the line of railway and the taking over by the Governor of such line of railway would include the taking over of the right to work such railway. Such taking over was to be at a cost to be settled, failing agreement, by arbitration, and in settling such cost, the arbitrators could not ignore the fact that the Government was taking over not only the material and plant, but also the right to work the railway at a profit or otherwise. It appears, however, that the company, after working the line for a short time with rolling-stock hired from the Government, was placed in liquidation by order of this Court on July 28, 1898. The official liquidators, in their report to the Court, recommended the acceptance of an offer from a syndicate called the Sea Point Railway Syndicate, to purchase the whole undertaking of the company as a going concern, for £20,000, upon the syndicate agreeing to take over all agreements existing between the company and other persons. This report was ordered to be duly published for the information of all concerned. No objections were raised, and on April 13, 1899, this Court approved of and confirmed the recommendation. The liquidators accordingly sold and ceded to the syndicate all rights, powers, privileges, and running powers of the company, as also the agreements just mentioned, including an agreement by which the company had undertaken to pay to the Town Council certain annual sums in consideration of certain running rights. The syndicate took possession of the line, and was treated by the Government as the owner of a going concern with all the rights and privileges of the defunct company. In 1901 the plaintiff company purchased from the syndicate all its rights in respect of the line. From that time until 1905, when the Act 44 of that year was passed, the Government treated the plaintiffs as the lawful owners of the line, and as such entitled to work the line. Negotiations were entered into between the plaintiffs and the Government with the view to the introduction by the plaintiffs into Parliament of a private Bill to authorise the transformation of the line of railway into an electric railway. No agreement was arrived at, but on November 26, 1904, the Government gave notice to the plaintiffs that the Government would request Parliament at its next session to authorise the exercise of the Governor's powers of expropriation under section 21 of Act 23 of 1889. The rights which could be acquired by the Government under the Act of 1889 did not differ in any material respect from the rights it could acquire under the later Act of 1905, and there can be no doubt that an expropriation under either Act would include the acquisition of the right of working the line of railway. Within six weeks after the passing of the Act of 1905 the Government published a notice in the "Government Gazette" that it was the intention of the Government to enter upon and take possession of the line of railway, and calling upon all persons and companies claiming rights to lodge their claims. The plaintiffs objected, and thereupon the Government, for the first time, raised the objection that there had been no legal assignment to the plaintiffs of the rights acquired by the original company under the Act of 1889. The Government took possession of the line, whereupon the plaintiffs applied to this Court for an order restraining the Government from interfering with the line except in conformity with the provisions of the Acts already mentioned as to compensation. Upon the hearing of the application the Court, with the consent of the parties, ordered that the Government take possession of the line, and that the compensation to be paid to the plaintiffs be settled by arbitration, such arbitration to be held over pending an action to be brought for a declaration that the plaintiffs were the purchasers of the railway as a going concern, and are entitled to be compensated upon the basis of the value of the railway as a going concern. The result was that the present action was brought. The defendant, by his plea, admits that the plaintiffs are entitled to be compensated for the value of the materials, plant, etc., and for any land, the plaintiffs' property, used for the line, and he tenders to pay such amount as may be assessed by arbitration. He denies, however, that the plaintiffs are entitled to compensation on the basis of the railway being a "going concern," if by that is meant (as it obviously is) that they had or have running powers in respect of that line. The question therefore arises whether, in view of the fact that compensation is to be paid to cessionaries of the line of railway, a different construction should be placed on the 4th section of the Act of 1905 from that which would have been adopted if the original owner had been the owner at the date of the passing of the Act.

The defendant's contention is, in effect, that the privilege of constructing and working the railway had been conferred on the original company exclusively, and that the company had no right to transfer that privilege to any other person or body. This contention raises a question of very great importance, but, in the view which I take of the case, it is not necessary for the Court to enter into a full discussion of that question. Mr. Searle has cited some passages from Voet (1, 4, 12, 13, and 14) in support of the defendant's contention, but, so far as they go, they appear to me rather to support the right of a company, to which statutory privileges have been conceded to transfer those privileges to others, if they are attached to a thing or undertaking, rather than to the person of the beneficiary. Where it is doubtful whether the privilege is real or personal, the fact that its exercise is for the benefit of the public is deemed a reason for holding that it was intended to be attached to the undertaking rather than to the person of the beneficiary. Assuming, however, that the original company in the present case had not the power, by its voluntary act, to transfer its right to work the railway to any other body, it does not follow that the legislature intended, by the 4th section of Act 44 of 1905 to place the defendants on a different footing, as to compensation, from that which the original company would have occupied. At the date of the Act the plaintiffs had already purchased the line of railway from a syndicate which in turn had purchased the line of railway from the liquidators of the original company under an order of this court. That order was in existence at the date of the Act, and it has never been reversed or even appealed against. Now, although I am always loth to impute to the legislature knowledge of existing facts, which could not be reasonably presumed to be known to it, I find it difficult to believe that the fact of the transfer under the order of court was not well known to the legislature. The Bill was introduced by the Government which had recognised the plaintiffs as the body entitled to work the line of railway. The report of the liquidators of the original company had been fully and widely published, the judgment of the Court had been fully reported in the newspapers, and the Government had in 1903 given notice of a motion in the House of Assembly as to the purchase of the line from its then owners. In regard to the validity of the order, it is difficult to see how it could now be impeached. There is no provision in our Companies' Act, as there is in England, excluding railway companies from liability to be wound up under the Act. The duty of the liquidators was to realise the assets and pay the debts of the company. Among the debts of the company were the debentures which it had issued in order to assist it in raising the necessary funds for carrying out the undertaking. These debentures had been issued under the express authority given by the Act 23 of 1889. The eleventh section of that Act enacts that "the directors may from time to time—as occasion may require—take up, by way of loan, to be secured by debentures, a sum or sums of money not exceeding in all an amount equal to one-half of the subscribed capital of the company, and such debentures shall constitute a first charge on the property, undertaking, and assets of whatever nature of the company." Without the right of working the railway, the remaining assets of the company would have been of very little value, and accordingly the liquidators sold the line of railway—as they expressed it—as a "going concern." As no objection was raised by the Government or by any other person concerned, the Court confirmed the sale. The purchasers, as well as the plaintiffs, who bought from those purchasers, were recognised by the Government as bodies endowed with the full rights enjoyed by the original company. Even now the defendant admits by his plea that the plaintiffs are entitled to be compensated for the value of the plant, materials, and land owned by them in connection with the railway. This admission involves the further admission that the plaintiffs are the persons with whom an agreement is to be made under the fourth section of Act 44 of 1905, and to whom, failing such agreement, the cost of "the line of railway" to be settled by arbitration is to be paid. For the reasons already stated, I am clearly of opinion that in taking over the line of railway the Government should pay for the value, whatever that may, in the opinion of the arbitrators, amount to, of the right to work the line of railway. The Court will therefore declare that in any arbitration by which the plaintiffs' compensation for the expropriation of the line of railway in question shall be settled, the plaintiffs are entitled to be compensated for the value of the right to work the said line of railway, and the defendant will be ordered to pay the costs of this action.

I wish to remark, in conclusion, that it is a somewhat unusual course to ask the Court to declare the basis of an arbitration before the arbitrators themselves have had an opportunity of forming their own opinion on the matter. The order that an action for a declaration of rights should be brought was made with the consent of both parties, and it is only by reason of such consent and order that I have considered myself at liberty to entertain the present action.

His Lordship added that Mr. Justice Hopley, before whom the case was also heard, concurred in the judgment he had given.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADELAINE V. LOTZ. { 1906.
Mar. 19th.

This was an application calling upon the respondent (defendant in the suit) to show cause why the evidence of one S. B. Joseph, a broker, should not be taken on commission.

The affidavit of J. E. Moore, one of the plaintiff's attorneys, stated that an action was pending between the parties as to the purchase price of certain goodwill and licence sold by plaintiff to defendant. The contract of sale was contained in certain broker's note, made by one S. B. Joseph, who was about to leave for Johannesburg on Wednesday, the 21st inst., and proceed thence to England, and who would not be in South Africa during next term.

The answering affidavit of Mr. Van Ryneveld, of Messrs. Dampers and Van Ryneveld, stated that defendant was a farmer, and the subject matter of the action was the alleged sale of the Good Hope Hotel, in Loop-street. It was essential for defendant's case, that the witness should give his evidence before the Court. Defendant's case would be prejudiced by the absence of the said Joseph.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for applicant; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor), was for respondent.

Sir H. Juta said that it was generally considered that the party who called a witness was the usual one to apply for his evidence being taken on commission. Here it was the other way about, but there was the broker's note to speak for itself, and one could not go behind that.

Mr. Schreiner said that the case was one of lack of capacity on the part of the defendant to enter into the contract and non-understanding of the document which he was called upon to and did sign. It was a case in which fraud and misrepresentation was raised, and he suggested that, if need be, the case should be postponed until such time as the witness Joseph would be able to give his evidence before the Court. It would be very prejudicial to the respondent if Joseph were not examined in Court.

[Hopley, J.: By whom is the fraud alleged to have been committed—Joseph?]

Mr. Schreiner: On the part of Joseph and plaintiff together.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If I thought defendant would be prejudiced in any way by the granting of the commission, and by the absence of Joseph from the trial, I should certainly refuse the application, but, as far as I can judge, it will really be the plaintiff who will be prejudiced by the evidence being taken on commission. It is for his interests that all his witnesses should be present, and give their evidence in person. The attorney for the defendant suggests at the close of his affidavit that he would be prejudiced, but he does not say how, and, in the absence of any statement how defendant will be prejudiced by the absence of Joseph, I do not see how he will be prejudiced. The Court will grant an order appointing Mr. Percy Jones commissioner to take the evidence of Joseph, costs to be costs in the cause.]

Ex parte THE BEDFORD { 1906.
AND COTTESBROOK MODEL { Mar. 20th.
DAIRY CO., LTD.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order authorising the reduction of the capital of the applicant company from £20,000 to £14,975, in accordance with resolutions adopted at a meeting of the shareholders. The petition stated that the memorandum and articles of association did not authorise a reduction of capital, hence the present application to the Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Under what section of the Act do you apply?]

Mr. Gardiner: Under section 35 and the following sections of Act 25, 1892.

[Hopley, J.: The application seems to be in the interests of the shareholders. The vendor is taking less shares.]

Mr. Gardiner: The vendor's capital is 5,000 fully-paid-up shares.

[Hopley, J.: He wants to tear up 2,000 of these shares?]

Mr. Gardiner: There are also 5,025 shares of the company unallotted, and we wish to reduce these by 2,050.

[Hopley, J.: It seems altogether in favour of the shareholders; their shares must become more valuable because of this reduction of the liabilities of the company.]

Mr. Gardiner: I do not think it would affect in any way the creditors of the company; their security is in no way reduced, because the shares which were given to the promotor were fully-paid-up shares.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Court will grant an order, and dispense with the use of the words "and reduce."]

HOLLAM V. MOWBRAY { 1906.
MUNICIPALITY. { Mar. 20th.

Municipal regulation—Ultra vires
—Fish-horn.

The appellant was convicted of the offence of blowing a fish-horn within the Municipality of M., in contravention of a regulation made by the Municipal Council under the 109th section of Act 45 of 1882.

Held, that as the mere blowing of a fish-horn by itinerant vendors of fish in ordinary course of their trade was neither a nuisance in terms of the 4th sub-section, nor interfered with the good rule and government of the Municipality in terms of the 27th sub-section, a regulation prohibiting such blowing, was ultra vires.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg, sitting at Mowbray, on the 12th July last, who had convicted the appellant of contravening section (a) of the amended municipal regulations framed by the Mowbray Council, under provisions of Act 45 of 1882. The offence alleged was that "upon or about the 6th day of January, 1906, and at or near Mowbray, in the said district, the said John Hollam did wrongfully and unlawfully disturb the public peace or quietude by making a loud or unseemly noise, by striking or blowing on a fish-horn in the Main-road of Mowbray aforesaid." Accused pleaded not guilty, but was convicted, and a fine of 10s. was imposed.

The grounds of the appeal were: (a) That sub-section (a) of the amended Mowbray Council regulations, promulgated by Government Notice No. 1,058 of the 5th October, 1905, is ultra vires of the powers vested in the respondent Municipal Council; (b) if the Honourable the Supreme Court is against the appellant on the above contention, then the letter, dated the 21st December, 1905, written by the Municipal Clerk to myself (appellant's attorney), and based on a resolution of the said Council, was a guarantee against prosecution, and the appellant ought not to have been convicted, he having had knowledge of the purport of the said letter; (c) against the conviction generally on the evidence before the Magistrate.

From the record, it appeared that a petition was put in during the proceedings in the Court below by the Municipal Clerk in favour of the abrogation of the bye-law prohibiting the use of fish-horns.

Mr. De Villiers was for appellant; Mr. Close was for the respondent Municipality.

De Villiers, C.J., said that surely a petition sent to the Municipality, and not sworn to by any of the signatories, could not be taken as evidence.

Mr. De Villiers said that he was surprised the Crown did not take objection in the Court below. The petition was signed by 88 ratepayers, who were in favour of the blowing of fish-horns, because the custom dated back a very long period, and it was looked upon as an ancient custom that should be allowed, and that it was a very effective way of bringing to the knowledge of those interested the fact that fish was on sale in the vicinity, and that the regulation was a hardship upon the fishmongers, as the class affected by this bye-law.

The record also contained a letter received by the attorney of the appellant from the Municipal Clerk, from which it appeared that the Council could not see their way to abrogate the bye-law, "but," it was added, "the Council is prepared to give you this assurance, that it will not enforce that bye-law in an exacting and arbitrary manner."

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is meant by "striking" on a fish-horn?]

Mr. De Villiers: I don't know, unless it contemplates some other instruments, because it says "striking or blowing upon a fish-horn, or other horn, or instrument."

[De Villiers, C.J.: But the charge is "striking or blowing upon a fish-horn?"]

Mr. De Villiers: I don't know whether my learned friend would seriously insist that defendant was "striking" a fish-horn?

Mr. Close: No; I think the charge is "blowing a fish-horn."

Mr. De Villiers said that this practice of blowing fish-horns had been acquiesced in by the public of the Colony and the Peninsula, and of Mowbray, and had been aided and abetted in—one might say by the public, who had made use of the blowing of the fish-horn for, perhaps, a century. Could it now be said that any blowing of a fish-horn was, per se, necessarily a public nuisance. Of course, the petition itself showed that, even in Mowbray, where there appeared to be a certain amount of public opinion against the fish-horn, yet there was a strong body of opinion in favour of the fish-horn. If the fish-horn was prohibited there might be a nuisance still by the perpetual ringing of bells and other instruments. Those who had plied the trade of fishmongers had a public custom in their favour; for more than 30 years they had, as of right and openly, blown the fish-horn. They had prescription in their favour.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If it is a nuisance there can be no prescription.]

Mr. De Villiers admitted that there could be no prescription, if it were a nuisance per se.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That is the real question—is it a nuisance?]

Mr. De Villiers urged that the length of time may prevent the character of a nuisance from attaching. He cited the cases of Welby v. Hornby and Rex v. Smith, as showing that a long passage of time may prevent the character of nuisance from attaching to an act which might otherwise have been a nuisance. Proceeding, he directed the Court's attention to a decision of the Chief Justice in 1890 in the case of Rex v. Huntworth and Others, which was an appeal arising out of a prosecution by the Municipality of the Paarl against the Salvation Army, or certain members thereof, for beating a drum in the public streets on Sundays. In that case the conviction of the Court below was quashed. He also called attention to a somewhat similar case, which afterwards came before the Court from Wellington, where, curiously enough, the bye-law forbade other noises except the fish-horn. Counsel contended that it was absurd after this length of time to come and try to set up the case that the fish-horn was a nuisance.

[De Villiers, C.J.: They say that people are becoming more and more nervous. I suppose our ancestors could stand it, but our contemporaries find it too much for their nerves.]

Mr. De Villiers: It may now be beneficial, really, that the fish-horn should be abolished, but, as your lordship laid it down in another case, however beneficial such a regulation may be, if it is beyond the powers of the Municipality, then, of course, it is ultra vires. Counsel went on to quote a number of Eng-fish decisions in support of his contention.

Mr. Close said that the real point before the Court was whether the bye-law came within the powers granted by the Act of 1882, and whether, in its terms, it was a reasonable bye-law. He claimed that the Council had power to frame the bye-law under the section which gave them power to deal with noisome and offensive trades. If a trade were carried on by means of making loud noises, he submitted that it would be a noisome trade to the extent of being noisy.

[Hopley, J.: "Noisome" is not "noisy," surely?]

Mr. Close: Both words are from the same Latin root; they are very much the same in idea. They are both connected with the idea of a nuisance. Proceeding, he contended that the question of what was a nuisance was very much a matter of degree, and that what constituted a nuisance in a thickly populated neighbourhood, such as they found in certain parts of Mowbray, might not be a nuisance in a more scattered area, as, for instance, on the main road between Kenilworth and Wynberg. As to the convenience of the customers, the Court might properly take cognisance of the fact that very often the horns went on blowing, but the carts did not stop. He could not see why the fish trade should be entitled to any special privileges in regard to the manner in which the goods should be vended above any other trade. If a municipality had the power under the section of the Act, then the Court would be going very far in accepting a municipality's own construction of what was reasonable for its own particular case. A regulation in one municipality might be unreasonable in another. They had the evidence that the fish horn was a nuisance, and counsel submitted that the Magistrate was justified in his conviction.

De Villiers, C.J., said municipal councils no doubt had the power to make regulations for certain purposes, but they should not exceed the authority conferred on them by law. In the present case the respondent relied upon the fourth sub-section, and the 27th sub-section, of section 109 of the Municipal Act of 1882, in support of the regulation under which the appellant was convicted. The fourth sub-section gave the power to make regulations for suppressing nuisances, houses of ill-fame, and gaming houses. It was wholly impossible to believe that the Legislature could have intended to include among the nuisances which were to be suppressed along with houses of ill-fame the blowing of a fish horn. Then, as to the 27th sub-section, for generally maintaining the good rule and good government of the municipality, of course, if it could be shown that the blowing of a fish horn in the street would interfere with good rule and government, then the regulation would be intra vires, but he did not believe that the blowing of fish horns by the itinerant vendors of fish in the ordinary course of their trade could constitute such an interference. In order to ascertain whether the appellant had been guilty of any offence in law, it was necessary to see what was actually done in the case. The appellant was driving through the streets with a fish cart. He saw a policeman, who stopped him, and asked him if he were aware the law prohibited the blowing of fish horns. The mere blowing of a fish horn, in the opinion of that policeman, was a contravention of the law, and he cautioned the appellant, who said that he believed all along that he was allowed to blow the horn. The appellant drove on, and when he proceeded some fifty or sixty yards, he turned round and laughed at the policeman. This was wrong on his part, but the blowing of the horn was done in the usual manner, and without being what the law would deem a nuisance. There was no evidence as to the nature of the noise, but he supposed the judges were allowed to bring into the consideration of the case their own knowledge of what took place in their immediate neighbourhood. Every day they heard these fish horns being blown, and it was impossible for anyone to say that it was such a nuisance as contemplated by the Act. The sound was certainly not very musical, and might affect the nerves of extremely sensitive persons; but laws were made for ordinary human beings, and cannot be adapted to the peculiar temperaments of each individual. These fish carts go through parts of the country where houses do not immediately adjoin the street. It was clear that they could not find the time to drive to every house. The housewives knew when the cart was passing, and if fish was not wanted, the cart passed along. It seemed to him to be a very useful kind of trade; useful to everyone concerned. Unless it was of such a nature as to endanger the health of the people or to become unbearable to people with ordinary nerves, he thought it would be going very far to say that the Legislature ever intended to make it an offence punishable by law. Here was a case where a fish-cart went through the suburbs and the moment it reached the limits of the Mowbray Municipality the driver was stopped blowing the useful horn. If the regulation was of such a nature as to render what had actually been done in the case punishable, then he said such a regulation was ultra vires. It might well be that a fish-horn might be blown in such a way as really to disturb the peace and quietude and to amount to a loud and unseemly noise. It was possible it could be used in such a way, but in the present case it was not. In this opinion if the regulation meant that a fish-horn should not be blown in such a manner as to disturb the peace or quietude by the making of a loud and unseemly noise, then there had been no contravention of the regulation. If it meant that it should not be blown at all, then the regulation was ultra vires. In either case he considered that the conviction was wrong. The appeal would be upheld and the conviction quashed.

Hopley, J., concurred.

REX V. NICHOL AND OTHERS.

This was an appeal from the R.M.'s Court of Cathcart against a decision convicting the appellants on a charge of malicious injury to property. Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for the appellants and Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown. The appellants, four school-boys, were fined in £1 5s. or two days' imprisonment each for throwing a butcher's cart over an embankment into a river bed. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said there was no reason why the case should have come into Court. The complainant behaved in a most reasonable manner, giving the delinquents a chance to bring back the cart. Even after the summons any advance made would have led to its withdrawal, and he was of opinion that the accused showed considerable malice. The appeal was brought on the grounds that the conviction was not supported by the evidence, that malice was not proved, and that the complainant admitted, in evidence, that the property did not belong to him.

Counsel for the appellants having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J., said the first question was whether an offence had been committed. The boys took a Scotch cart, which they saw standing in the street, they pushed it over the embankment four feet high into a river, which had two feet of water. On the face of that this was an injury to property, and very serious injury, and if it was done wantonly, then it became malicious. It was said it was a "lark" by the boys, but it was no "lark" to the owner of the cart. In his opinion it was a malicious act, and the Magistrate fully believed the evidence of the accomplices. He agreed with the Magistrate that the accused would have acted wisely if they had kept the case out of court, and they had again acted unwisely in appealing against a very proper decision.

Hopley, J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REX V. VAN DER BERG { 1906.
{ Mar. 21st.

Act 20 of 1894, Sec. 21—Sheep—Scab.

It is incumbent on an owner of sheep, who has reason for suspecting that his sheep are infected with scab, to use his best efforts to eradicate the disease and to give information to the inspector. He is not bound to dip the sheep if, owing to scarcity of water, that may not well be done.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Philip's Town, who had convicted appellant of contravening section 21 of the Scab Act (No. 20, 1894), in that he "did wrongfully and unlawfully, after having become aware that a certain flock of sheep, his property, had become infected with scab, failed to make proper and diligent efforts to cleanse such sheep."

From the record, it appeared that the prosecution was laid on the information of Sheep Inspector Isak J. Marais, who said that on the 20th November, 1905, he placed defendant's sheep under an order to dip, the sheep being scabby. On the 21st December he again visited this farm, and found that defendant's sheep had not yet been dipped. He gave instructions on the 20th November that the sheep must be dipped. On the 21st December he extended the order for 14 days further, and told accused that he would report his case, and that he (accused) would be summoned. On the 8th January, 1906, he inspected defendant's sheep, and found that they had then been dipped.

Mr. Watermeyer was for appellant; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Watermeyer said that the first ground of appeal was that the offence charged was not a contravention of this Act at all, and certainly not of the 21st section, because there was no duty laid upon the defendant by the Act to make efforts to cleanse his sheep between the 20th November and 21st December. He submitted that on the authority of Rex v. Theron (3 C.T.R., 166), the time allowed for cleansing the sheep was six weeks. The extra fortnight allowed by the inspector was, he urged, an extension of time within which the sheep could be dipped, and defendant dipped his sheep within the period. Counsel also submitted that the evidence did not support the conviction under the section of the Scab Act, because all that the evidence amounted to was that the appellant did not carry out the inspector's order, and that was evidently what was in the Magistrate's mind all the time. The Statute said "proper and diligent efforts to cleanse," and there was no evidence that appellant did not make effort to cleanse the sheep by other methods than dipping. The Act did not provide any penalty for not carrying out an inspector's order. It was in evidence that the only water available on the farm for domestic purposes was the water in a certain well.

Mr. Nightingale said that the accused was charged under section 21 that, after he became aware that his sheep were scabby, he failed to make proper and diligent efforts to cleanse such sheep. Section 21 required that when an owner of a flock should become aware that his sheep were infected, he should give notice. That the appellant in this case had done. On the 31st October he gave notice. Appellant was not charged with having failed to give notice to the sheep inspector, but he was charged with a different offence altogether. He was charged with having failed forthwith to proceed to make proper and diligent efforts to cleanse such sheep. They had this fact, that from the 31st October to the 20th November appellant made no efforts to cleanse his flock. That in itself was a contravention of the Act. Appellant was not charged with having committed a contravention of the order of the inspector; he had failed to dip the sheep, as the evidence showed, within the period of six weeks. The Act provided that that if at the end of the time allowed by the inspector, the owner had not cleansed the sheep, then the inspector may compulsorily dip them. It could not have been the intention of the Act that a flock-owner, whose sheep were infected, had merely got to give notice to an inspector, who might reside a great distance off, and that he should not himself make reasonable efforts to cleanse his own sheep.

Hopley, J., said it seemed that counsel for the Crown wanted to read the word "or" in the section as if it had been "and."

Mr. Nightingale said that the particular orders of the inspector were not material to the charge, and that, whatever view the Court might take of the evidence on record, the appellant had been rightly charged.

Hopley, J.: The history of this case seems to be that this man was living in a period of considerable drought on his farm, and with no water available, save such as he could draw from a well in the single cask that he seemed to possess, and that on the 31st October last he gave notice to the inspector that his sheep, he thought, were beginning to suffer from scab. In his letter he says: "I had no water in which to dip, and my neighbours had no water. Let me know what I must do; I am hand-dressing, but I do not know whether I shall be able to beat the disease." Now, the Act only requires an owner, when he suspects, or has reasonable ground to suspect, that his sheep have become infected with scab, to give seven days' notice to the inspector, and to do his best to make proper and diligent efforts to cleanse such sheep." These duties, no doubt, are concurrent, and the Act means that he should not sit still if he could possibly avoid it; but he should do his best to try and eradicate the disease, and he must also tell the inspector. It is clear that he told the inspector and that he told him of the difficulties that he had in combating the disease, and that it was impossible for him to make what, under ordinary circumstances, were "proper and diligent efforts." He did what the Act enjoined upon him, and in so doing he threw upon the inspector the duty to come and see and advise him as to the exact measures that ought to be taken under the circumstances. The inspector came about three weeks afterwards, and he found that the sheep were infected with scab. He then gave an order allowing four weeks in which to dip and cleanse the sheep. There seemed to be no handy means of doing this, and when the inspector, slightly over four weeks afterwards, appeared again, he found that the sheep had not been cleansed. Then he might possibly have said, "You have taken no steps whatsoever to obey this order I shall now proceed with the remedy the law allows and dip the sheep myself." He did not do that; he extended the order for a fortnight. Then, when he called again, he found that his orders had been obeyed, and that the sheep had been cleansed. Now, defendant is prosecuted for not having cleansed the sheep before the expiration of the order, when the inspector visited his farm the second time. It seems to me that the authorities have missed their way. Once the inspector had taken this line, I do not think that he could revert to the previous section, and say that appellant did not make under section 21 "proper and diligent efforts" to cleanse his sheep in the first instance. He began by charging him with a contravention of the 22nd section for not obeying his (the inspector's) orders, but then, because he has obeyed his orders, he would hark back to the 21st section, and say that appellant could be held responsible for not having done everything reasonable to cleanse the sheep, irrespective of the inspector's orders. The question is, will the Act bear such an interpretation? The section says that every owner failing to make such efforts, or give such notice within seven days as aforesaid, shall be deemed to be guilty of a contravention of this Act. Now, I must read this Act strictly, and it seems to me that these words give the sheep owner an alternative. It is cast upon him certainly to do both these things, but if he does one of the two, cleanses his sheep or gives timely notice to the inspector, he shall then be held to have done his duty, and not to have contravened the Act. That is my construction of the meaning of that section. If it is subversive of the policy of the Act, as Mr. Nightingale suggested that it may be, all I can say is that it is for Parliament to remedy the Act, and not for me. It seems to me that the proceedings have been misconceived in the present case, and that the appeal should be allowed. The appeal will be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

[Appellant's Attorney: G. Trollip.]

REX V. VAN QUICKELBERGE AND OTHERS.

Liquor licence—Act 28 of 1898.

The appellant and her sons were executors in the estate of one V. Q. He had been the holder of a retail liquor licence. The appellant and her sons had been convicted of selling liquor to natives without a permit. V. Q.'s licence had not been transferred.

Held on appeal, that as V. Q.'s licence had not been transferred to the executors, they were not liable in a criminal case, and the conviction must be quashed.

This was an appeal brought against a decision of the Resident Magistrate of King William's Town, by which three of the appellants were fined in £10 each, or a month's imprisonment, for selling liquors to natives without permits. The appellants were the executors testamentary in the estate of the late Desire van Quickelberge, of Green River. They were summoned in their capacity as executors testamentary for a contravention of section 2, of Act 28, of 1898. The police had reason to believe that liquor was being sold to natives, and traps obtained liquor from Ernest Quickelberge, who was in charge of the place at the time. The two brothers of Ernest lived some twenty-two miles from the canteen, and the widow, the third accused did not live at the hotel.

Mr. Burton was for the appellants, and Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Counsel urged that it was the clear duty of the Crown to show that in their capacity the accused were managing the business. The question was, who was responsible for the carrying on of the business? the licence of which had never been transferred. The Magistrate was quite mistaken in assuming because they were executors in the estate they were responsible for the carrying on of the business. It might be that one or other of these persons was liable, but they were not liable simply because they were executors.

Mr. Nightingale having called the Court's attention to several points in the record of evidence,

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (March 22nd).

Hoppey, J.: In this case Julia van Quickelberge and three of her sons were summoned in their capacity as executors testamentary of the estate of the late Desire van Quickelberge on a charge of contravening section 2 of Act 28, 1898, by selling in their said capacity liquor to natives contrary to the conditions of their licence. One of the accused was not present at the trial. The widow and two of her co-executors appeared and pleaded not guilty. They were, however, convicted and sentenced. The material facts are that in April last the deceased was granted a licence to sell liquor at a place described as the hotel at Green River—which is also in parts of the evidence referred to for purposes of identification as "Quickelberge's Hotel," and "the hotel of the accused." Whether this hotel, to which seems to be attached a shop and a bar where liquors are sold, forms, or does not form, portion of the estate of the deceased, has not been proved in any way. It may, under antenuptial contract, belong to his widow, or it may be a leasehold of which, since his death, the widow or some other member of his family has acquired the lease. On this important point the evidence leaves us in the dark. Desire van Quickelberge died before the end of 1905, and letters of administration were granted to the accused as executors testamentary on December 21, 1905. Apparently the widow has continued to reside at the hotel, but her co-executors all seem to reside away from there, being according to the letters of administration resident in Berlin, Blancy, and Aliwal North, all in this Colony. The liquor licence for the premises has not been transferred, but is still in the name of the deceased, or was so, at all events, at the time of the alleged contravention of the law on January 12, 1906. On that day some brandy was sold to some natives, who were police traps, in the bar aforesaid by one Ernest van Quickelberge, a son of the deceased, but not one of the executors, and upon such case the prosecution was instituted. Now section 62 of Act 28, 1883, provides that in case of the death of any holder of a licence, his widow (if any) or the executor of the deceased person, or in certain cases curator bonis, or a person approved of by the magistrate may carry on the business until the next meeting of the Licensing Court either personally or by agent approved of by any writing under the hand of the Resident Magistrate, without any formal transfer of the licence. The cases of the curator bonis and of the person or agent approved of by the Magistrate do not arise in these proceedings, since there has been no such appointment or approval, and we are consequently confined to the situations created by the personal carrying on of the business by either the widow or the executors—unless, indeed, some third party has been allowed to step in in an unlawful way to manage and carry on the business on his own account. It is clear that the business is being carried on—but in a prosecution like the present, which charges persons with a contravention of the law by reason of the Acts of an agent, it is part of the duty of the prosecutor to prove for whom such agent was acting. On this point the evidence is strangely defective. Nor does it appear to me that any presumption is raised of sufficient strength to warrant a finding. If the hotel had been proved to belong to the deceased's estate, some presumption might have arisen that the executors were not sundering from it the licence, and that they were carrying on for the benefit of the estate; but that has not been proved. The fact that the widow actually resides on the premises and that a son of hers, not one of the executors, manages the bar, would seem rather to point to the presumption that she was carrying on the business as widow for her own benefit, and not as executrix for the benefit of the estate; and the only direct evidence as to the person who is carrying on the business seems to point to Ernest van Quickelberge who made the sale of the liquor, and who, when interrogated by the police, described himself as the proprietor of the hotel. It is true that when he gave his evidence he seemed to modify such a statement by saying that he was managing the hotel in his mother's absence on the day in question; but if that was the case, it would point to the widow as the interested party, for it is not proved that she resided or managed there as executrix. It appears to me, therefore, that there is no evidence that is satisfactory to show whether the widow or the executors were carrying on the business, and that at all events the evidence is defective in not proving conclusively that the accused as executors were so carrying it on. On this ground, and on this ground only, I hold that the appeal must be allowed, and I regret this conclusion, as the whole of the evidence convinces me that there were the illicit sales of liquor on the day in question by Ernest van Quickelberge, who, however, was not charged with any offence. The appeal is allowed, and the conviction quashed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REX V. PRETORIUS. { 1906.
 { Mar. 22nd

Magistrate—Finding on facts—
Tainted evidence.

Hopley, J., said that a case from the Magistrate's Court at Victoria West had come under review, which he had submitted to his brother Judges. The case was that of the King v. Willem Pretorius, in which the Magistrate had taken a preliminary examination against Pretorius. At first, he was charged with one Koos Jooste, and the Attorney-General had remitted the case against Pretorius to be tried. The Magistrate had tried Pretorius, and had found him guilty of the crime of the theft of stock, and sentenced him to twelve months' imprisonment, with hard labour, and fined him besides. Pretorius and Jooste were two coloured men, working for a Mr. Wieso at a farm called De Dam, close to Victoria West, and very close to the native location there. These two people were employed by Wieso as shepherds, and another servant that he engaged was a girl called Marie Moss. Now, Marie Moss was a woman who had a husband in the location, with whom apparently she no longer lived. When she first came to the farm she transferred her affections to the prisoner Pretorius, and lived with him for a time, but, she said, "I got tired, and threw him away." Having discarded Pretorius, she seemed to have committed herself for a short while to Jooste, who also had a wife living at the place. It was evident that Moss was on bad terms, as was natural, with Jooste's wife, though she herself denied it. When the present case arose against the two prisoners, this Marie Moss seemed to have got another man, David Kleinbans, who at all events was sleeping in her hut. Now, the owner of the sheep suspected nothing against the prisoners until some time or other in January, when it appeared that Moss wrote to Jooste, who had then left the farm, asking him to come back, but he declined, and it was then that she went to her master with this story, that he must keep Pretorius from her, and she would tell him something, and thereupon she told him that these two men had been habitually stealing his sheep, accusing them of some four or five thefts. Wiese had, it is true, lost some ten sheep, but he did not know exactly when, and he said that he always suspected the natives of stealing his sheep, which was extremely likely under the circumstances. There was no satisfactory proof that any theft had been committed on the farm, outside the evidence of Moss and Kleinbans, both of whom were accomplices. It was difficult to say why this should have been remitted to the Magistrate at all. It would be extremely dangerous under any circumstances to accept the woman's evidence. It might very well be that she was wanting revenge on Jooste, so that she brought this charge against him, and she seemed to have been on bad terms with Pretorius, and had complained that he was pestering her. With her motives so apparent from the circumstances, it seemed to him (the learned Judge) that the Magistrate ought not to have convicted on her evidence. He thought it was a pity that the case was remitted to the Magistrate. It would have been very much better to have brought it before a Judge and jury, so that they could weigh the evidence. He did not think that substantial justice had been done in this case, and he had submitted the matter to his brother Judges, who were not disinclined to that view. They were all agreed that the conviction should be quashed. The conviction would, therefore, be set aside.

REX V. FRASER.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Flagstaff, who had convicted appellant, George Hobart B. Fraser, of wilfully and unlawfully wounding a bull, and had sentenced him to pay a fine of £2, or in default one week's imprisonment. Mr. Gardiner was for appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Gardiner said that he admitted the wounding of the bull, but denied the wilfulness of the wounding. He submitted that the man had good cause for his action, and that defendant's liability, if any, was a civil and not a criminal liability. The bull was dangerous, and running at defendant, and he fired his revolver. That the animal was dangerous was apparent, because no less than ten people had been chased by this very bull. Counsel submitted that the shots were fired by appellant in self-defence. There was such a strong doubt in the case that the Magistrate ought to have given the accused the benefit of it.

Without calling upon Mr. Jones,

Hopley, J.: I have carefully read the evidence in this case, and, while I feel with Mr. Gardiner that there are many points in which it is not altogether satisfactory, I still have to ask myself whether there is not sufficient evidence before the Magistrate to have found the verdict which he has found. He has, of course, to find that the shooting of this bull, with which the man was charged, was wilful and unlawful, and he has so found. Now the evidence is of two kinds. There is the evidence which shows that this bull had followed the cattle of the accused into his paddock, and that the bull was comparatively harmless there, and could have easily been got rid of by the servants of the owner of the bull, and by the servants of accused, who are Kafirs. Accused admits that he saw the bull in his paddock, and he says that he took no further notice at that stage, but got his gun, and went into the bush to shoot. On his return, the boys do not seem to have got the bull away, and he then deliberately armed himself with a revolver in his own house, and went and with his revolver shot at the animal, because, he said, he knew it to be a vicious and bad-tempered animal. Of course, if this had been done in self-defence, then the Magistrate would, under the circumstances, have found him not guilty. But the Magistrate did not take that view of the case; he took the other view, that this man went there with a revolver and intentionally and deliberately shot this bull for the purpose of annoying his neighbour (Mr. Ball), with whom he was on bad terms. That they were on bad terms is abundantly clear from the evidence. The owner of the bull had written letters, and had had altercations with the accused, and had called him very uncomplimentary names. The Magistrate saw the witnesses, and he chose which evidence he should believe, and it is impossible for me, sitting here as a Court of Appeal, to say that his view of the evidence was not correct. He has conscientiously found a verdict, and it is not for me sitting here to say that that is a wrong verdict. The appeal will be dismissed.

Ex parte VAN HEERDEN.

In reference to this matter, which was mentioned yesterday,

Hopley, J., informed Mr. Payne (counsel for petitioner) that he had noticed that the petitioner desired to leave for Pretoria. Was it, he asked, petitioner's intention to leave very shortly?

Mr. Payne said that he believed petitioner desired to leave at the end of this month. He wished to be admitted as an attorney and notary. As far as he understood, Van Heerden desired to take his examination at Graham's Town on his way to Pretoria, and thus avoid the expense of a special journey.

[Hopley, J.: It seems to me that there would be no difficulty in that case.]

Mr. Payne said he understood that it was not merely a matter of examination, but petitioner wished to be admitted before he left.

Hopley, J., suggested that notice should be given of the application to the Law Society, and that it might then be set down for hearing next Tuesday.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte FERREIRA. { 1906.
Mar. 22nd.

Mr. Upington moved for leave to raise a mortgage not exceeding £800 upon certain farm in the Willowmore district to enable petitioner (the usufructuary) to replace by pipes a furrow which had been carried away during floods. The matter had been standing over for production of fuller information, which was now furnished in affidavits by petitioner and his legal adviser.

Order granted allowing property to be mortgaged as prayed, security to be given to the satisfaction of the Master, costs of the application to be borne by the fund.

FOUCHE V. INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

This was an application by Philip Jacobus Fouche for leave to include a certain period in articles of clerkship. Mr. Payne was for applicant and Mr. Gardiner was for the Law Society.

From the affidavits, it appeared that there had been two interruptions in applicant's service of clerkship with Mr. Gideon S. Cloete, attorney, of Lady Grey—during the closing of Mr. Cloete's office owing to the occupation of the village by the Republican forces, and during applicant's absence at Stellenbosch pursuing his studies for matriculation. He had also for a period performed the duties of Town Clerk at Lady Grey. The Law Society refused to recognise the breaks in service, and directed applicant to enter into fresh articles on the 5th March, 1904.

His Lordship strongly commented upon the action of Mr. Cloete in accepting the office of Town Clerk and putting his clerk to do the work. It was all very well for the principal to draw his £50 or £60 a year for these little offices, and put his clerks to do the work, but all the same, it was a reprehensible practice.

Mr. Gardiner said that the Law Society objected to applicant, after he had entered into fresh articles, going back to the former articles, the service of which had been so seriously interrupted, and counting in the service he had then given.

Mr. Payne argued that there could be no doubt as to the efficiency of applicant, and submitted that, on the authority of the previous cases decided in the court, indulgence should be given as prayed.

Mr. Gardiner having been heard in reply,

Hopley, J., said that he did not see any reason for interfering with the course that events had taken in this case, and why the Court should grant an indulgence to the applicant. He thought the applicant should continue service under his present articles. There would be no order as to costs of the application. He thought that the attorney with whom applicant was articulated was more to blame than Fouche was for the irregularities which had been committed, especially in the matter of the Town Clerkship.

COCHRANE V. NQXAMNQXA.

Execution debtor — Seizure by messenger — Damages for wrongful seizure.

The defendant, a messenger of a Magistrate's Court, finding a native, against whom he held a writ of execution, in possession of a horse, took it in execution. The native said that it belonged to the plaintiff, but the defendant did not believe him. The defendant kept the horse for a few days, and having in the meantime satisfied himself that the horse belonged to the plaintiff, he offered to return the horse. The plaintiff refused to take it unless he got damages for the detention of the horse. The evidence showed that at the time of the seizure the defendant acted bona fide, without negligence, and that he had reasonable grounds for believing that the native was the owner.

Held, that the defendant was not liable in damages for illegal seizure and detention.

These matters came before the Court on appeal from the Resident Magistrate's Court at Stutterheim.

From the record, it appeared that the appellant (Messenger of the Resident Magistrate's Court at Stutterheim) had been sued for the alleged wrongful attachment of a certain horse, saddle, and bridle, in satisfaction of a writ for £30, issued in the suit of one John Johnstone, against Michael, who was in possession of the property when attached.

Michael is uncle of Elias, they both reside in the Komgha district, and the Messenger detained the horse, saddle, and bridle for a few days. After correspondence between the parties' agents, the Messenger offered to return the property, but this was refused unless he tendered damages. The result was that Michael had to go back to his home on foot. Elias, the owner, sued the Messenger for return of the horse, saddle, and bridle, or payment of value, £15, and also £5 damages, for wrongful detention. The Magistrate gave judgment for the plaintiff for £3 damages, with costs, and delivery of the horse, saddle, and bridle by noon of the following day, failing which the defendant to pay the value thereof as claimed. Michael also claimed £10 damages against the Messenger for what he described as "inconvenience, and loss of dignity," in having to walk from Stutterheim to Komgha. He was given judgment for £3, with costs. The main line of the defence was that there appeared to be some doubt as to whether Michael was or was not the real owner of the animal, the Messenger stating that his experience was that natives usually, when their cattle were seized under a writ, said that the stock belonged to some relative. He admitted that Michael had been employed under him formerly for a period of nine years as a constable, and that he had found him reliable.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment in the first case, said he considered that the defendant, as Messenger of the Court, before seizing the horse, should, in terms of the 42nd Rule of Court, have demanded payment of the debt from Michael. He found that he (Cochrane) had not sufficiently reasonable ground for disbelieving Michael's statement that the horse was borrowed, and did not belong to him. He was of opinion that the security tendered by Michael's agent in terms of Rule 44 should have been accepted by the Messenger, if considered ample. The Magistrate added: The reasons here given apply also to the case of Michael.

Mr. De Villiers was for appellant; Mr. Benjamin was for respondent in each case—Elias Ngesman and Michael Nqamnxqa.

[De Villiers, C.J.: One can understand a judgment for Ngesman, but I do not understand how it is possible to give a judgment for Michael.]

Mr. De Villiers: It is probably the first case in which such a judgment has been given in this colony. Counsel went on to cite the cases of Olivier v. Keating, Ashburner v. Ryan, and Louw v. Fyfe. He added that he did not know whether the Court would like to hear him on the point that appellant first attached the horse and then demanded payment.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is quite clear that even if he had first demanded payment, he would not have got it.]

Mr. De Villiers contended that the messenger acted most prudently and cautiously, the debtor having previously left the district on a horse to avoid a writ. On the point as to whether the messenger should have believed Michael's statement, counsel submitted that the appellant had ample grounds for regarding Michael's statement with suspicion.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the proceedings on the part of the messenger were irregular throughout. In the first place, he should have made a demand upon the debtor before he actually seized the property. If the messenger chose not to follow the procedure laid down in the 42nd rule, he must do so at his own risk. There appeared to have been an excess of zeal by the messenger on behalf of the judgment creditor. There was, he submitted, proof of mala fides in the seizure made by the messenger. The writ had actually lapsed when the messenger made the attachment. Counsel, however, withdrew this statement a little later on its being pointed out to him that the writ was not returnable until August, 1906. Michael was a man of some substance; he was a man of good character, and there appeared to be no reason why the messenger should have doubted his word.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that it was very foolish of the owner to refuse the tender of the horse by the messenger. He asked counsel how the amount of £3 damages was arrived at.

Mr. Benjamin said that the Magistrate exercised his discretion, and did not seem to have awarded an illiberal amount.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Michael says his dignity was offended by having to walk.]

Mr. Benjamin: I don't know how much the Magistrate found upon the "loss of dignity," and how much upon the "inconvenience" of having to walk.

De Villiers, C.J.: A judgment was obtained in the Magistrate's Court by one Johnstone against Michael, and a writ of execution was duly issued, returnable apparently at a very long period. At a date subsequent to the issue of the writ, the Messenger of the Court met Michael on horseback, and he naturally supposed that this native, who was riding, was the owner of the horse. That was the natural conclusion, and accordingly he claimed the right to attach, and he did attach the horse. It is said that no previous demand had been made, but it is quite clear, from what followed, that any demand would have been wholly nugatory, because Michael was wholly unable to pay the debt. Therefore, the absence of a demand, in my opinion, should not weigh at all in the present case. The Magistrate laid considerable stress upon the fact that no demand had been made, but it is quite clear any demand would have met with no result. Michael at once told the messenger (the defendant in the present case, and now appellant) that the horse did not belong to him, but had been lent to him by one Elias. The messenger says he did not believe the man, for he was a relation of Elias, and in all probability was, as natives frequently do, protecting himself against the execution creditor. Some correspondence ensued, in the course of which the attorneys for Michael offered security, but the answer was, "The man who claims the horse is, you say, Elias. You say Elias is the owner. It is for him to give security." Subsequently Elias did claim the horse, and after the defendant had been in possession for six days he thought better of it and delivered back the horse, or, rather, offered it for delivery to Elias. Elias, however, refused to take the horse unless it was accompanied by damages. In my opinion Elias wholly misunderstood his rights. Even if entitled to damages, he should have accepted the horse and brought his action for damages afterwards. Now, it is quite clear, if the messenger had refused to deliver the horse, that Elias would have had an action for the horse or its value, as against the messenger, because, of course, that would have been a case of vindication of a man's property. But the action in the present case does not proceed upon that ground, but on the ground of dereliction of duty on the part of the messenger. The Messenger has duties to perform; he is often between the devil and the deep sea. On the one hand there is the judgment creditor insisting upon having his writ carried out, and on the other hand there is always the danger of seizing the wrong property. If the messenger uses his best judgment, if he is not guilty of any mala fides or negligence, he surely cannot be held liable. I fail to see what ground there is for imputing mala fides. He naturally believed this native riding the horse was the owner, although he subsequently changed his mind. In my opinion the magistrate erred in giving judgment against the appellant. There is not sufficient proof of mala fides or of negligence to have justified that judgment. As to the other case of Michael against the messenger, it is impossible to conceive upon what ground the Magistrate arrived at his decision. Michael, at all events, was in possession of the horse, and he could not complain that the horse was taken to be his. He was the man who had to pay the debt, and consequently I fail to see how he could possibly complain of the conduct of the messenger in taking the horse found in his possession, in consequence of a judgment debt which he owed. In regard to his case also, I am of opinion that the Magistrate erred, and in both cases the appeal should be allowed and judgment entered for the defendant with costs in both courts. It should be understood that the defendant will forthwith return the horse to Elias.

ODENDAAL V. MARKS. { 1906.
 { Mar. 26th.

Acts 21 of 1876 and 43 of 1885—
Magistrate's jurisdiction in Illiquid cases for price of goods.

In an action brought in a Resident Magistrate's Court by the part owner of a motor car against another part owner for the sum of £40, being the loss sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the defendant having wrongfully sold such car, the defendant excepted to the jurisdiction.

Held, that the claim being illiquid, and not for the price of goods sold, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction beyond £20.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of Prince Albert, who had found for the plaintiff in the sum of £40 in respect of a third share in a motor-car. Mr. De Villiers was for appellant; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was respondent.

Mr. De Villiers said an exception had been taken to the summons on the ground that the amount of £40 was beyond the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The plaintiff was one of the partners in a motor-car with the defendant, and the defendant, without the consent of the plaintiff, sold the car. The plaintiff sued for £45, which represented a third share, the amount being reduced to £40 to bring the case within the Magistrate's jurisdiction. Under the Act 43 of 1885 the jurisdiction of the Court of R.M. was extended to £100 in all cases of merchandise, goods, etc., but here the plaintiff sued for the value of his share.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That is really an action for damages.]

Mr. Jones quoted a section of the Act, and pointed out that it suggested that the Magistrate would have jurisdiction up to £40, so far as damages were concerned. The word "damages" was distinctly used. If the Magistrate only had jurisdiction up to £20, then the word was meaningless.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is clear that this is not an action for the purchase price of any share in a motor-car; it is an action for damages for wrongful conversion, and it cannot be treated as if for the price of any merchandise goods, or other movable property. The Resident Magistrate therefore had no jurisdiction by virtue of sub-section (b), section 5 of Act 43 of 1885. The plaintiff, however, contends that the requisite jurisdiction was conferred by the 6th section of that Act. The real meaning of a portion of that section is somewhat obscure, but I am satisfied that if the Legislature had intended to increase the jurisdiction of Magistrates, in ordinary illiquid cases, from £20 to £40, it would have done so in express terms. For the purpose of increasing the Magistrates' jurisdiction in liquid cases to £100, and afterwards to £250, it was deemed necessary to introduce the second section of Act 21 of 1876, and afterwards sub-section (a) of Act 43 of 1885. In the same way, for the purpose of increasing the jurisdiction in actions for the recovery of the price of goods sold to £100, it was deemed necessary to enact the provisions of sub-section (b) of section 5 of Act 43 of 1885. If the plaintiff's contention be correct, the Magistrate would have jurisdiction in actions for the price of goods even exceeding £100, provided that no objection was taken by the defendant, and such clearly was not the intention of the legislature. An action for more than £250 in liquid cases, or for more than £100 in illiquid cases, for the price of goods, cannot under the Act of 1885 be brought in a Magistrate's Court; but if either of such actions be brought for more than £40, and less than £250 in the one case and £100 in the other, the defendant must raise the objection mentioned in the 3rd section of the Act of 1876, and give the requisite security. The Magistrate, in my opinion, erred in over-ruling the exception to his jurisdiction, and the exception must now be allowed with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

SUPREME COURT

ADMISSION.

Ex parte VAN HEERDEN. } 1906.
 } Mar. 27th.

Mr. Payne moved for the admission of the applicant as an attorney and notary, and for leave to take the oaths before the R.M. of Bedford. Counsel said that the application was urgent, as the applicant wished to leave for Pretoria at the end of the month, and to take the oaths before he went to the Transvaal.

Order granted as prayed.

SALVAGE ASSOCIATION OF } 1906.
 LONDON V. SALVAGE SYN. } Mar. 27th.
 DICATE, LTD. } " 28th.

Ownership—Abandonment—First finder—Salvage—Shipwreck.

The owners of a cargo which had been shipwrecked abandoned it to the underwriters, who took no effectual steps for seven years to raise the cargo. The respondents then began operations for salvaging the cargo.

Held, that there was not sufficient proof that the owners had abandoned their rights to any one else than the underwriters; and that although the respondents might be justified as against others than the owners, or representatives of the owners in appropriating the cargo, they could not do so against the will of the underwriters, who had acquired the rights of the owners.

A person cannot be held to have abandoned his property without clear proof of his intention so to abandon it.

This was the return day of a rule nisi granted by the Court temporarily interdicting the respondents from proceeding with certain salvaging operations on the wreck of the Thermopylae, lying off Three Anchor Bay. Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the applicants; Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for respondents.

Mr. Searle asked that the matter should be allowed to stand over to enable the applicants to reply to certain affidavits filed by respondents on Monday afternoon.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Until when, Mr. Searle?]

Mr. Searle: I think we could reply to-day.

Sir H. Juta said that there was no urgency in the matter, because there was a rule nisi given, and the respondents had to keep an account.

Mr. Searle said his clients wished the matter to be disposed of, and not to stand over until an indefinite date. The respondents had been interdicted from carrying on further operations, and this interdict applicants wished to be made absolute.

Sir H. Juta said that he had been about to ask whether the interdict could not be amended. The point of the case was simply this: there was a wreck, respondents said that it was abandoned by whoever was the owner, respondents had been working at it for some time, and had been taking the bullion out of it, and now applicants came down and claimed to be owners. It was very fine weather at present, and to whoever this wreck might be found to belong would benefit by the fact that respondents might be able to work during this weather.

De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Searle): Would you object to their continuing to work it and keeping an account?

Sir H. Juta: We have to deposit everything at the Custom House, so that there is no question of an account.

Mr. Searle: My client instructed me to oppose, because he is not sure what may be taken out of the wreck.

Sir H. Juta: Then we are criminally liable.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How long has this treasure been hidden—since 1899?]

Counsel replied that there was a good deal of salvage by the applicants after the wreck, but he did not know how long that went on.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I suppose the question will be whether there was an abandonment by the owner?]

Mr. Searle acquiesced.

Sir H. Juta: We have been working for months without a word of objection.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did applicants know it?]

Sir H. Juta: Oh, yes, they were watching the work.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Perhaps they thought you were finding valuable treasure?]

Sir H. Juta: We have been finding treasure, and we have been paying a royalty to the Government. I was going to ask whether this really was a matter that your lordship could determine on affidavit? It seems a pity that in this fine weather we cannot go on working the wreck.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Searle): It seems rather a serious suspicion to throw out against these people.]

Mr. Searle: I am sorry to have to make it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Unless applicants have some reasonable ground for the suspicion, it is a suggestion which they should not make.]

Mr. Searle: They felt this difficulty in the matter; they would prefer that this matter should be heard to-morrow.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you say I could decide the question of abandonment on motion? Will there be any conflict of evidence on that point?]

Mr. Searle: I think the facts will be admitted more or less on that question.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Very well, let it stand over. If it stands over until to-morrow only, there is no necessity for giving leave to proceed with the operations.]

Sir H. Juta applied for leave to continue the salvaging operations to-day, remarking that the weather was very propitious. He added that the material that the respondents were salvaging was metal, not coin.

De Villiers, C.J., however, directed that the whole matter should stand over until to-morrow.

Postea (March 28th).

From the affidavits which had been filed, it appeared that the Thermopylae was wrecked in September, 1899, and that formerly operations were carried out by the owner, as a result of which about £30,000 worth of cargo was salvaged. These operations were discontinued, and the next move was that made by the respondent syndicate, of which Mr. Richard Arderne Wilson is chairman, and which was formed principally for the purpose of searching for and recovering treasure-trove from abandoned wrecks. The syndicate approached the Government, or, rather, Captains Percy Gardiner and Gustav von Zweigberg did, for permission to work the wreck Thermopylae, and permission was obtained to work the wreck from the Treasury. On the 15th January, 1906, operations were begun, and after the salvagers had been at work for some time they located the wreck, which was sunk about six fathoms deep, and proceeded, with the aid of a diver, to recover portions of her cargo. A number of ingots of copper and tin had been salvaged, and a royalty had been paid to the Government. Eventually, Messrs. Thomson, Watson and Co., through Mr. Clifford Hume Knight, interposed, on the ground that the wreck had not been abandoned by the owners, and that the salvagers had no right to remove any portion of the wreck or cargo. He said that his firm were agents in Cape Town for the London Salvage Association, who represented the underwriters of the wreck, as well as of the cargo. The applicant association (said Mr. Knight) was a branch of Lloyds. Messrs. Thomson, Watson and Co. sent a man to watch the respondents' operations, and finally the matter was brought into Court on the 19th March, and a temporary interdict was issued against the syndicate.

The respondents' position was that they had every reason to believe that the wreck had been abandoned, and that they were allowed to go on working for some time before a word of protest was raised by the applicants' representatives. On the other hand, Mr. Knight declared that they had never given out for one moment that they had abandoned the wreck, but that, as a matter of fact, operations formerly carried on had been suspended because of a certain obstruction. As soon as he heard that copper and tin had been recovered, he communicated with the Collector of Customs, asking him to detain same.

Mr. Searle submitted that the case came within section 1 of the General Law Amendment Act, No. 8, 1879. He went on to call the Court's attention to the Merchant Shipping Act, and said that the Act provided that there should be no recovery of wreckage except with the permission of the Board of Trade, and then that the proceeds should be handed over to the Board of Trade.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But we have no Board of Trade here.]

Mr. Searle: That is so, but the English Act does not provide for anything, apparently, as far as one can see, in the nature of abandonment. It seems to be the same way with our Government. Counsel proceeded to say that he had been unable to find any authorities dealing with the question of abandonment. There were now vessels lying in Table Bay, such as the America which had been there for years and years, and if the Harbour Board wanted to remove these vessels, they could not do it, except by allowing the owner to claim for the value of his property. This was property which was of value to him. He was informed that there had been prosecutions instituted against persons for touching these vessels and removing goods from them. Our Legislature recognised the fact that the owner of a wrecked ship had rights, and that no one could interfere with such rights.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Where is this wreck?]

Mr. Searle: Off Green Point.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is that in the harbour?]

Mr. Searle: No, my lord, it is beyond the breakwater. I think the harbour limits only extend to the breakwater. Continuing, counsel contended that applicants were within their rights in claiming this wreck, and asking that the respondents' operations should be stopped.

Sir H. Juta said that his learned friend said that they were within their rights. The first point was, who were "they"? Messrs. Thomson, Watson and Co., according to Mr. Knight, represented an association who represented the underwriters. There was no title to the wreck shown. Who was the person entitled to this wreck? The underwriters were not before the Court; they did not claim. It was of very great importance that the Court should know who it was that said he was the owner of this wreck. Counsel went on to refer to the English Acts and to the case of Anderson and Murison v. Colonial Government (8 Juta) and pointed out that in England if there were a wreck the owner must prove that he was the owner of the wreck within twelve months, and, if he did not do so, he lost his right. His learned friend talked about abandonment, and so forth, but the law of England was very much stricter in that respect. That was what was embodied to some extent in our own Acts. The Harbour Board, finding that a wreck was obstructing the navigation of the harbour, at once removed it, sold it, and if the owner did not establish his claim within twelve months from the date of sale, the owner lost all his rights.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But here there has been no sale.]

Sir H. Juta: No, my lord, nor would this apply to the wreck of the Thermopylae, because this is not a wreck which is obstructing the navigation of the harbour.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why bring it in?]

Sir H. Juta: I bring it in because my learned friend says that, according to the law of England, which he wishes to make applicable here, there is no such thing as abandonment of a wreck. Counsel went on to say that, according to our common law, all property could be abandoned. His learned friend wanted to make out that ships stood on some other footing. In our law, as far as he could find, there was no difference between bullion or cargo which happened to be in a ship and any other property. It could be abandoned whether it were lying on the rocks or under the water on the rocks or if it were actually on the sea-shore. Surely the person who claimed to be owner should come forward and make his claim.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The owners, I understand, are the underwriters.]

Sir H. Juta: In our affidavits we particularly raise this point, that we don't even know who claims to be owner, and they did not in their answering affidavit say who was the owner. The underwriters are an intermediate body, of whom we know nothing. Continuing, counsel argued that the matter was one that could not be properly dealt with on affidavit. If evidence were called, he was convinced that the Court would see that applicants had abandoned the wreck. It would be a very great hardship to decide the case on the affidavits after the great expenditure that respondents had incurred and after Mr. Knight had stood by until February and allowed respondents to carry on the operations without a word of protest until they began to land bullion. The applicants had not even taken the trouble to mark the spot where the wreck lay, and respondents had the utmost difficulty in finding the steamer. The case was clearly one that should be brought to trial.

Mr. Searle said that the respondents had only been at work about three weeks before they were actually warned as to the rights of the owners. Applicants had taken compass bearings, and they could have found the wreck at once. The salvage operations had formerly been carried on for years before they were discontinued. Clearly applicants were the owners of the wreck.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Who are the owners?]

Mr. Searle: The Salvage Association are the owners. I mean the underwriters.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Who are the underwriters?]

Mr. Searle: We can give the name in a very short space of time. We are the agents of the underwriters.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You don't know yourself who are the underwriters.]

Mr. Searle said that the name could be given and, besides, Messrs. Thomson, Watson and Co. were a substantial firm. Counsel went on to contend that there had been no abandonment of the wreck by the owners.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do the ship and cargo belong to the same owners?]

Mr. Searle: I am instructed that they do not.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Would you undertake to be liable for damages in case the applicants should not satisfy the Court hereafter that they are the agents of the owner of the cargo?]

Mr. Searle: Certainly, my lord.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is clearly laid down by the authorities in our law that a person cannot be held to have abandoned his property, unless his intention so to abandon it is clearly proved. In the present case, therefore, the respondents, if they claim to be entitled to the cargo of the Thermopylae, as against such owners, are bound to prove that such owners of that cargo have altogether abandoned their right of ownership. The mere fact that for some years they have not made any efforts to recover that cargo is not sufficient evidence. The fact is that a person whose property has gone down in a shipwreck cannot be presumed to have abandoned it because for some years he has taken no steps to raise it. He may hope that, in the meanwhile, some appliances may be discovered by which the recovery of his property might be facilitated. Anyhow, in my opinion, clear proof of abandonment must be given, and in the present case there is not, in my opinion, such clear proof of abandonment. But the respondents are actually in possession of the field, they are working at this wreck, and they are entitled to recover the cargo except as against the true owner. An owner may always vindicate his property wherever it is found, and, therefore, the true owner in the present case can vindicate his property, but no one else. The underwriters to whom the owners have abandoned the cargo would of course become entitled to the rights of owners. It is suggested by Sir Henry Juta that the applicants do not represent the true owner. The evidence upon the point is to be found in the affidavit of Mr. Clifford Knight. He says: "My firm are the agents in Cape Town of the Salvage Association of London, who represent the underwriters of the steamship Thermopylae, which was wrecked at Green Point in the month of September, 1899, as well as the underwriters of the cargo laden on board the said vessel." It is very much to be regretted that the name of the underwriters was not given, because that would, to some extent, have remedied the defect of the affidavit; at the same time, I think there is sufficient prima facie evidence to justify the Court in holding that the applicants do represent the owners. If it should ultimately be found that they do not, then the respondents will be entitled to damages from the present applicants for depriving them in the interval from further going on with the operations at the wreck, because, as I said before, these operations would be justifiable, except as against the Crown—and the consent of the Crown has been given—and as against the true owners. If, however, the applicants do not represent the true owners, they were not justified in interfering with these operations. The course, therefore, which I consider under all the circumstances, to be the proper one, and which would do the least injury to any one, would be this: to continue the interdict, but order that the interdict be discharged unless the applicants shall within two months from this date produce proof to the satisfaction of the Court that they are the agents of the owners of the cargo of the Thermopylae, the applicants undertaking to pay damages to the respondents in case they shall not be able to prove that they are the agents of such owners.

Sir H. Juta asked whether his lordship would not be prepared to allow the respondents to continue the operations during the intervening two months upon their undertaking to keep an account of their funds.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the good weather would make the claim for damages of the respondents all the stronger. He had been weighing the probabilities, and it seemed to him that the probabilities were in favour of the view that the applicants did represent the owner. As they were willing to pay damages, he thought that the proper course was to continue the interdict.

Sir H. Juta said that, if necessary, the respondents could give security.

His Lordship said he thought the matter was one rather for arrangement between the parties.

Mr. Searle said that, in view of a letter which had been received from the Salvage Association, it was quite possible that some arrangement might be made whereby the respondents should continue the operations on the basis of a percentage of the treasure recovered.

Sir H. Juta suggested that the question of costs should stand over for the two months.

Mr. Searle pointed out that the registered capital of the syndicate was very small—he was informed about £1,000.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the order of the Court would be as follows: Interdict to continue, and respondents to pay costs, but interdict to be discharged and costs to be repaid, unless Messrs. Thomson, Watson and Co. shall, within two months from this date, produce proof to the satisfaction of the Court that they are agents of the owner of the cargo of the Thermopylae, Messrs. Thomson, Watson and Co., undertaking to pay damages to the respondents in case they shall not be able to prove that they are such agents of the owner.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Reid and Nephew; Respondents' Attorneys: Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller.]

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT AND TABLE BAY HARBOUR BOARD.

Mr. Searle informed his lordship that the position in regard to this matter, which related to certain land near the new Somerset Hospital, which had formed the subject of an action for a declaration of rights, was that his clients (the Town Council) were quite willing that the Harbour Board should take the land in any case, and, therefore, it seemed to him that there was really no objection to the appeal going on without any further order in the matter. Supposing the appellants were successful, they would get the land without compensation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The difficulty is that there will be a judgment only upon part of the case. I understood that the parties were clearly agreed as to the basis of the judgment, and that the only question remaining was as to the names of the referee, so that I, therefore, said nothing as to the claim in re-convention.]

Sir H. Juta (for defendants) said that his lordship had said that should there be no agreement he would deliver a further judgment.

Mr. Searle submitted that, as it was arranged that the Harbour Board should keep the land, the necessity for a further order of Court would fall away.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but this judgment gives you the land. The position is that this is only conditional, it is only under certain conditions that they would keep the land. As the case now stands, the land is vested in the Council. Seven days were given in which to come to an agreement, and if those seven days have passed without an agreement being arrived at, the judgment stands, and I cannot alter it. The result, therefore, is that the judgment of the Court is that plaintiffs are entitled to have the land.]

Sir H. Juta said that an agreement had been entered into, but he could not inform his lordship when it was entered into. The agreement between the board and the Council was that the Board should keep the land, so that if they had to pay the Council compensation they simply paid them.

Mr. Searle read a letter from one party to the other under date of March 2 embodying certain terms of agreement.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the parties are agreed, it is not necessary to give a judgment on the claim in re-convention. My sole reason in mentioning the matter was that I did not like the record to be incomplete.

SAPEIRA V. FERREIRA.

Mr. Searle said that this was a case regarding a furrow at Disseldorf. His Lordship had made an order in the matter and his (counsel's) clients now applied to have the award made a rule of Court. The Court's order was that the award be set aside unless respondents accepted an amendment reducing the maximum width of the furrow from 9 yards to 6. If the respondents accepted that then there would be no order on the application, save that respondents pay applicants' costs, save costs of affidavits relating to other matters than width of furrow. Respondents now wished the award to be made a rule of Court, and the only question he (counsel) was instructed to mention was whether they were to take it that the agreements with regard to the former furrow would apply to the new furrow.

Mr. Gardiner (for applicant) said his client also wished the old agreements to apply to the new furrow.

His Lordship said he thought it followed from the reasons of his judgment that the old agreements should apply to the new furrow.

Award made rule of Court; no order as to costs.

GOUGH V. PORT ELIZABETH TOWN COUNCIL AND ANOTHER. { 1906.
Mar. 27th.

Port Elizabeth Municipality—
Election of auditor—Equality of votes—Determination by lot—Statutory duty of Mayor.

The 86th section of Act 27 of 1897 enacts that "in case of an equality of votes at any election of auditors, the Mayor shall determine by lot which of the persons for whom an equal number of votes shall have been given shall be elected." The applicant and D. had an equal number of votes, whereupon a fresh voting took place, with the result that D. had a majority of votes.

Held, that by being deprived of the benefit of a chance of being elected, the applicant was prejudiced, and it was ordered that the question be determined by lot; and that if the lot should fall on the applicant, the election of D. be set aside.

This was an application calling upon the Town Council of Port Elizabeth and one James S. Dalgleish to show cause, firstly, why the election of Mr. Dalgleish, as one of the auditors of the municipality for 1906, should not be declared null and void, on the ground that he was not a ratepayer of the municipality, and that his name should have been excluded from the list of applicants; secondly, why applicant should not be declared appointed one of the auditors; and, thirdly, why the election of Dalgleish should not be set aside on the ground that the wrong procedure had been adopted.

From the affidavits it appeared that both Mr. Gough and Mr. Dalgleish were candidates for the auditorship of Port Elizabeth, and that at a meeting of the Council on January 3 last, when a vote was taken, they tied for the second appointment, each receiving eight votes. The Council then proceeded to a fresh election, which resulted in the choice falling upon Mr. Dalgleish by a majority of votes. The applicant took objection to the election on two grounds—(1) that Mr. Dalgleish was not a ratepayer, as required by section 85 of Act 27, 1897, and (2) that the wrong procedure was adopted by the Mayor in ordering a fresh election, and that the tie should have been determined by lot, as provided by section 88 of the Act. The respondent, it seemed, carried on practice as an accountant at certain premises in Britannia-street, belonging to the estate Patterson, of which premises Messrs. Robert Crook and Co. are the lessees; his name did not appear in the assessment roll of 1905; he did not pay rates to the municipality direct that year, and he did not fill in the schedule sent round by the municipality to the occupiers of premises until some time this year. Applicant contended that Mr. Dalgleish was simply a lodger and that he had no qualification as a ratepayer while the latter claimed that he was liable to pay rates; that he possessed the qualifications of a ratepayer, that he was registered on the assessment roll for 1906; that he had sent in a schedule for 1906 setting out that his rental was £36 per annum, and that Messrs. Crooks had sent in a schedule setting out that their annual rental was £164. Applicant took up the position that this was merely an artifice adopted since the proceedings were commenced in order to provide what appeared to be a qualification for Mr. Dalgleish.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Sutton) was for applicant, J. F. Gough; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) was for respondents.

Mr. Schreiner said that the mode of determining who had to pay the tenants' rate in Port Elizabeth was peculiar and exceptional. The lessee of the property was, he contended, the party who should fill up the schedules, and not the sub-tenants. The person who tenanted the property was the occupier; he had to give the information under separate and distinct heads, setting forth the names of the owner, occupier, and all inmates, also annual rental, and term of lease (if there be one), and date of determination. Crooks and Co. were the lessees from Patterson's estate, as set forth in the schedule for 1905, and they had to pay the rental. There was nothing in the whole Act to make rates payable twice over, both from the lessee and the sub-tenant. The Act considered that immovable property, that was separately rated for tenants' rate, should be occupied by one or more persons from the owner, and, as between the owner and those other persons, Crooks were, counsel contended, the occupiers. Crooks, in their 1906 schedule, put the rental down at £164, whilst the true rental was, as returned in 1905, £200.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But cannot the tenant make the persons who take rooms under him assist him in paying the rent?]

Mr. Schreiner: He can do that, but he cannot make them ratepayers.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Your argument would exclude the sub-tenant?]

Mr. Schreiner: My whole argument is that the sub-tenant is excluded.

Mr. Searle said that his first submission was that Dalgleish was a ratepayer.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Can a man who never paid rates be a ratepayer?]

Mr. Searle: Yes, my lord. I submit that it has been held over and over again that a ratepayer is a man who is liable to pay rates. As a fact, Dalgleish paid rates through his landlord; it is only a matter of assessment. Counsel went on to submit that a ratepayer was, as a fact, a man who is liable to pay rates, who may, as a fact, be rated. Whatever one may feel in regard to the question of procedure, it would be necessary first to determine whether Mr. Dalgleish was competent or not. Supposing that the Council were wrong, and that the names should have been put up by lot—his learned friend contended that Mr. Dalgleish's name should not have been put up to lot—he submitted that the whole thing could be decided in a few minutes. Counsel went on to say that the Town Council were anxious to obtain a definite decision on the point as to who were ratepayers. If these sub-tenants were occupiers, then, by the Municipal Act, they were ratepayers.

De Villiers, C.J.: The first question to be determined in this case is whether Dalgleish, who was elected as one of the auditors, was liable as an occupier, or not liable, to be placed upon the list of ratepayers. The terms of the 102nd section of the Act are somewhat involved, and the schedule which the Municipal Council had adopted is even more involved. I do not see that this schedule is adopted from a form attached to the Act, so that it is a form which has been made out by the Municipality itself. That form cannot be considered as part of the law, and I think that the form ought to have allowed for the possibility of a case occurring in which a sub-lessee, or a person claiming under a lessee is to be held liable as a ratepayer. But I am clearly of opinion that, as the only persons liable to be ratepayers under the Act are owners and occupiers, if Dalgleish was an occupier under the Act he was liable to become a ratepayer. Clearly, he was an occupier; it does not matter whether he pays rent direct to the owner or to the person who is a lessee from the owner, he is an occupier, and as such he is liable to pay the rates. As far as his schedule is concerned, the one filled up by him in 1906 shows that the actual annual rental paid by him is £36. That is perfectly true; there is nothing inaccurate in that statement. He is the occupier who pays that annual rental, and, as such occupier, I see nothing in the Act to exclude him from the list of ratepayers, although as I have already observed, that section 102 is somewhat involved, and the schedule itself which has been framed by the Council might have been more complete than it actually is. That being so, I do not think that it becomes of much importance whether in January, 1906, Dalgleish had actually been placed upon the list of ratepayers for that year. He was shortly afterwards placed on the list, and should be regarded as a ratepayer with liability to pay tenants' rates, and with the right to be elected as auditor. But then comes the further question as to whether his election can stand, in the face of the express provisions of the 88th section of the Act 27, 1897. The section is as follows: "In case of an equality of votes at any election of auditors, the Mayor, Deputy Mayor, or chairman for the time being presiding at such meeting of the Council, shall determine by lot which of the persons for whom an equal number of votes shall have been given, shall be elected in case such persons cannot be both or each of them elected." In the present case it appears that the applicant and Dalgleish had an equal number of votes and the duty of the Mayor, or Deputy Mayor or the chairman for the time being was clear, it is a statutory duty imposed upon him in express terms as to what he is to do. It may well be that the course of action adopted by the Mayor may be more expedient, may be more convenient; it may be equivalent to what they believe to be justice to all parties, but it does not conform to the law, and it is time that Mayors, and other persons holding public positions of this kind, should learn that it is their plain duty to act as instructed by law, and not to be guided by their own notions of what is reasonable or expedient. When it was found that the applicant and Dalgleish had an equality of votes, a fresh voting took place, with the result that the applicant lost the benefit of the chance given to him by the 88th section of the lot falling on him. The illegality of the Mayor's action was a distinct prejudice to the applicant, who is entitled to be placed in the same position, as far as possible, as if the provisions of the Act had been observed. The Court must therefore order that the Mayor determine by lot whether the applicant or Dalgleish has been elected; and if the lot should fall on the applicant the election of Dalgleish must be set aside.

Mr. Schreiner: Would your lordship include that this be done at a meeting of the Council, and that notice of the meeting be given to us?

[De Villiers, C.J.: Oh, yes; it must be done at a meeting. The applicant, as I have said, was entitled to come into court to have this defect remedied, and he is entitled to costs.]

BELMONT V. COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Alien — Prohibition to enter Colony.

An alien, who had left the Colony after being for some time domiciled here, was prohibited by the Colonial Secretary from re-entering the Colony, on the ground that while here she had harboured and been the companion of prostitutes.

Held, that she could not claim the right to re-enter the Colony, but as she had some property here she was allowed to land for the purpose of realizing her property upon her finding her personal security that in two months she would leave the country.

Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant, and Mr. Morgan Evans was for the Crown. The application called on the Colonial Secretary to show cause, if any, why the applicant should not be allowed to land from the S.S. Aline Woermann, at present lying in Table Bay. The petition of the applicant set out that the petitioner was married to one Carl Belmont, who, however, was not at present in this colony, having left on November 15, 1905. Since their petitioner had been carrying on business as a restaurant keeper in Plein-street, Cape Town. She has resided in Cape Town since 1899, and had carried on business as a restaurant keeper the whole time, with the exception of one year, when petitioner was absent from Cape Town. Petitioner was still the proprietress of the restaurant, and of the assets, and had creditors in respect of the said business, and had other matters pending. On the 5th March she left for a trip to German South-West Africa, having been told there was a good opening there for a restaurant. She did purchase a restaurant there. She returned here with one Dolly Clark, who was allowed to land, but permission had been refused petitioner.

The affidavit of C. W. Cousins, principal immigration officer, set out that the applicant was prohibited from landing under section 2 (e) of Act 47 of 1902. The applicant was not domiciled in this country, and could not claim exemption on that ground. The woman was known as the keeper of the Belmont Restaurant, the haunt of loose women, in which prostitution was regularly carried on. She was at present the proprietress of the Holborn Restaurant, Plein-street, the upper premises of which were habitually used for purposes of prostitution. The woman Dolly Clark was a person of loose character, and she was allowed to land because she was born here, and had spent her life here.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: If the Act in question had never been passed, it is clear that the Court would not have interfered if the Colonial Secretary, acting on behalf of the Governor, had prohibited an alien from entering the Colony on the ground that he or she was not a fit or proper person to be allowed to enter. Although the third section says that the Act shall not apply to persons domiciled in South Africa, it does not follow that those who happen to be domiciled in South Africa, who are aliens, would be entitled to apply for admission in case the Governor thinks it is for the good of the country that they shall not be allowed to enter. But counsel for the respondent has stated that the Government has no desire to prevent this woman realising any property she may have in this colony. Therefore under the circumstances the Court will order that the applicant be allowed to land for the purpose of realising her property in this colony, she undertaking by her counsel that she will leave the Colony in two months from this date, the applicant to give her personal security in £500 that she will leave the Colony in the time specified.

GEORGE CIRCUIT COURT.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice LAWRENCE.]

VAN DER POEL AND ANOTHER { 1906.
V. DU PREEZ. { Mar. 27th.
Apr. 21st.

Illegal contract—Agreement not to prosecute—Par delictum—Duress—Costs.

P. stole two heifers from W., who, after incurring certain expenses in sending for them, estimated by the Magistrate at £1, found them in possession of T., to whom P. had sold them. W. consulted V., an attorney, on the subject, and P. was induced by them to hand over a horse and an ox to W., which were subsequently sold by V., in his capacity as an auctioneer, and realized £13 1s. 6d. There was a conflict of evidence as to the precise value of this consideration, but the Magistrate found, as a fact, that V. and W. led P. to believe that in consideration of the delivery of these animals he would not be prosecuted for the theft. A complaint, however, was subsequently laid by W., P. was convicted, and V., who assisted in the prosecution, was paid by W. £3 10s. fees out of the £13 1s. 6d. for his services in the matter. P., after serving his sentence of imprisonment, sued them for the proceeds of the sale of his horse and ox, on the ground of failure of consideration. The defendants excepted that the alleged agreement was illegal and that an action could not be founded on its breach. The Magistrate over-ruled the exception and gave judgment against the defendants, jointly and severally, for the amount claimed, less £1, which he allowed W. for his expenses as above.

Held on appeal, that the parties were not in pari delicto, and the respondent having been subjected by the appellants to duress, that in the circumstances he was entitled to recover from W. the proceeds of the sale, but that the liability of V. must be limited to the amount which he had received for his "professional assistance."

Held, also, that in the civil cases, notwithstanding this variation of the order, the costs of appeal should be paid by appellants.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of George, heard before Laurence, J., on Circuit at George.

The applicant was heard in argument, and judgment was reserved.

Mr. Howes (for applicant) argued that the respondent (Du Preez) was not entitled to recover the value of a certain horse, saddle and bridle and an ox delivered to appellants inasmuch as such delivery was made in pursuance of an illegal agreement, viz., that the appellants should refrain from the prosecution of the respondent for the theft of certain oxen. He further argued that inasmuch as the contract alleged was between Wells and Du Preez, Van der Poel could not in any event be held jointly liable for restoration of the property or its value.

Mr. Bisset (for respondents) argued that although the property was delivered as consideration for an illegal agreement not to prosecute the respondent, it was recoverable on the double ground (1) that the parties were not in pari delicto, that is to say that Van der Poel had in the first instance approached the respondent with the suggestion of non prosecution and practically had forced him to acquiesce; respondent having, under the circumstances, no alternative but to submit, and (2) that there was a total failure of the consideration on which the property was delivered by Du Preez (viz., a withdrawal of the pending prosecution) appellants having immediately on receipt of the horse, and proceeded with the prosecution. He relied on Anon on Contract (p. 233, 10th edit.), setting forth the exceptions to the general rule and cases there cited, and contended that the present case, on the facts, fell within both exceptions and was a stronger one than Atkinson v. Denby (6. H. and N., 778-7, H. and N., 834).

Postea (April 21st).

IN THE SUPREME COURT.

Laurence, J., delivered judgment as follows:—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of George. The case came before me at the recent sitting there of the Circuit Court. As it presented some difficult features, and I wished to consider the matter at leisure, and to consult authorities not locally available, it was arranged that judgment should be reserved and delivered in the Supreme Court. The material facts may be stated as follows: In the month of July, 1904, the respondent, Du Preez, stole two heifers, which he sold to one Truter. The heifers were the property of the mother-in-law of the appellant Wells, a farmer or bywoner in the district, and were at the time in his lawful possession. Wells, after some searching, traced the heifers, and, on information obtained from Truter, came into George and consulted the respondent, Van der Poel, an attorney of the Supreme Court practising in that town. Wells then went to the Magistrate's office to lodge a complaint. Before he had finished his statement, Van der Poel came in and asked the Chief Constable to allow the matter to stand over pending certain inquiries, which it was proposed to make of Du Preez. An interview then took place between the parties at Van der Poel's office. As to what took place at this interview there is a considerable conflict of evidence. The appellants, however, admit that questions were put to the respondent by Van der Poel as to what stock he possessed, and what price he would take for a certain horse, and that the object was to set a trap for him, with the object either of obtaining compensation for the expenses which Wells professed to have incurred in searching for the heifers, or of obtaining admissions from him which would strengthen the case against him, or with both those objects combined. The upshot was that, after a good deal of discussion, Du Preez delivered to Wells a horse, saddle, and bridle, and also an ox, for sale, and Wells handed them over for that purpose to Van der Poel, who is an auctioneer as well as an attorney, to be placed on a sale which was about to take place. They were, in fact, so sold, and the net proceeds, after deducting auctioneer's commission and charges, amounted to £13 ls. 6d. It is common cause—if the evidence of the respondent at page 3, and that of the appellant Van der Poel at page 32 of the record is to be believed—that shortly before the delivery, the respondent made some suggestion to the effect that the heifers would now belong to Truter—or, in other words, that he would be relieved from liability for any claim by him for recovery of the purchase price of the stolen heifers—but that this concession was refused by Van der Poel. The real question is whether, as the appellants contend, this property was handed over to Wells as agreed compensation for his expenses and loss of time in searching for the heifers, or whether, as Du Preez alleges, it was given on the condition or understanding that the criminal charge should be abandoned. Wells, according to his evidence, put his expenses at about £30, but was willing, the plaintiff being a poor man, to accept £13 in full satisfaction, out of which he was to pay £3 3s. to Van der Poel for what the latter thinks fit to describe as his professional assistance in the premises. The expenses, which Wells specifies, are so indirect and remote that they can only be described as fantastical, and his evidence on the subject is so improbable and contradictory as to be quite unworthy of credence. The Magistrate was of opinion that his actual expenses might fairly be assessed at the sum of 20s., or 5s. a day for four days spent in the search. I see no reason to differ from this finding, and presumably he would have been awarded some such sum had he made proper application, under the statute on that behalf, to the Acting Magistrate before whom the respondent was subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the theft. The account given at the trial of the present action by the plaintiff and his two daughters of what occurred between the parties differs in some material respects from the version contained in certain affidavits sworn by them more than a year previously and shortly after his conviction. Notwithstanding these discrepancies, the Magistrate, after seeing the parties and hearing their evidence at great length, has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's version is substantially correct, and that the defendants induced him to part with his property by holding out the expectation that he would by that course escape prosecution. The Magistrate has given his reasons very fully, and I am unable, in view of all the probabilities of the situation, to differ from his finding on the question of fact. It is indeed not impossible that there may have been some strange misapprehension, that the respondent believed that, by handing over his property, he would protect himself from prosecution, while the appellants thought that, in the absence of any explicit promise to that effect, it might be accepted and realised as compensation for the alleged expenses. In that case there would have been no consensus ad idem, and, the position of the appellant Wells not having been prejudiced, except possibly as to any small sum which he might have recovered by order of the Magistrate on application at the trial or otherwise, the respondent would, I take it, be entitled, subject to that qualification, to restitutio in integrum. However, as I have said, the Magistrate accepted the respondent's version, that there was such an explicit promise, "as the one approximating the truth," and, as I have said from that finding I regret that I feel unable to dissent. At the same time, it must be admitted that, on this finding, the subsequent conduct of the defendants is difficult to explain, except on an hypothesis most discreditable to their character. For, no sooner had the property been handed over than the information was completed and Du Preez arrested and tried, Van der Poel assisting in the prosecution, and charging Wells £3 10s. for his services, viz., three guineas, as originally agreed, together with another 7s. for drawing the affidavit. The real object of the prosecution appears to have been to compel Truter to return the stolen property. Du Preez asserts that he endeavoured to bring the facts to the notice of the Acting Magistrate who tried the case, but that the latter declined to go into the matter, apparently regarding it as irrelevant to the charge. I have not had an opportunity of perusing the criminal record, but if his attention was in any way called to the transaction it is certainly regrettable that the Magistrate did not think it his duty to investigate it. Du Preez was convicted and sentenced to a year's imprisonment. After his release, in October last, he brought the present action. The summons claims from the defendants jointly and severally the sum of £13 1s. 6d. as the net proceeds of the purchase price of property handed to them by plaintiff to stay and prevent a criminal prosecution against him, on condition that no such charge should be brought, which condition had not been fulfilled. The claim, it may be pointed out, though rather ambiguous in form, is not for the purchase price of a sale by plaintiff to defendants, but for moneys had and received or property realised by them on his behalf. To this summons the defendants excepted, on the ground that the action was based on an alleged breach of an illegal agreement on which no action would lie. The Magistrate, after argument, overruled the exception, and, after hearing the evidence, gave judgment against the defendants jointly and severally for the amount claimed, less £1, which he allowed Wells for his expenses in searching for the stolen cattle. It may be here observed that, as the Magistrate found that the defendants had failed to prove the alleged agreement for compensation, and as there was no counter claim for these expenses, the deduction of 20s. from the amount claimed appears to have been incorrect; but as, on the other hand, there is no cross-appeal by the respondent, the matter need not be further considered. The main question is whether the Magistrate was right in overruling the exception, and, if so, whether the judgment against both or either of the parties can be upheld on the facts proved in evidence.

According to English law, to compound a felony—i.e., "to agree for valuable consideration either not to prosecute, or to stay or stifle a prosecution, is a substantive misdemeanour." In an old case it was held that when an indictment for compounding a felony averred that the defendant had desisted from prosecution, and it appeared that, after the alleged compounding, he prosecuted the offender to conviction, the indictment was bad, and the defendants were acquitted; and a footnote by the reporters raises the question whether the indictment would have been good had the allegation that the defendant had not prosecuted the offender been omitted (R. v. Stone and others, 4 C. and P., 379). This doubt however, was resolved by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved in the case of R. v. Burgess (16 Q., B.D., 141), where it was held that "an indictment for compounding a felony need not allege that the defendant desisted from prosecuting the felon." In that case, which was heard before five judges, Lord Coleridge observed (at page 146) that "it being admitted that such an agreement is unlawful in the sense that it is not enforceable at law, it is said that, if the maker of it keeps his agreement, he is guilty of an offence, but if, in addition to making such an illegal agreement, he is guilty of the further fraud towards the other party, of breaking it, he is guilty of no offence at all. Thus stated the proposition seems to me to be contrary to good sense, and to be a sufficient answer to itself." A distinction has been drawn, not only between felonies and misdemeanours, but also between public and private injuries. Not only ordinary felonies, such as theft, but misdemeanours, such as perjury, or the offence of obstructing or interfering with a public road, being regarded as public injuries, an agreement not to prosecute has been held to be illegal, as contrary to public policy (Kir v. Leeman, 6 Q.B., 308 and 9 Q.B. 371; Windhill Local Board of Health v. Vint., 45 Ch. D. 351). On the other hand, in cases where the aggrieved person had the choice of either prosecuting or suing civilly for a private injury sustained, such as an assault, such compromises have been held to be valid and binding. "We shall probably be safe in laying it down," it was said in Kir v. Leeman, "that the law will permit a compromise of all offences, though made the subject of criminal prosecution, for which offences the injured party might sue and recover damages in an action. . . . But if the offence is of a public nature, no agreement can be valid that is founded on the consideration of stifling a prosecution for it" (cf. Pollock on Contracts, 6 Ed. pp. 314-315). Without further discussing the English law on the subject, and the distinctions which have been drawn, it is sufficient to observe that in our own courts the principle has been clearly recognised that agreements to take money in order to abstain from prosecuting for a crime are contrary to public policy, as tending to obstruct or impede the course of justice, and that, therefore, the general principle is that no action can be founded on such an agreement. In Harris v. Executrix of Krige (2 Juta, 399), the Supreme Court refused judgment on a promissory note which had been given to the plaintiff to avoid disclosure of the fact that certain previous notes had been forged by the maker; and this decision was followed by the Eastern Districts Court in Beudenhout v. Strydom (4 E.D.C., 224), where a note was given for the purpose of preventing the prosecution of the son of the makers for theft. If in the present case the respondent, instead of delivering his property, had given a promissory note for the amount in dispute, and the appellants had sued on such note, the point would be covered by authority; but I have been unable to find, either in the English or in the Colonial courts, any precisely parallel case, where the question has been decided whether money or money's worth paid in order to stay a prosecution can be recovered on the ground of failure of the illegal consideration for which it was paid, or whether, in the words of Lord Coleridge, the person who has not only made an illegal agreement, but has been "guilty of the further fraud, towards the other party, of breaking it," must be allowed to retain the proceeds of such a fraud. As I pointed out at once, when the appeal was opened, the case is one in which the principle in pari delicto fortior est condicio possidentis seems prima facie to apply; the rule as expressed in the civil law is cum par delictum est duorum semper oneratur petitor et melior habetur possessoris causa (Dig. 50, 17, 154, cited by the Chief Justice in Aburroo v. Wallis (10 Juta, 214); but the question has to be carefully considered whether the case is in fact one of par delictum, and, if so, whether it is one which falls within the rule or within certain exceptions by which its application has been qualified and restricted. A case at first sight somewhat similar is that of Goodall v. Lowndes (6 Q.B. 464), where the plaintiff, having been indicted for noncompliance with a bastardy order, entered into a compromise with the guardians and the indictment was dropped. Afterwards, discovering that the order was bad, he sued for money had and received; but the Court held that "if the compromise was illegal, plaintiff, being in pari delicto with the other parties offending, could not sue them for money which he had paid." But it may be pointed out in the first place that in that case the prosecution was dropped as arranged, and not pursued in breach of the agreement; and, in the second place, the Court expressly held that "the facts do not prove extortion by duress, nor warrant an action for money had and received." The exceptions to the rule, as stated by Anson, in a passage cited by counsel, "would appear to group themselves in two classes: (1) Cases in which the plaintiff has been induced to enter into the contract under the influence of fraud or strong pressure," and is, therefore, not in pari delicto. (2) Cases in which the contract being unperformed money paid or goods delivered in furtherance of it have been held recoverable" ("Law of Contract," 5th Ed., 207). Pollock gives his view of the law somewhat tentatively, but substantially, to the same effect (6th Ed., at pp. 368, 369). I may refer briefly to three cases as illustrating these general propositions. In the case of Williams v. Hudley (8 East, 308), it was held that money paid by the plaintiff to a common informer to compromise a penal action may be recovered back in an action for money had and received, as the party paying the composition did not stand in pari delicto, nor was particeps criminis, with the compounding informer. This case, however, is not a very strong authority, as it turned to a great extent on the language of the Statute of Elizabeth, attaching certain penalties to an informer who instituted a penal action, and afterwards made a composition. In the case of Williams v. Bayley (1 L.R.H.L., 200) it was held on the same principle as in the Colonial cases above cited, that an action could not be maintained on an undertaking to give a mortgage which had been made in order to prevent the prosecution of the defendant's son for forgery, the House of Lords holding that the father in such circumstances could not be regarded as a free and voluntary agent. As Lord Westbury put it (at p. 220): "If you are aware that a crime has been committed, you shall not convert that crime into a source of profit or benefit to yourself. . . . That is the principle of the law and the policy of the law, and it is dictated by the highest considerations. If men were permitted to trade upon the knowledge of a crime, and to convert their privy to that crime into an occasion of advantage, no doubt a great legal and a great moral offence would be committed. And that is what, I apprehend, the old rule of law intended to convey when it embodied the principle under words which have now somewhat passed into desuetude, namely, 'Misprision of felony.' That was a case when a man, instead of performing his public duty, and giving information to the public authorities of a crime that he was aware of, concealed his knowledge, and further converted it into a source of emolument to himself."

But the most important decision, and that which appears to be most strongly in favour of the respondent in the present appeal, is the frequently cited case of Atkinson v. Denby (6 H., and N. 778, and 7 H., and N. 934), in which it was held that where the defendant, one of plaintiff's creditors, refused to accept a composition unless the plaintiff paid him £50 before he executed the deed, the money could be recovered back. "It is true," said the Court of Exchequer Chamber, "that both are in delicto, because the act is a fraud upon the other creditors, but it is not par delictum, because the one has the power to dictate, the other no alternative but to submit." As Baron Bramwell put it: "If a man, upon a corrupt bargain, pays money or gives a bill of exchange, he cannot recover it back. But upon this general rule there has been engrafted what has been called judge-made law; but which, I think, is most salutary law. The qualification is this, that where, though the act is voluntary in one sense, the person for whom it is done has a species of power over the other, so that the latter does the act under coercion, then, though the contract is unlawful it is not a case of par delictum, because it is a case of oppressor and oppressed. That is the qualification of the general rule, and in such cases, though the payment of money is in a certain sense voluntary it may be recovered back (6 H and N., at p. 788). In that case the judgment of the four Barons of the Exchequer was upheld by the five Judges in the Exchequer Chamber, where Cockburn, C.J., made the observation above cited. For the reason given by Lord Coleridge, in R. v. Burgess, I can see no reason why the decision should have been different had the creditor, after receiving the bribe, refused to sign the deed. I do not propose to examine the cases falling under the other branch of the exception, "in which," as Anson puts it, "the contract being unperformed, money paid or goods delivered in furtherance of it have been held recoverable," even when the contract was illegal and the parties in pari delicto, as the law on the subject does not appear to be clearly settled, and the cases cited in support of the proposition differ in some material respects from the facts of the present appeal. But on the whole I can find no authority in our law for the proposition that persons in the position of the appellants, who have taken advantage of the position of the respondent to induce him to part with his property in such circumstances, can resist a claim for repayment; it appears to me that it would be inequitable and against all conscience to allow them to do so; and that the English case of Atkinson v. Denby, taken in connection with the observations of the Court in Rex v. Burgess, furnishes a strong authority in favour of the respondent. The matter is one of so much importance that I could wish that it had been fully argued in this court before a full bench; but, on the whole, after prolonged and careful consideration, I have come to the conclusion that the Magistrate was right in overruling the exception, and that the facts as proved justified his finding in favour of the respondent. There remains, however, a good deal of difficulty as to the question of the liability of the appellant Van der Poel. The Magistrate in his reasons uses some very severe expressions as to his conduct. "There can be no doubt," he says, "that he co-operated in the deceit and fraud practised upon the plaintiff, and he cannot shelter himself under the aegis of his profession. His conduct of this case as a practitioner of my Court was sordid, mercenary, and unbecoming, and is deserving of the highest censure." As to this aspect of the case, I do not think it would be advisable for me to say more than that, when the record is returned, it would be quite competent for the Magistrate, if he thinks fit, to send a copy to the secretary of the Incorporated Law Society for the consideration of that body. It must, however, be observed that the action in form appears to have been one not ex delicto, for deceit, conspiracy or fraudulent misrepresentation, but rather quasi ex contractu for moneys had and received. The property was delivered to Wells, realised by Van der Poel as his agent, and the net proceeds paid over to Wells, out of which he paid Van der Poel £3 10s. as remuneration for his services. I think on the whole the position is practically the same as if Van der Poel had deducted this amount, so far as the latter is concerned; but that, in all the circumstances, while the judgment against Wells may stand for the full amount, the joint pecuniary liability of Van der Poel must be limited to the sum of £3 10s., being the portion of the proceeds which ultimately found their way into his hands. With regard to the question of costs, there was only one set of costs, and, owing to the very exceptional nature of the case, I have, after much deliberation, come to the conclusion that, although there must be a variation, of the order so far as Van der Poel is concerned, the costs of the appeal should be paid by the appellants. The result is that the Magistrate's judgment will be varied by limiting the liability of the appellant Van der Poel to the sum of £3 10s., being portion of the sum of £12 1s. 6d., for which the Magistrate found in favour of the respondent, and that, with the exception of this variation, the appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

Turf Club—Meeting of members
—Due notice of meeting.

The applicant, being a member of the S.A. Turf Club, moved to have all the proceedings at a meeting of members set aside, on the ground that notice of the meeting had been published in the papers six days before the day of meeting instead of ten days as required by the bye-laws of the Club.

Held, that in the absence of any proof that any member had been ignorant of the meeting who, if he had been present, would not have voted with the majority, the Court should not interfere.

This was an application brought by Christopher Brady, attorney, Cape Town, upon notice of motion calling upon the respondent, as chairman of the South African Turf Club, to show cause why certain proceedings at the annual meeting of the club held at the Odd-Fellows' Hall, Cape Town, on the 26th February, should not be declared null and void, on the ground of the meeting having been improperly summoned, and why certain instrument used by the club for wagering and betting, and known as the totalisator, should not be declared illegal, and why an interdict should not be granted restraining its continuance.

The affidavit of the applicant said that he was a member of the South African Turf Club. After referring to the Acts 20 of 1882 and 9 of 1886, whereby the Turf Club obtained grants of ground for a racecourse at Kenilworth, and were authorised to run horse races, deponent proceeded to call attention to the rules of the club in regard to the convening of meetings. Rule 18 provided that all meetings should be convened by advertisement, stating the business to be considered, to be inserted in one of the Cape Town daily papers on not less than two different days, one on the day of meeting and the other at least ten days before. This rule, he said, had not been complied with so far as concerned the meeting of the 26th February last, and he submitted that the meeting had not been lawfully convened or held. On the 15th January last he sent to the club a notice that he intended to propose certain resolutions at the ensuing annual meeting. The secretary duly advertised the proposed resolutions, as he was bound to do, but the notice, which appeared in the "Cape Times," omitted to state when and where the meeting was to be held, and no reference was made to any other business which was to be brought forward. The first advertisement, notifying the time and place of meeting, appeared in the "South African News" on the 19th February. Deponent submitted that this last-mentioned notice failed to comply with rule 18. It was pointed out to the secretary, and subsequently to the respondent, that sufficient notice of the meeting had not been given, and deponent also made a public protest in the press. On the 26th February a notice appeared in the "Cape Times" stating that the meeting was to be held that day. Deponent said that all these notices failed to comply with the rule 18; two of them were inside the ten days stipulated, and failed to state the business of the meeting, while the other, which was outside the ten days' limit contained no reference to the time or place of meeting. At the meeting in question the chairman overruled the objection taken by deponent. He (deponent) was informed that the total number of members of the club was 390 and that 177 persons attended the meeting in question. A considerable amount of business was transacted at the said meeting, including, amongst other things, the appointment of committee and the agreement in connection with the Milnerton Estates, and other matters, of which no specific notice was given, save the resolutions which he was to propose. He prayed that the proceedings at the said meeting be declared ultra vires, unlawful, and irregular. As to the second part of the application, deponent said that the club had exceeded its powers in undertaking the running of a totalisator, by means of which they had become professional bookmakers and had monopolised the betting by excluding the professional bookmakers from the course. According to the balance-sheet for the past year, the receipts from the totalisator had been £22,872. He submitted that the totalisator, as run and worked by the club, was unlawful in more respects than one. He was credibly informed that the club took a commission of 10 per cent. out of the money that passed through the totalisator, so that for every £1,000 which passed through the machine £100 was drawn by the club. It was a system of gambling or betting, the conductor of which never lost, but always won or gained. He and many other members of the club objected to the totalisator as run by the club. So far as he was aware the public's opinion had never been asked or invited in regard to the system. He said that the system of working the totalisator was contrary to the law of this colony and the members and all persons frequenting the racecourse while the said machine was running subjected themselves to penalties, fines, and imprisonments.

The answering affidavit of the respondent stated that the control of all matters relating to the management of the club was entrusted to the committee of the club. No member had at any time objected to the rules and regulations which they had framed for the conduct of the club's affairs. At the meeting in question he presided, and at the outset he said that he noticed that the legality of the meeting had been questioned, and he ruled that the meeting was duly convened, and that it was not necessary to give notice of routine business, but only of special and extraordinary matters. After a little discussion the applicant apparently acquiesced in this ruling. Thereafter the business of the meeting proceeded; the applicant took part in the proceedings and moved the resolutions standing in his name, and these were rejected on a vote. Deponent submitted that the applicant was now estopped from taking an objection to the legality of the proceedings at the annual meeting. As to the question of the totalisator, deponent referred to the former occasion on which the machine used to be in vogue on the racecourse, and he added that on each occasion on which the question of the admission of bookmakers had been put to the members they had been against it. In his (respondent's) opinion, and in the opinion of the majority of the committee, the totalisator had been worked with beneficial results, because it had enabled the club to increase the stakes for which races were run, and he was satisfied that the change had resulted in a considerable diminution of the amount of money wagered on horse-racing. There was now less inducement to owners to run their horses for betting rather than for the stakes. The receipts from the totalisator for the year had been £22,872 15s., as against £7,591 6s., receipts for the previous year, and the increased receipts had enabled the club to increase the stakes by £13,698 12s. 6d. over the amount given in the previous year. The addition of the totalisator was not a question that to the best of his knowledge and belief had been brought up by any member of the club. Applicant had never tabled any resolution against the totalisator, but he had been actively engaged in endeavouring to procure the readmission of the bookmakers to the course. The committee had refused permission to certain bookmakers who persisted in going on the course after being warned not to do so. The club had not taken any cognisance of private betting among members of the club if such took place. The totalisator was recognised as an essential adjunct in many countries in connection with a racecourse. To permit the totalisator was at least as much within the scope of the authority of the committee as to allow bookmakers on the course. He submitted that the pari-mutuel, being a system of mutual betting, was recognised and not declared to be illegal, under section 21 of Act 56, 1902. With reference to the statement that it was impossible for the totalisator to lose, through frauds and other reasons, the persons working the totalisator had lost a considerable sum of money. Counsel also read affidavits of a corroborative nature by Rudolf Cloete (a member of the club), and Henry Graham Cloete (secretary of the club).

The replying affidavit of the applicant said that the whole purport of the three affidavits filed by the other side on the question of the first part of the application was (1) that he was stopped, and (2) that he had no locus standi to bring this matter before the Court. On the point of estoppel, he denied that he acquiesced in the proceedings at the said meeting. As to his locus standi, he submitted that, as a member of the club, he had the right to come into court, and ask that the club should be stopped from acting unlawfully and illegally. As to the totalisator, he was strongly opposed to a monopoly system of betting, and to being dictated to as to how he should invest his money. The system did not prevail in England, the greatest centre of racing, and it had been declared to be illegal.

Dr. Greer for applicant; Mr. Molteno for respondents.

Dr. Greer passed briefly under review the various Acts bearing upon the club, and the privileges given to it.

De Villiers, C.J., put it to counsel that there were no affidavits from other members of the club that they were not present at the meeting in consequence of notice not having been given.

Dr. Greer assented, and added that what the applicant went on was that certain rules were framed directly under the Act of Parliament, which had not been carried out in this particular instance.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But should he not further show that, in consequence of the rules not being complied with, several members, or some members, had no knowledge of the meeting, and would have voted against the resolutions adopted there had they been present.]

Dr. Greer: It might, my lord, have been advisable to have done so, but I submit, on the strict legal interpretation, he is taking his stand on that.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but the Court has often held in matters of this kind that a mere irregularity or illegality is not enough, unless that irregularity of illegality had some result. If it had no result, if it resulted in no mischief to any one, has the Court ever set aside proceedings of this nature?]

Dr. Greer admitted that he did not know that it had ever been done, but he submitted that in this particular instance the bye-laws were more binding than the bye-laws of an ordinary society, because they were framed under and by virtue of an Act of Parliament. Counsel went on to argue that insufficient notice was given, and urged that such an important matter as the agreement with the Milnerton Estates, which might change the whole venue of the races, should have appeared in the notices. Counsel referred to the notices which were published, and urged that they did not comply with Rule 18, both as to the matter and dates of publication. Dealing with the question of whether the applicant was estopped from taking further proceedings, counsel urged that he did nothing at the annual meeting, which deprived him of his right to move as a member of the club to have the proceedings at the meeting declared void. On the question of the totalisator, Dr. Greer referred to the statutes, and said there was a certain section of the Act of 1902 which excepted the Jockey Club from the operation of the Act.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but it does not except them from the operation of the Act 27 of 1882.]

Dr. Greer: No, my lord; I was just going to deal with that presently.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Under Act 27 of 1882, was not Mr. Cloete prosecuted.]

Dr. Greer: Yes, my lord.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think there was an appeal to the Supreme Court.]

Dr. Greer: Yes, and it was disallowed.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Court held that it was a case of betting in a public place, and as the agent for the persons betting, Mr. Cloete was liable.]

Dr. Greer: That is so.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did they go on betting after that, carrying on the totalisator?]

Dr. Greer: Apparently, my lord, because the totalisator is going now.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I remember a Bill was brought into the house to legalise the totalisator. Well, it was one of the provisions, but it was dropped out.]

Dr. Greer said that Mr. Cloete was prosecuted for contravening section 7 (sub-section 13) of the Act of 1882.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he did not understand how it was possible that, in defiance of a decision of the Supreme Court, the totalisator could have been carried on so long without a prosecution. In the course of the argument, he also remarked that the present applicant did not seem to be influenced by any motives of morality; he was merely opposed to one particular mode of betting.

Mr. Molteno submitted that with regard to the first part of the application, it was clear that Mr. Brady was now es-stopped from coming to the Court. There had been a case decided by the High Court in Natal, where a man was warned off the Durban course. He brought an action against the committee of the Durban Club for damages, but he had not availed himself of the right of appeal to the Jockey Club, and the High Court dismissed the action, saying that plaintiff had not availed himself of his own rights, and had not appealed. So in regard to the present application, Mr. Brady, if he thought the decision of the chairman was wrong, ought to have claimed under Rule 19 to take the voice of the members present as to whether he were wrong; he did not do that, and now, after the members of the committee had given judgment against him in the matter of the admission of bookmakers to the course, he wished to recuse the judge. As to the second part of the application, this was a matter of very great importance. It was an application which, as matters now stood, practically involved the life of the management of the Turf Club. His lordship would see, on looking at the accounts, that tens of thousands of pounds were involved. Mr. Brady, having failed to get the other members of the club to allow the bookmakers to come on the course, did not come to the Court and ask for a declaration that betting was altogether illegal, but he asked the Court to declare that a specific kind of betting was illegal, for the purpose of forcing on the club the re-admission of the bookmakers, which the majority of the members of the club did not wish to have; he asked in the second portion of his application for a declaration of rights on motion against the club, and in the third section for a perpetual interdict, but the Court should order that the buildings, which had cost a large sum of money, should be pulled down. He (counsel) submitted that, whatever the merits of the case might be, this was not the form of proceedings which should be brought before the Court to determine such a question. He thought that such an application upon motion was unprecedented.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If there are no facts in dispute, why should not the Court on motion decide?]

Mr. Molteno: But there would be a large number of facts in dispute.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Supposing, on the statements made in your affidavits, it is clear that the totalisator is an illegality, cannot the Court then on motion—]

Mr. Molteno: I am going to submit to the Court that it is not illegal.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I am only now on the question as to whether, as you say, it is wholly unprecedented to have a motion of this kind instead of an action. I say that if the Court were to hold upon your statements or the statements in your affidavits that the totalisator is illegal, it could make a declaration on motion?]

Mr. Molteno: Of course, I would admit that there would have to be a very large number of facts before it for the Court to issue an interdict. In further argument, counsel said that the Act of 1902 specifically legalised the totalisator.

[De Villiers, C.J.: As far as I read it, it says that nothing in the Act shall make it illegal.]

Mr. Molteno submitted that, if applicant had wanted to test the legality of the totalisator, he should have laid an information under the Police Offences Act, and had a case in the Magistrate's Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That has been done.]

Mr. Molteno: Not under the Act of 1902.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But the Act of 1902 does not make the totalisator legal.]

Mr. Molteno read the first section of the Act.

[De Villiers, C.J.: "Nothing in this part contained" shall extend to it. Therefore, you must read this Act as if it does not apply to the totalisator; it does not say that, "nothing in this Act contained" shall apply.]

Mr. Molteno: It says under the earlier section: "All laws, in so far as they may be inconsistent with or repugnant to the previous Act are hereby repealed." Proceeding, counsel said it was quite clear that if a case were brought into the Magistrate's Court against these people for an infringement of the Police Offences Act, the defence raised under section 21 would be set up at once, and the Magistrate would hold that the legislature had sanctioned, deliberately, betting by means of the totalisator, or any other betting on a racecourse.

De Villiers, C.J., said that all it meant was, that no person could be prosecuted under this Act of 1902 for using the totalisator, nor could Mr. Cloete be prosecuted under this Act, which made the penalties so severe. He asked counsel whether this club had been carrying on the totalisator since the judgment given by the Court upon the appeal, at all events without legislative sanction.

Mr. Molteno said that he presumed so.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Upon what principle was it done? Upon what principle do the police act in matters of this kind? If there is a law, and the Court has decided that there is an illegality, do the police and everybody else wink their eyes at an illegality?]

Mr. Molteno said that the former attempt to stop the totalisator was made by a Mr. Day, a law agent in Cape Town, and apparently the decision was given that the totalisator was an infringement of the Act of 1882. He took it that after that the totalisator went on, and nobody interfered.

Counsel went on to say that it was clearly the intention of the legislature to exempt from the provisions of the Act, duly constituted race clubs under the rules and regulations of the Jockey Club of South Africa. He had always taken it that under section 21 of the Act the working of the totalisator was rendered specifically legal. He submitted that the legislature did allow, and did permit, wagering on a racecourse, and the wording of the section showed that the totalisator was the very thing aimed at.

Dr. Greer, in reply, said that section 37 was, at any rate, as extensive as—if not more so—than the original subsection 13 of section 7, under which the conviction was upheld in Day v. Cloete. There was another ground upon which he was prepared to argue, and it was that there was nothing in their own Acts to start this machine. Under Act 20 of 1882 the club were entitled to do certain things, but it could not be contended that the totalisator was a necessary part of racing. It was provided that the bye-laws must not be repugnant to the general law of the Colony. His learned friend had produced no notice to the Colonial Secretary that it was proposed to institute the totalisator. Counsel submitted that the substituted section 37 of the Act of 1902 was wide enough to cover a case of this kind.

B

De Villiers, C.J.: This application has a three-fold object—to have it declared that the proceedings of the general meeting on February 26 last were wholly illegal; secondly, for an order declaring that the process or system of betting and wagering by means of the totalisator is contrary to law and contrary to the purposes for which the club was constituted; and thirdly, to have the system of betting by means of the totalisator abolished and discontinued, and to have the accessories removed from the property of the club. In regard to the first part of this application, I quite agree that the notices convening the meeting were not in strict compliance with the 18th bye-law, which provides that all meetings should be called by advertisements stating the business to be considered, inserted in one of the Cape Town daily papers, on not less than two different days, one of them being the day of meeting and one at least ten days before such meeting. On the day of the meeting there was due notice, but there was not due notice not less than ten days before the day of the meeting. Therefore, in strictness, there was not a compliance. If there had been any proof tendered to the Court that in consequence of non-compliance with this bye-law members who would otherwise have wished to record their vote against the proceedings were prevented from being present, that would be a ground for interference by the Court. It is high time, in my opinion, as I have repeatedly said, that persons who acquire duties and privileges under an Act of Parliament should obey all its provisions, and not only that, but that they should be guided by their own regulations, made in pursuance of the Statute. We have cases continually before us in which either, through inadvertence, or intentionally, provisions of this kind are not complied with, and it is well that it should be understood that anyone shown to be injured by reason of a non-compliance with such provisions, is entitled to come into court to have the proceedings set aside. In the present case, however, it appears to me that the applicant ought to have been prepared with some evidence that, in consequence of non-compliance with this regulation, some persons have been injured. There is nothing to show that anyone was not present by reason of this want of sufficient notice, and therefore I think, on that ground, the first part of the application should fail.

Then we come to the question of the totalisator, which seems to be the more important question, and I am bound to say it strikes me as somewhat extraordinary that, after the decision of the Court, in which it held that the totalisator is an infringement of the existing law, the totalisator was continued to be employed on the racecourse. There seems to have been no prosecution; the authorities closed their eyes, and thought it was a useful institution—I don't say they were wrong. I am not going into the merits of the matter at all. I am simply looking at it from the point of view of obedience to the law—but it does seem strange that there has been no prosecution whatever, and that this totalisator was carried on in defiance of the decision of the Supreme Court. But then came the Act of 1902, and the 21st section of that Act provides that "nothing in this part contained shall extend to any person receiving or holding any money or valuable thing, by way of stakes or deposit, to be paid to the winner of any race or lawful sport, game, or exercise, or to the owner of any horse engaged in any race, or to any owner or occupier, or person duly authorised to act for him, of any racecourse or other ground used for horse racing, keeping, or using, on any day on which any race is being held under and in accordance with the rules and regulations for the time being in force of the Jockey Club of South Africa, any buildings, sheds, structures, or any enclosed spaces on or within such course or ground for the purpose of betting between persons there assembled, on races there and on that day to be so held." Then I find in the fifth part of the Act there is this provision: "Sub-section 13 of section 7 of the Police Offences Act is hereby repealed, and the sub-section following shall be substituted therefor, that is to say (13) betting in any street or open place or playing therein at any game for a wager or stake, or playing at or with any table or instrument of gaming." The important question arises whether, bearing in mind that the original sub-section has been repealed, to have a different section substituted, it cannot fairly be held that the 21st section legalizes the use of the totalisator at race meetings under the rules of the Jockey Club. If the words had been "nothing in this Act contained," there would have been no doubt upon the point, but Mr. Greer properly pointed out that it says "nothing in this part contained"—that is the third part—leaving the fifth part apparently still applicable. It is an important question, and I consider it would be advisable that this question should be decided by action and before a full Court, in order that the further questions which were raised as to whether the totalisator can be employed in accordance with the Statute, independently of the question of betting, and whether the betting by means of a totalisator as now conducted is in a public place may be decided before the full Court. The decision which I have arrived at is this: That application (1) should be refused, but that the applicant should proceed by action for the purpose of establishing his claims; (2) and (3), in the notice of motion, the notice of motion will stand in the place of summons, costs of this motion to abide the result. The declaration will refer only to claims (2) and (3) and not include claim 1.

Ex parte CONRADIE.

Dr. Greer was for the applicant and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the respondent. The application was on notice of motion for the appointment of trustees in the insolvent estate in the place of Cornelius Benicke and G. W. Steytler, whose appointment had not been confirmed.

De Villiers, C.J., refused the application, but as the case was caused by the magistrate not giving his decision as he ought to have done, it was a case in which the costs should come out of the estate, the respondents declared duly elected as trustees.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

INSOLVENT ESTATE WEYMAR } 1906.
V. LE ROUX. { Mar. 30th.

Delivery—Insolvency of seller—
Interdict.

The applicant, through his agent, purchased from W. some sheep, which were to be delivered on the due date of a promissory note which was given by R. for the price. At the time of the purchase the sheep were shown to the agent along with other sheep, but they were not counted out, nor were they placed in his possession or under his control. On the insolvency of W., before delivery had been effected, the applicant obtained a rule, calling on the respondents, the trustees of W., to shew cause why they should not be interdicted from selling the sheep.

Held, that the rule should be discharged.

This was an application brought by J. J. Moore, attorney, Caledon, in his capacity as trustee in the insolvent estate Weymar, on notice calling upon Barend Johannes le Roux to shew cause why certain rule nisi should not be discharged.

The Court recently granted, on an ex parte application by the present respondent, a rule nisi calling upon Mr. Moore to shew cause why he should not be restrained from selling a certain sheep, alleged to have been purchased by the then petitioner from the said Weymar, pending an action to be instituted by Le Roux. No return day was fixed. The trustee was anxious to dispose of the stock, and, therefore, moved to set aside the rule.

The original petition, on which the rule was granted, set out that petitioner bought from Weymar 200 sheep and 100 lambs for £200, payable by promissory note given to the said Weymar. Petitioner was not prepared to take away the sheep, and he arranged on certain terms as to the wool to leave them under the care of Weymar until a later date, when he was to remove them. He found subsequently, when Weymar surrendered his estate, that he had brought up in his schedule 227 sheep and part of the sheep purchased by petitioner, and when the estate was placed under sequestration, he found that the sheep had been removed to the farm of one De Wet. The sole trustee in Weymar's estate afterwards announced his intention of selling the sheep, hence the application for an interdict.

Further affidavits were now read on both sides, from which it appeared that the transaction arose out of an indebtedness by Weymar to Guthrie and Theron, attorneys and auctioneers, in the sum of £184. On being pressed for payment, Weymar went into Caledon, and had an interview with Mr. Theron, as a result of which it was arranged that Weymar should sell 100 lambs at 10s. each and 200 ewes at 15s. each, Mr. Theron then informing Weymar that he bought for Mr. Le Roux. The trustee now declined to carry the contract, leaving it open to Le Roux, if he thought fit, to sue for damages.

Mr. Gardiner was for applicant; Dr. Greer was for respondent.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Dr. Greer): Where is the evidence of delivery?]

Dr. Greer submitted that when Le Roux went to Weymar's farm on the 6th August, the day after Guthrie and Theron had concluded the sale for him, he saw the sheep, and approved of them, and in the sale and approval there was delivery at the time.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is approval enough to make delivery? Should there not be some control, some possession, some temporary possession? Le Roux did not exercise control over the sheep.]

Dr. Greer submitted that there was a temporary possession in this case, and that, when he, Le Roux, went to the farm, the sheep, which had already been bought under the deed of sale, were shown to him.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was nothing done to separate the sheep which he had bought from the rest of the sheep?]

Dr. Greer said he thought he was right in saying that the whole of the sheep on the farm, except a few which belonged to another farmer, were shown to Le Roux. He submitted that it would not be necessary for Le Roux to actively take over possession of the sheep for the purpose of establishing delivery.

Without calling upon Mr. Gardiner.

De Villiers, C.J.: At the time when the rule was granted I naturally assumed from the terms of the affidavit, upon which I granted the rule, that there had been a delivery of the sheep at the date of the purchase. There was nothing in the affidavit then read to show that Le Roux himself was not personally present as the purchaser. It now appears that some creditors of Weymar had written to him, and that they acted on instructions from Le Roux, and in order to secure a debt owing to them they induced Weymar to sell the sheep ostensibly to Le Roux, who was to give a promissory note, and that promissory note was given to him to endorse, and after it was endorsed it was given back to Guthrie and Theron in payment of their debt. That seems substantially to have been the transaction, and there was nothing in the petition to lead me to suppose that that was the true nature of the transaction. I am satisfied now, after hearing all the affidavits read, that the intention was to give delivery on the due date of the promissory note. The sheep were to be kept in the possession of Weymar and there is not, in my opinion, sufficient proof that at any time there was delivery of the sheep to Le Roux. They were not separated from the rest of the flock; all the sheep were simply pointed out, but the mere pointing out of sheep, without saying which sheep were intended to be sold, would not constitute delivery. Chief Justice Maasdorp, in his Institutes (Vol. 2, p. 20), mentions, amongst the modes of acquiring property: "By the transferrer placing the thing before the transferee, with the object of transferring the possession, in which case the delivery is said to be longa manu traditio." That is not what took place here. Delivery can only be shown by such act as would amount to a practical or symbolical taking possession of the property by the purchaser. The case of Haupt's Trustees v. Haupt and Co. (1 Searle, 287) is a very different case from the present. In that case there had been a lease of the land on which the articles were, a lease to the defendants in the case, and the keys of the house had been handed over to the defendants. The defendants were, therefore, in possession of the property which had been leased to them, and thereupon they appointed their brother, a lessor, as their manager, to manage the farm which the defendants had hired. Clearly, proof of a taking possession, and thereafter handing back the possession to the person who had handed it over. In the present case nothing of the kind occurred. The sheep were simply shown; they were not counted out; nothing was done by Le Roux to assert his ownership over them, and, in my opinion, it is clear, from what transpires from the subsequent affidavits, that it was only intended that delivery should be given on the day on which the promissory note fell due. Under these circumstances, ownership never passed, and the applicants are not entitled to any relief. The rule must, therefore, be discharged, with costs.

CURATOR BONIS OF WATSON { 1906.
V. ESTATE PETERSEN { Mar. 30th.

Lease — Condition against sub-letting — Colourable agreement — Cancellation of lease.

The defendant was lessee of certain licensed premises under a lease which contained a condition against sub-letting and a provision that the lease could be cancelled upon breach of any condition. The defendant entered into an agreement with one F., whereby the management of the business was entrusted to F., but in fact the defendant retained no interest in the premises beyond the right to receive monthly payments from F. The agreement contained every essential ingredient of a sub-lease, although not so called.

Held, that the plaintiff, as lessor, was entitled to claim a cancellation of the lease.

This matter came on for hearing upon an exception taken by plaintiff to the plea of defendant arising out of an action for certain lease of premises at Colesberg to be cancelled, and for an order of ejectment against defendant.

Plaintiff's declaration set out that he entered into a certain lease with George Petersen (since deceased), whereby he let to the latter certain dwelling-house, with canteen rooms adjoining, the tenancy to commence on the 29th January, 1903, and to determine on the 29th February, 1906. It was provided that the lessee should not sub-let the premises without first obtaining the consent of the lessor. If the contract were broken, the plaintiff was to have the right to take possession of the property and buildings without proceeding by an action. Plaintiff alleged that in August, 1905, he discovered that in May, 1903, in breach of the contract, the premises had been sub-let by defendant to one Farmer for the period ending February, 1906. Defendant in his plea admitted that in May, 1903, he entered into an agreement with one Farmer, and also that in June, 1905, that agreement was cancelled so far as Farmer was concerned, and a similar agreement was entered into with one Jackson, but he said that the agreement did not constitute a breach of the lease entered into with the plaintiff.

Mr. Gardiner for plaintiff and ex-plicit. Mr. P. S. T. Jones for defendant and respondent.

Mr. Gardiner: Our whole point is that the agreement with Palmer was a lease.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why do you want the lease?]

We do not want the lease, but the sub-lease (see the declaration, par. 4). Palmer is called the "manager," but he is virtually a sub-tenant. He pays £27 10s. a month to Peterson's estate. Peterson's estate has no interest in the business, and I submit that this is a case of sub-letting against the terms of the lease.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones: Bishop was merely a manager, and had no sub-lease. The agreement with Davis could not be enforced at law as a lease. It is true that Bishop's salary was not fixed, but it was ascertainable. "Id certum est quod certum reddi potest."

[De Villiers, C.J.: But suppose that there were no profits? The question is whether this was a contract of sub-letting entered into to evade the terms of the lease or not.]

If there were no profits Bishop would get nothing. The ordinary consequences of a contract do not apply. The points in this case, I submit, should be tried by action, and not indirectly by way of exception.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff is the owner of the premises, and he leased the property to the defendant. In the contract of lease it was provided that the lessee should not sublet the leased premises without the consent of the lessor. It was also provided that should the lessee not fulfil the conditions of the contract, the lessor was entitled to cancel it and take possession of the property. The declaration, therefore, prays for an order that the contract be cancelled, on the ground that the defendant did sublet the premises to one Farmer in contravention of the condition and the declaration further prays for an order of ejectment. To this declaration a plea has been filed which denies that the defendant sublet the premises, but he admits there had been an agreement with Farmer, and he produces the agreement, which was in writing, and he relies upon this agreement as not being a sub-lease, and therefore that the plaintiff is not entitled to a cancellation of the lease. To this plea the plaintiff has excepted on the ground that it discloses no answer to the declaration, and the question is whether this agreement in writing amounts to a sub-lease. In my opinion it was a colourable arrangement by which Farmer obtained all the benefits of a sub-lessee without being so termed in the agreement. He was to be a manager for the defendant, who was not, however, to be entitled to any share of the profits as such. Whether there were profits or not, the defendant was to have a monthly payment for the use of the premises, while he was not liable for any of the debts or expenses of the concern. If the payments were not punctually made the defendant could put an end to the agreement precisely as if it had been an agreement of sub-lease. In my opinion the agreement contains an agreement of sub-lease, and the exception must therefore be allowed with costs.

Summons—Amount of claim—Exception.

It is a good exception to a summons in an action for defamation that it claims damages without stating the amount claimed.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the defendant (who took exception) and Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff. Counsel for the defendant said that exception was taken on the ground that the summons did not disclose any specific amount of damages. The summons merely claimed damages for an alleged libel on the 15th July, 1905, to the effect that the plaintiff had been convicted of a certain crime and received a certain sentence. That was wrong, and it was also malicious and slanderous, and £100 damages was claimed in the declaration. The summons did not comply with the rules of the Court.

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant was quite justified in taking this exception, because it is well that any irregularity of proceedings should be checked at once. It seems to be an extraordinary summons to claim damages without stating the amount. The summons is not as near as may be to the form given in the rules of Court. I think that the plaintiff should amend his summons, so that an irregularity of this kind may not remain on the records. The Court will allow the exception, the plaintiff allowed to amend his summons by inserting a claim for £100, the costs to abide the result.

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT, CAPE COLONY.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

METROPOLITAN TRAMWAYS
CO., LTD. V. TOWN COUNCIL AND CAPE TOWN AND DIS-TRICT GAS, LIGHT, AND COKE CO. } 1906.
Apr. 2nd.

Pleading — Misjoinder — Negligence.

A declaration alleged, in effect, that the plaintiff had been damaged by an explosion caused by the negligent act of the second defendant, in laying a gas main through and over a disused and unventilated sewer under the control of the first defendant and by the negligent act of the first defendant in giving its consent to such laying.

Held, that there was no ground for an exception of misjoinder of the defendants.

This was an argument on exceptions taken by the defendants to the plaintiff's declaration.

The declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is the Metropolitan Tramways Company, Limited, a company duly incorporated under Act No. 22 of 1895 for the purpose of running electric tramways through the streets of Cape Town and elsewhere.

2. The defendants are: (1) The Cape Town Council incorporated under Act No. 26 of 1893 and subsequent Acts, hereinafter called the defendant Council; (2) the Cape Town and District Gas, Light and Coke Company, Limited, carrying on business in Cape Town and elsewhere, hereinafter called the defendant company.

3. For many years past and prior to the year 1892 there existed in Cape Town a certain sewer, which was laid by the defendant Council from the upper portion of the town and thence from the top of Adderley-street down and underneath the said street to the sea; the said sewer was always under the direct control and supervision of the defendant Council, and it was the duty of the said Council at all times to take due and proper care that the same was in a proper state of repair and not in any condition whereby it might become a source of danger to anyone lawfully using the public streets of Cape Town.

4. Up to the year 1897 or thereabouts the said sewer had been used by the defendant Council for the discharge of sewerage matter into the sea; but in or about the said year the said user ceased, and the said sewer was used by the defendant Council for storm water purposes, and thereafter was disused altogether, and was blocked up by the defendant Council at a point in Adderley-street opposite Darling-street, and also at another point in the said street below the Railway-station.

5. In or about the year 1892 the defendant company with the knowledge, consent, and approval of the defendant Council, laid across and underneath Adderley-street a high pressure main or pipe for the conveyance of gas, and the said main intersected the said sewer at a point near the Railway-station; the said main was thereafter, with the defendant Council's knowledge and consent, used for the conveyance of coal gas and water gas from the defendant company's works at Woodstock to the said company's works at Long-street, whence the said gas was distributed to premises in Cape Town requiring the same, as part of the business of the said company.

6. The said gas main was laid in such a manner as to intersect the crown of the aforesaid sewer and was at a certain point in or near Adderley-street in direct communication with the interior of the said sewer.

7. In or about the month of June, 1905, the said sewer was in a condition dangerous to the public and to persons lawfully using Adderley-street.

8. The said dangerous condition arose from the acts, neglect and default of the defendant Council in blocking up the said sewer at the points opposite Darling-street and below the Railway-station, and leaving no proper ventilation therein, and in permitting and consenting to the laying of the gas main intersecting the said sewer and having access thereto as aforementioned; and it also arose from the leaky condition of the defendant company's gas main and pipes as hereinafter described.

9. It was the duty of the defendant company to keep the said gas main and other gas mains or pipes laid and used by them in due and proper order, to prevent the escape of any gas therefrom by way of leakage from the mains or otherwise, and it was the duty of the defendant Council to take due and proper steps to inspect the said gas mains and pipes from time to time and to ascertain whether they were in proper order, and to insist upon the said company putting and keeping the same in proper order.

10. Not regarding their duty in that behalf the defendant company prior to June 15th, 1905, allowed its gas mains or pipes to become in a leaky condition either in the neighbourhood of Adderley-street at or near the point where the said high pressure main intersected the said sewer; or at some other portion of the defendant company's system of pipes. And in consequence of the above neglect for some time prior to June 15th, 1905, gas was allowed to escape from the defendant company's mains or pipes into the said sewer, and the said Council not regarding its duty in that behalf failed and neglected to keep the said sewer free of gas, and to prevent gas from the mains or pipes of the defendant company filling the sewer; and neglected to inspect the said mains and pipes to ascertain whether they were in proper order and to insist that they be kept in proper order.

11. On or about June 15th, 1905, the gas that had escaped into the sewer ignited from some cause unknown to the plaintiff company, and in consequence of such ignition an explosion occurred in Adderley-street, and the tram lines of the plaintiff company were ripped up, broken, and destroyed, and the works of the plaintiff company in the said street injured, for a considerable length.

12. By reason of the damage caused to Adderley-street by the said explosion the said street had to be closed for traffic for a considerable period; the work of renovating the said tram lines had to be undertaken by the plaintiff company at great expense, and during the period that the said street was closed the plaintiff company was prevented from earning profits by the carriage of passengers which it would otherwise have earned, and incurred considerable additional expense in and about the management of its business; and also incurred certain extra expenses in costs of supervision of traffic and certain legal and other costs and charges in connection with a Commission appointed by the Government to investigate the cause of the said explosion; the plaintiff company annexes hereto marked A, B and C particulars of the damage sustained by it owing to the said explosion, and in consequence thereof.

13. All things have happened all times have elapsed and all conditions have been fulfilled necessary to entitle the plaintiff company to recover from the defendants or one or other of them the aforesaid sums of £1,044 0s. 0d., £2,033 0s. 0d. and £700 being damages sustained by reason of defendants' negligence, but the defendants neglect and refuse to pay the said sum or any portion thereof.

The plaintiff company claims from the defendants jointly, or from one or other of them:

- (a) The sum of £1,044.
- (b) The sum of £2,033.
- (c) The sum of £700.
- (d) Interest a tempore moræ.
- (e) Alternative relief.
- (f) Costs of suit.

Exception was taken to the declaration on the following grounds: (1) That the declaration is bad in law, vague, and embarrassing in that (a) the plaintiff company is not entitled to claim in the manner and form adopted by it therein; (b) two separate and distinct parties are joined as defendants in respect of separate alleged defaults or alleged acts of wrong-doing, but no joint default or act of wrong-doing is alleged against them; (c) the said parties cannot in law be sued in one, and the same suit and for the recovery of the same remedy from the defendants jointly, or one or other of them in respect of the matters complained of; (d) it is not alleged what default or act was the proximate cause of the damage alleged, nor which of the two defendants made any default or committed any act to which it was due; (e) it is not alleged that any default or act of the defendant Council was the proximate cause of the ignition of the gas or of the damage complained of. Wherefore the defendant Council prays that the said declaration be set aside, with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor) was for the first ex-cipient, the Town Council; Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Russell) was for the second ex-cipient, the Gas Company; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C.) was for the respondents and plaintiffs.

Mr. Schreiner: It is not alleged that it was the duty of the Town Council either to block up this sewer or to ventilate it properly. Nor is it stated whether the misfeasance lay with us or with the Gas Company. Then paragraph 9 of the declaration indistinctly alleges want of negligence; but why was it the duty of the Town Council to inspect the gas mains running through this sewer? As to paragraph 10, it is not shewn that the Town Council was bound to keep the sewer free of gas.

Paragraph 11 does not charge either the plaintiff company or anybody else with having ignited this gas. Negligence is alleged, but what negligence? Whose negligence? Then, again, the claim is novel. We say that the declaration is vague and embarrassing.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Had separate actions been brought the costs would have been increased.]

That might be; but the evidence taken in the one case might have been available in the other. In our law actions of this kind are under the Lex Aquilia. In English law there are special rules as to joinder of actions. Parties cannot be joined unless they are acting in concert (Thompson v. London C.C. 80, L.T. 512). If there was a joint act between the defendants it must be an unlawful act. Had it been averred that it was unlawful for us to consent to the laying of the gas main the declaration might have been good.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How are you prejudiced by this form of pleading?]

We ought to know whom we have to fight. Grueber (250) on the Lex Aquilia shows that a plaintiff cannot sue defendants jointly in a case like this. A man must say from whom he seeks to recover.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why cannot he recover against both?]

Against both is one thing; against each is another. We cannot plead to the averments of this declaration: even in England parties cannot be joined save under the same cause of action.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In this case the one party is sued for allowing the escape of gas into the sewer, and the other for allowing pipes to be laid where they could do damage.]

They do not say that we were bound to inspect the gas mains under any specific provision, but they attempt to cast a general duty upon us. They say that we blocked up the sewer without providing for its proper ventilation. That is not a wrong per se. Then they say that the mains of the Gas Company were leaky, but that has nothing to do with our alleged default. So far from showing cause for any joint action the declaration puts the Town Council and the Gas Company in antagonism all along. No precedent can be cited for any such pleading in our Courts (Rule 330 (a)). To say that "we are jointly, or one or other of us is liable," is bad pleading. The plaintiff must claim against each specifically or allege that the defendants have acted in concert. The Lex Aquilia does not allow that.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If one party consents, does not that render him liable?]

Not unless the consent be to an unlawful act; and that is not alleged.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was it not your duty to leave your sewer in such a condition that no harm was likely to arise from your consent?]

No duty was cast upon the Council to inspect mains and sewers. A man must say on what he relies in order to prove a duty. He cannot simply say "It is a duty." Averments of duty are not allegations of fact. As to joint tort-feasors see Clerk and Lindell on Torts (p. 61, 3rd edit.). Separate tort-feasors cannot be joined in an action but only joint tort-feasors. Pote v. Liquidators of Eastern Province Bank (Burr. 1878, p. 56). It is embarrassing to have to fight two parties without knowing with which we may ultimately have to deal.

[De Villiers, C.J.: They can appear separately.]

They do, and they plead separately.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then I do not see how you are embarrassed.]

If the plaintiff meant that the defendants were joint tort-feasors he would have pleaded that they were liable singuli in solidum.

Mr. Benjamin (for the Gas Company) said that he had nothing to add.

Mr. Searle (for respondents) was not heard in reply.

Without calling upon Mr. Searle.

De Villiers, C.J.: The declaration in this case is certainly not artistically drawn, and if I believed for one moment that the interests of justice would in any way suffer by allowing the declaration to remain as it stands, I should uphold the exception. I cannot, however, perceive what possible prejudice there can be to the defendants to be joined in the same action in the manner in which they are joined in the present case, nor do I see how the interests of justice can in any way suffer. On the contrary, I believe that in joining the two defendants in the manner in which they are joined costs may be saved and no injury done to anyone. Supposing the declaration had stated briefly the following facts: That an explosion occurred in Adderley-street by reason of which the plaintiffs were injured; that the cause of the explosion was the laying of a gas main by the defendant company with the consent of the defendant Council over the crown of the sewer, and such a laying of the gas main, as well as the giving a consent thereto, was an act of negligence on the part of both; clearly there would be a joint act on behalf of both the defendants, for which they would both be responsible. Now these words are not used identically in the manner in which I have used them, but the general purport of the declaration is to that effect. No doubt there is a good deal more alleged than I have stated in the few brief words, but if there is some cause shown for joining both defendants in the same action, then the fact that other matters are introduced, as they have been introduced in the present case, really does not affect the case. Each defendant will only be called upon to answer what is alleged against him. The defendant Council cannot be called upon to answer for the gas pipes, except where the gas-pipes enter the sewer. If it can be shown at the trial that, under all the circumstances disclosed in this action, it was first of all a negligent act on the part of the company to lay the main through the crown of the sewer, and that it was a negligent act on the part of the defendant Council to give its consent to the laying of such main, then the plaintiff will at all events have proved part of the case, and be entitled to his remedy. Whether the plaintiff will succeed in proving the negligence is another matter that will depend very much upon the evidence of experts as to the manner in which gas pipes are laid, as to the manner in which they are allowed to enter sewers—I know nothing of these matters—it may well be that experts will be called to show that there is no negligence whatever, but on the other hand if experts should be called to prove that it was an improper and negligent way of doing the work, that the tendency of pipes in such circumstances is to leak, that a leakage into a sewer which has no outlet, and which is not properly ventilated, would be a danger to the street, well, I say there would be good cause of action shown on behalf of the plaintiff. I am of opinion, therefore, there is some ground stated in the declaration for joining both the defendants, the one doing what is alleged to be a negligent act and the other, whose consent is required for doing that, giving its consent. As to the costs of this exception, I think it would be well to allow that question to stand over until the trial. It may well be that at the trial it will be shown that there is no ground whatever for alleging such negligence on the part of both, and in that case it would not be a proper thing to join defendants in the manner in which they are joined in the action. The Court will, therefore, over-rule the exception, but the costs will be costs in the cause.

Mr. Schreiner suggested that the question of costs should stand over, and that it should be mentioned at the trial.

Mr. Searle said that he did not see why the costs should not be costs in the cause; it seemed a reasonable view.

Mr. Benjamin said he took it that if only one of the defendants were held liable, he would not have to bear the whole of the costs of the application.

De Villiers, C. J., said that, of course, he would only have to bear the plaintiff's costs.

HOOLE V. MALUSI.

Dowry cattle—Native custom—Interpleader suit.

The appellant bought an ox from S., a native, who had received the ox from the respondent, another native, as dowry cattle, upon his marriage with the daughter of S.

Held, that as the marriage did take place, M. was not entitled as against the appellant to claim ownership in the ox.

This was an appeal against the decision of the A.R.M. of Mqanduli in an interpleader action in favour of the defendant declaring that certain dowry cattle still in existence could be followed up. The original action was taken by Malusi against one Singe for the return of a certain dowry of cattle, or their value, and the defendant in that case subsequently sold an ox to one Hoole. Judgment was given against Singe for £35. The ox in the possession of Hoole was seized in execution of a writ, and the question was now raised whether this ox could be validly sold by Singe to Hoole. About two years ago the plaintiff, according to Kafir customs, married the defendant's daughter, and paid the dowry to the defendant. The wife deserted the plaintiff after living with him for 21 months. The Magistrate's reasons for judgment were as follows: "Judgment was given by the R.M. of Mqanduli in a case of Malusi v. Singe for the return of original dowry cattle, or their value, and the defendant in that case disposed of one of the dowry cattle to Hoole for a debt contracted at the latter's store. Judgment in the interpleader suit was entered in favour of defendant (plaintiff in the former case), on the grounds that according to native custom where dowry cattle are still in existence they can be followed up. The beast in question was a pledge in the first instance given by defendant in this case to defendant in the former case, and was, whilst in the possession of Singe, pledged as security for a debt. He considered that Hoole (plaintiff) was not entitled to succeed in the action."

Mr. Benjamin was for the appellant, there being no appearance for the respondent.

Counsel pointed out that here the marriage had actually taken place, and the cattle had been properly attached. The Magistrate had relied upon a case where the ownership of the cattle did not pass until the marriage took place. It would be noticed that in the first case the Magistrate gave judgment merely for the value and not for the return of the cattle.

De Villiers, C. J.: In this case it appears that in 1903 Hoole purchased an ox from Singe for £10, and paid the price. He received delivery of the ox, and remained in possession of it until 1905, when an action was brought by one Malusi against Singe for the return of the original dowry or their value, and the Magistrate says: "The defendant in that case disposed of one of the dowry cattle to Mr. Hoole for a debt contracted at the latter's store. Judgment in the interpleader suit was entered in favour of the defendant (plaintiff in the former case), on the ground that, according to native custom, where dowry cattle are still in existence, they can be followed up. The beast in question was a pledge in the first instance, given by defendant in this case to defendant in the former case, and was whilst in the possession of Singe pledged as security for a debt. I, therefore, considered that Mr. Hoole, the plaintiff, was not entitled to succeed in this action." The Magistrate appears to have been entirely wrong as to what the decisions had previously been. The Court has never decided that the dowry cattle after marriage has taken place cannot be disposed of. The case of Peacock v. Ben Rango (19 Supreme Court, p. 323) was a case where the marriage had never taken place. That clearly appears from the judgment, and it was held that, until the marriage takes place, the father had no interest in the cattle beyond keeping them as security until the marriage. The inference from that is that when the marriage did take place the father did acquire the interest, and could dispose of the cattle. Well, if that is so, Singe had the right after the marriage of his daughter had taken place to dispose of the ox to Hoole, and in the subsequent interpleader suit Hoole should not be deprived of his right to the ox. For these reasons I am of opinion that the Magistrate erred in his judgment, and the appeal must be allowed with costs in both courts.

LOVE V. FUTELA. { 1906.
Apr. 2nd.
" 4th.

Native custom—Dowry cattle.

The respondent, a native in the Transkei, delivered three head of cattle to the reputed father of his intended bride in anticipation of the marriage, but she having been informed that she had been born before her mother was married, refused to marry the respondent.

Held, that as the marriage did not take place, without any fault on the respondent's part, the property did not pass.

Peacock v. Ben Rango (12 C.T.R., 545) affirmed.

Mr. McGregor was for the appellant, and there was no appearance for the respondent. This was an appeal from a decision of the R.M. of St. Mark's, in favour of the plaintiff (Futela), who, in an interpleader action, claimed three head of cattle, which he had given in dowry, the engagement of marriage having been cancelled. Counsel submitted that Futela, as prospective bridegroom, when he entered the interpleader action, had broken off the engagement. He had no locus standi when he sued on that occasion.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (April 4th.)

De Villiers, C. J.: This is an appeal from the Court of R.M. of St. Mark's in an action in which the Magistrate gave judgment for the respondent in an interpleader suit. The question there arose as to whether the respondent was entitled to claim certain three head of cattle as his own. It appears that three head of cattle had been given by him to his prospective father-in-law, the father of the girl he was about to marry. But the marriage never took place, and, according to the decision of the Court in the case of Peacock v. Ben Rango (12 C.T.R. 545) the property does not pass to the prospective father-in-law until the marriage takes place. That was decided on appeal by a full Court. But, then, reliance is placed in appeal on another decision of the Court, viz., the case of Nombombo v. Stofle (12 C.T.R. 596) in which a native, being engaged to be married to a native girl, delivered certain cattle to the father of the girl, but afterwards broke off the engagement without any fault on her part, and claimed back the cattle. There it was the person who had given the dowry cattle, who had broken off the engagement without any fault on the part of the girl, and it was held that it was not competent for him, by breaking the engagement in that way, to prevent the property from passing to the girl's father. Then, it is contended in the present case that it is really a collusive arrangement between the bridegroom and bride to defraud the creditor by pretending that there was a breach of the engagement. Well, that is a suggestion which finds no support in the evidence. The Magistrate who heard the case certainly did not take that view. The time at which the breach of the engagement took place was certainly after the previous action had been brought, but the girl's letters are produced, from which it is clear that she was the one who broke the engagement, and the reason why she broke it off was that it had been said by people, including, apparently, her intended himself, that she was not the daughter at all of the man to whom the dowry had been given. And the Magistrate seems to have believed that she was not his daughter, and that she had been born before her mother married Sihlati. The Magistrate held that, according to native custom, the dowry would not be payable. It does not appear whether the doctrine that a child becomes legitimate by subsequent marriage is part of the Kafir law. Apparently, the Magistrate took it for granted that she had been born before her mother married Sihlati. This is what the Magistrate says on this point: "It is to my mind clear that plaintiff's dowry cannot be attached to satisfy a judgment debt due to defendant by a brother of the prospective father-in-law since defendant obtained judgment against James Sihlati, and after the seizure of the three head of cattle the engagement between plaintiff and Louisa has been broken off by her for the reason that it is now reported that she is not the daughter of Timothy Sihlati, but the daughter of his wife born before the marriage, and plaintiff is, therefore, not only entitled to the three head of cattle in question but all the other cattle he has paid as dowry to Timothy Sihlati." It does not appear that the engagement was broken by the respondent, and, therefore, the case of Nombombo v. Stofle does not apply. The appeal must be dismissed. As there is no appearance for respondent, it will not be necessary to consider the question of costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

SMITH V. SCHUTZ AND { 1906.
DE JAGER. { Apr. 3rd.

Magistrate's finding on facts upheld.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of Colesberg in an interpleader action brought by the appellant against the respondents to determine the ownership of certain eight cattle attached in execution of a writ against appellant's father. The judgment of the Court below was that six oxen be released and declared not executable, and that the remaining two oxen be declared liable to the attachment, each party to pay his own costs.

Mr. Upington was for appellant (Charles George Smith); Mr. Gardiner was for respondents.

Mr. Upington said that the appeal involved the ownership of certain eight cattle, which were attached in a suit brought by the two respondents against the father of the appellant. The matter came before his lordship a considerable time ago (15 C.T.R. 766).

In the court below the Magistrate adjudged six of the oxen—five bearing the brand of the appellant and one the brand of his sister—to be the property of the plaintiff, and ordered each party to pay his own costs. His lordship gave judgment for the costs in the court below to be paid by the defendants (the present respondents). With regard to the remaining two cattle, which appeared to have borne the brand of the appellant's father (defendant in the previous suit), his lordship referred the matter back to the Magistrate for further information, which had now been obtained. Counsel proceeded to read the record in the original case, and the record of further evidence taken before the Magistrate, and the additional reasons furnished by the Magistrate for holding that the two oxen were liable to attachment, being of opinion that these cattle were the property of appellant's late father. In argument, Mr. Upington said that there was absolutely no evidence given in the court below that the two oxen were the property of the late Mr. Smith. The Magistrate went solely on inference, and in the face of a large mass of uncontradicted and reliable evidence. There was nothing more probable than that one of the oxen in dispute should have been given by the late Mr. Smith to his son Charles (the claimant), on the latter's return from commando in 1902. The Magistrate might think it improbable, but any ordinary human being would consider such a present to be highly probable.

Mr. Gardiner said that, since the matter had been sent back to the Resident Magistrate, it was clear that the contradictions between the mother's story and the claimant's story were so manifest as to justify the Magistrate in disregarding their evidence. Counsel proceeded to comment on the discrepancies in the evidence in regard to the circumstances under which appellant was alleged to have derived the oxen. The onus was, he contended, upon claimant to prove his title, and that onus he had failed to discharge.

Mr. Uppington, having been heard in reply,

Hopley, J., said that since the first hearing of the appeal the matter had been sent back to the Magistrate. The two oxen, about which the Magistrate was not in the first instance satisfied that they belonged to the claimant, were oxen which bore the mark of the debtor (father of the claimant), and were upon his farm. It was perfectly clear that the onus lay upon the claimant of proving that these cattle were not his father's, but his own. He (the learned Judge) should not have been at all inclined to criticise the Magistrate's judgment if he had held that upon the whole of the evidence these animals were proved to be the claimant's, but the Magistrate had taken upon himself—and it was a serious thing to take upon one's self—the position that he did not believe a word of what this family said, in other words, that he thought they had all come to the Court with a trumped-up story, and committed perjury for the purposes of trying to establish the claim against the judgment creditors. The Magistrate saw and heard the witnesses; he was the one to be satisfied. It seemed to him (the learned Judge) that it was a question of fact. The Magistrate saw and heard the witnesses, he pronounced the evidence to be wholly untrustworthy and incredible, and, if the evidence were untrustworthy and incredible to his mind, it was impossible for his lordship, sitting there as a Court of Appeal, to say that the impression on the Magistrate's mind was a wrong one. The appeal must fail, with costs, and also with the costs which stood over to abide the result.

FUMBA V. DICKERSON.

Carrier—Negligence—Way bill.

F. had undertaken to carry certain grain for D. by wagon, a distance of some 80 miles. F. had signed a way bill, admitting that he had received the grain in good order and condition, and undertaking to deliver it in like condition. On delivery, the grain proved to have been damaged by rain.

Held, that the terms of the way bill did not render F. liable as an insurer, and that the fact of the grain having been damaged was not per se proof of negligence.

This was an appeal from a decision of the A.R.M. of Tabenkulu, by which the plaintiff was awarded £22 10s. as damages, and £3 15s., goods sold and delivered, the damages being in respect of the failure of the defendant's agent to deliver certain goods to the plaintiff in good order. Originally the plaintiff (Dickerson) successfully sued for damages, and on an appeal his lordship (Mr. Justice Hopley) altered the judgment to one of absolution from the instance, leaving it open to the plaintiff to prove actual negligence on the part of the carrier (15 C.T.R. 768). In the second case, the Magistrate, in his reasons, stated that the plaintiff sued the defendant for £30 as damages, and £3 15s., goods sold, through reason of loss sustained from the negligent performance of a contract. The defendant was a transport driver in the locality of East Pondoland, and he agreed to deliver the grain in good order. The plaintiff maintained that the grain arrived at its destination in a damaged condition through damp, and from the evidence he (the Magistrate) had no doubt that the grain was damaged upon its arrival. The plaintiff, through his agent, had made arrangements for the arrival of the grain, and had obtained purchasers for it. The wagon had taken about twelve days accomplishing a journey which should have been done in about half that time. It would appear that the driver had been dillydally on the road. With ordinary care the grain should not have got wet on the road—notwithstanding the fact that it was raining while the wagon was on the road. He found there was negligence on the part of the driver, for which his principal must be held liable, and there would be judgment for the plaintiff for £22 10s., as damages, and £3 15s., goods sold.

Mr. Roux was for the appellant (defendant), and Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley J., said the original case, he believed, was founded on negligence, and in the original case it was pointed out that although it was shown that some mealies were damaged, yet there was no evidence of negligence. It now turned out that negligence was alleged, and the summons set out that the plaintiff had suffered damages in the sum of £30 through the negligence on the part of the defendant to deliver the mealies in like and good order. The defendant denied the negligence, and said that the mealies were delivered in good order and condition. It seemed that in the rainy season in those parts, when rain was threatening, and soon after fell, the cargo of mealies and corn was taken over from Dickerson to be carried some eighty miles. Now, it appeared that there was a well-found wagon and a good buck sail, which had the approval of the respondent. The respondent shortly after the wagon left saw the rain fall. The question now would be how far the evidence went to show any neglect on the part of the defendant. The driver and the leader stated that they kept the buck sail over the load all the way, just as they started, and they stated that they did nothing wrong to make this load get wet or be damaged. That was the evidence on the point of neglect, so that if it rested on evidence alone the Court would be bound to say that there was no neglect, and that the ordinary diligence was exercised by the carrier. But he had been asked to hold that the carrier was liable, because he admitted by a written way bill to have received this grain in good order, and that the contract was to deliver in like good order; in other words, that the way bill was an absolute undertaking to deliver in like good order. His Lordship did not think a way bill bore any such interpretation. The proper interpretation, he thought, was that when a man undertook to deliver in like good order and condition, he meant after due diligence on his part to ensure a consummation of the contract. It was further argued that the mere fact of the load being damaged was conclusive proof of negligence on the part of the carrier, but His Lordship could not agree with that contention. He thought that the plaintiff's agent acted unreasonably in requesting the carrier to take back the cargo. The Magistrate found, on insufficient evidence, that there was neglect on the part of the carrier, and the judgment should be reversed. The appeal would be allowed, and the judgment altered to one for the defendant, with costs.

DICKENS V. LAKE. { 1906.
Apr. 4th.
" 18th.

Rain-water — Natural flow — Obstruction.

The owner of land is not entitled to place any obstruction in a channel by which the water would naturally flow over his land, if by means of such obstruction he injures his neighbour by throwing more water on, to and over this land than would flow there naturally.

When, however, a channel has for 30 years or more existed on such man's land for the conveyance of rain-water collected from a neighbouring road, he is not liable if, in a storm, he diverts part of the water into such channel, even though the result should be that through the bursting of the channel the neighbour's land is injured.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of Somerset East, in an action brought by the appellant against the respondent to recover £20 damages for alleged flooding of plaintiff's garden by reason of an obstruction put in a certain watercourse. The Magistrate had given absolution from the instance, with costs.

From the pleadings it appeared that plaintiff's allegation was that defendant wrongfully placed a certain weir or obstruction in the watercourse in Pauling-street; that this was placed there some years ago; that just before October 10 last the obstruction was raised, and in consequence the water was dammed back, and that on October 10 last, in consequence, the plaintiff's garden was flooded, and his crops were damaged. The defendant took up the position that the flooding was due to a culvert placed in the watercourse by Mr. J. G. Lawton (lessee of the land occupied by plaintiff), and to an unprecedented rainfall on October 10.

Mr. Benjamin was for appellant (Samuel Dickens); Mr. McGregor was for respondent (Charles Dawson Lake).

Counsel for the appellant submitted that if the defendant placed an obstruction in this watercourse to cause the water to dam back on to the plaintiff's property, then the plaintiff was entitled to an action for damages. Unfortunately, the Magistrate did not appear to have found on that question. All the evidence went to show that there was an obstruction raised by the defendant in this stream, which caused the water to dam back to the plaintiff's property. The Magistrate should have found what was the effect of the obstruction. With regard to the damage there was really no serious cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses.

Mr. McGregor said that the Magistrate might have found that the real flow of the water was down the furrow to the middle of the defendant's garden, but under the present condition of things the natural configuration had been superseded by artificial arrangements by the Municipal authorities. By these artificial means the Municipal authorities might have brought a rush of water to a special point.

Mr. Benjamin having replied.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (April 18th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff in this action claimed damages for injury done to his crops by an overflow of water, which, he alleges, was caused by a weir placed by the defendant in a public watercourse in Pauling-street, Somerset East, adjoining his property. But for this weir, the plaintiff says, the water would have flowed on to, and through the defendant's own property instead of being diverted from its natural course into another watercourse flowing on to the plaintiff's land. If it had been clearly proved in the Court below that the effect of the weir was to divert water from its accustomed flow over the defendant's land on to the plaintiff's land, and that, but for this diversion, there would have been no overflow over the plaintiff's land I would have had no hesitation in allowing this appeal. I cannot agree with the Magistrate in the view that a very heavy rainfall gives the same rights of protection from injury to a landowner as the inroads of the sea. It may well be that by our law, as by the law of England, a person who erects a seawall for the protection of his land against the inroads of the sea and by so doing causes the tide to injure his neighbour's land would not be liable for such injury. The flow of water, however, occasioned by rains follows the natural configuration of the land, and every owner of land over which such water naturally flows must be subject to the disadvantages in the same manner as he enjoys the advantages of the relative position of his land in regard to his neighbours. He cannot be allowed, because there is an exceptionally heavy rainfall, to create an obstruction in the flow so as to divert the water into the lands of others where it would not naturally flow. In the present case it appears that at the time of the overflow there were two channels by means of which storm-water in Pauling-street made its escape. The one was an artificial course, but it had been more than thirty years in existence, and the object of the weir was to divert part of the storm-water into this artificial channel and allow the remainder of the water to flow over the weir on to the older and natural channel through the defendant's land. It appears further that higher up in Pauling-street the defendant's neighbour, Lawton, had constructed a solid masonry wall along Pauling-street to prevent the rain water from flowing, firstly, over his land, and, next, over the plaintiff's land. The effect of this wall undoubtedly was to send more water on to the defendant's land than would flow there naturally. Accordingly, when, on the 10th of October, 1905, very heavy rains flooded the town of Somerset East, the plaintiff, in order to prevent the whole of this accumulated flow from flowing into the one channel, raised the height of the weir by placing sand bags thereon. The result was that all the water did not flow in the one channel, through his land, but was spread into the two channels. The Magistrate has found that the defendant suffered as much damage from flooding as the plaintiff did. He has also found that the weir was not the sole cause of the damage to the plaintiff's crops. The evidence, in fact, left it extremely doubtful whether the weir had the effect of increasing the flow of water on to the plaintiff's property. The rainfall was very great, and great damage was done to the gardens of others than the plaintiff and defendant. The water seemed to have flown over the weir, and to have filled the channel which has been spoken of as the natural channel for the water. The channel nearer the defendant's boundary was also well filled, and it was mainly owing to an escape of water from this channel that there was an overflow into the plaintiff's land. This channel, which has been in existence for more than thirty years, may be regarded as one of the natural channels for the escape of water from Pauling-street. According to the evidence of the defendant's wife, which the Magistrate seems to have believed: "The sluits were all overflowing on the 10th of October, and there was a rush of water everywhere." She also says that the water flowed over the sand-bags which had been placed on the weir. After the damage was done, the old channel near the defendant's boundary was selected by the Municipal Council, apparently without any objection on the part of anyone, as the site for the substantial cement drain to carry off the rainwater from Pauling-street. Under all the circumstances I am of opinion that the plaintiff has not proved the necessary facts to enable him to recover, and the appeal must, therefore, be dismissed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ROVATTI V. ROVATTI. } 1906.
Apr. 5th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of the Cape in an action originally brought by Domingo Rovatti, of Station-road, Observatory, against his wife and another (Mrs. Sasso) for the return of a Maltese terrier, or its value, £20.

The matter had previously been before the Court (15 C.T.R. 834). At the first hearing in the Magistrate's Court, exception was taken on the ground that Mrs. Rovatti was married in community, and that exception was upheld, and the case against the second defendant was dismissed, absolution from the instance being granted. An appeal was lodged, and during the course of the appeal it came to the knowledge of the Court that a deed of separation had been entered into between plaintiff and his wife, the first defendant. That deed of separation had not been put in at the Magistrate's Court, and his lordship, in order to save the expense of a new action, ordered that the action should go back to the Magistrate to be tried on the merits as regarded the first defendant. The appeal, as regarded the second defendant, was withdrawn. The matter went back, and was tried by the Magistrate, and he took evidence in the claim against the first defendant, and he found in that case in favour of defendant, granting absolution from the instance.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that he gave judgment for Mrs. Rovatti (the defendant), because he believed her statement that the dog in question was the offspring of a bitch presented to her by her brother-in-law (Otto Rovatti, now of Johannesburg), and that the dog in question was kept in the house with her. That being the case, and there being a deed of separation, he held that she was entitled to the dog.

Dr. Greer was for appellant; there was no appearance for respondent.

Dr. Greer submitted that there was overwhelming evidence in favour of the plaintiff's claim. The dog was clearly removed surreptitiously by the defendant from the plaintiff's premises.

Buchanan, J.: There are two questions which arise in this case on the merits, and the first is as to the ownership of the dog before the separation, and the second is in whom the property was vested in by the deed of separation. The Magistrate, after hearing the evidence of the witnesses, has found that originally the dog was given and belonged to the wife of the defendant. In the deed of separation this dog is not specifically referred to, but this paragraph appears: "Each of the said appearers shall take to, and for his or her use, the property brought in by each of them to the support of their marriage." Well, it is hard to say that the dog was to be brought in for the purpose of the support of the marriage. It would be more on the footing of property forming a wife's personalia. But even taking it as having come into the community of property, I think, by this clause in the deed of separation, it belongs to the wife. Then, again, the deed of separation goes on to say that all furniture and effects contained in the house in which the parties were living should be taken by the wife, and that all furniture and effects contained in the barber's shop should be taken by the husband. This dog was found in the house, and certainly was not part of the furniture of the barber's shop, so that by the deed, and upon the facts, defendant is entitled to this dog. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

VAN WYK V. HOLLANDER. } 1906.
Apr. 5th.

Divisional Council election—
Irregularity—Civil Commissioner—Review—Rule 190.

A Divisional Council election for the district of F. having resulted in a public disturbance, the Civil Commissioner adjourned the further polling for three days. The applicant now applied to have this act of the Civil Commissioner brought under review under Rule 190, on the ground of gross irregularity.

Held, that as the Civil Commissioner had held no court nor made any formal enquiry into alleged irregularities, no review could be granted under Rule 190.

Moll v. Civil Commissioner of the Paarl (7 C.T.R. 454) followed.

This was an application by Van Wyk, a candidate in the Divisional Council election at Fraserburg last October, to have certain proceedings reviewed. Mr. McGregor was for applicant; Mr. Close was for respondent.

Mr. Close said that before his learned friend opened the case, he wished to take an exception to the form of procedure adopted by the plaintiff. This matter was brought to the Court by way of review of a summons under the 190th rule of Court, and he contended that that procedure was not contemplated in regard to this particular kind of case. This was a case in which the Civil Commissioner of the district of Fraserburg held a certain inquiry under section 56 of the Divisional Council Act (No. 40 of 1889) in regard to the proceedings at an election for a member of the Divisional Council.

Mr. McGregor said that perhaps he should state, briefly, the circumstances under which the proceedings were brought. In October last there was an election for the Divisional Council of Fraserburg, and the two candidates were Mr. Van Wyk and Mr. Hollander. On the 18th October, a certain Wednesday, there was a good deal of discussion. The returning officer was Mr. Reitz, jun. The allegation of one side was that there was something equivalent to a riot, or a row. Under the circumstances, rightly or wrongly, Mr. Reitz then adjourned the polling until Saturday, the 21st October, and on the 21st further proceedings were taken, and further votes were recorded. Votes to the number of 15 were recorded for his client on that day. Immediately thereafter the respondent (Mr. Hollander) and his agent both noted objections to the Magistrate. The gist of the plaintiff's complaint now was that the Magistrate did not call any of these people before him. Thereafter notice of proceedings was given under section 59 of the Act of 1889.

Mr. Close said that section 56 of the Act provided for the powers of a Civil Commissioner in the proceedings which he actually took. His contention was that those proceedings did not take place in a court of justice, that the inquiry was held by the Civil Commissioner, not by the R.M., and that it was not in any sense a court of inquiry.

The present procedure was one of review. That procedure was only applicable to the hearing of review from courts of justice.

[Buchanan, J.: It ought to have been brought by motion, you say!]

Mr. Close: Yes.

[Buchanan, J.: What would be the difference?]

Mr. Close: I am not prepared to say what the difference would be. Counsel went on to say that there was a riot or disturbance at the polling. There were threats to throw these people out—and then the returning officer, acting under section 50, postponed the poll, but the very section which gave him the right of postponing, fixed that right to the following day, and he postponed for three days.

Mr. McGregor having been heard in reply,

Buchanan, J.: A very nice question of law is raised by the exception taken by the respondent to the procedure adopted by the plaintiff in this case. A Divisional Council election took place in the district of Fraserburg, and certain irregularities are alleged to have occurred at the poll. The person who complains of the irregularities issued a summons out of the 190th rule of Court for a review of the proceedings at the poll, and the question is raised whether this procedure is applicable to this case. Rule 190 gives the right to any party in any suit or action, civil or criminal, in any inferior court of this colony, who may desire to bring the decision of that court under review, to do so. In this case no court seems to have been held of any kind, the procedure of which can be brought under review. Under the Divisional Council Act (section 56), the Civil Commissioner, who, I believe, is the returning officer at these elections, is required in the most speedy and inexpensive manner practicable to inquire into allegations of irregularities at the poll. The persons who complain have the right to appear before the Civil Commissioner and the Civil Commissioner may, if he likes, summon witnesses and inquire further into the matter. In this case there has been no summoning of witnesses and no court of any kind has been held. The next section of the Divisional Council Ordinance allows the Civil Commissioner if, in making inquiries he wishes a point of law to be stated, to have that stated and submitted to a Judge in Chambers and the decision of the Judge in Chambers is final. In this case there has been no case stated or sent to a Judge in Chambers. By a previous decision of this Court, heard by a full Court—the case of Moll v. Civil Commissioner of the Paarl (7 C.T.R. 454)—it was distinctly held by the Chief Justice that this 190th Rule of Court only applies to proceedings in any suit in any inferior Court of this Colony. There the application was made under the Parliamentary Elections Act (Franchise and Ballot Act, section 25), which requires the Civil Commissioner to attend in his court to inquire into certain matters, and His Lordship and the full Court there held that the Civil Commissioner then sitting in his Court was not a sitting of a Court within the meaning of the 190th Rule. That decision lays down a principle which I am bound to follow, and if the question of a Court was strong in that case, it is certainly much stronger in this case, where no mention of a Court is made. The only question before me now is whether a proper procedure has been adopted by the applicant in this case. With this decision before me, I must hold that the objection taken to the procedure is well-founded and must be sustained. It is perhaps unnecessary to go further, but I wish distinctly to say that if the proper procedure had been taken I do not wish it to be inferred for a moment that any person whose political rights have been infringed by the action of the Civil Commissioner has no right of appeal to the Court for redress. On the contrary, I think that if he had taken proper proceedings, as was pointed out in Moll's case, he would have such a right to obtain redress. The objection must be sustained, with costs.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsen. Respondent's Attorneys: Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset.]

VAN DER WATT V. MCDIARMID.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court at Elliot in an action brought by the present appellant to recover certain sums of money, amounting in all to £91 4s. The Court below had given judgment for the present respondent.

From the record it appeared that plaintiff sued the respondent in the Magistrate's Court for a sum of £7 being as and for the hire of a certain wagon and 12 oxen which defendant hired for a journey to Indwe; £75 4s. as and for damages sustained by plaintiff by reason of the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully and without the consent of the plaintiff taking the wagon further than Indwe, and keeping the wagon and oxen until the 26th September, instead of until the 5th September, and £9 balance due on sale of a certain horse to the Gorman Government by defendant on behalf of plaintiff. Part of the damages claimed was in respect of certain four oxen which had died or been lost while in defendant's custody, and on account of which £40 was claimed. Defendant, in his plea, set up the defence that plaintiff agreed with him that he should go by way of Cala and Barkly East, and he denied the alleged breach of contract. As to the oxen, he said that one animal knocked up on the way through no negligence on his part, and that three died from the effects of snow-storm and other causes. As to the horse, he said that he sold the animal, not for £18, as had been alleged by plaintiff, but for £17 10s., and he had set off the balance due to plaintiff against moneys which he (defendant) had lent to him. In reconvention defendant claimed £35 0s. 4d., for moneys lent, moneys disbursed, food supplied to the plaintiff's boys, pound fees, and so forth. He said that there was a half-share of proceeds of the trip due to plaintiff, amounting to £12 18s.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the plaintiff was well aware of the purposes for which his wagon and oxen were required. Unfortunately, owing to the inclement weather, the undertaking proved a most disastrous one to both parties, who were partners in the trip, but that was beyond the control of the defendant. The loss of the oxen was due to the weather, and through no fault of the defendant. Judgment was for the defendant.

Mr. Benjamin was for appellant; Mr. Van Zyl for respondent.

Mr. Benjamin observed that the decision of the Magistrate was a most singular one. He gave judgment for the defendant, but not for any amount. Again, there was absolutely not a word of evidence to show that the parties were partners. He submitted that the judgment of the Magistrate was one of the most slovenly ever delivered in this country. The reasons were certainly careless. There was no finding upon fact, and now it was cast upon his lordship to find upon every fact of the case. There was not a tittle of evidence to show that the parties were partners in the trip. Counsel then proceeded to argue on the facts of the case.

Mr. Van Zyl having been heard in reply,

Buchanan, J., said the plaintiff sued in the Magistrate's Court on a contract for the hire of a certain wagon and twelve oxen. In all he claimed £91 4s. Against this the defendant pleaded certain payments as a set-off and also a claim in reconvention. The defendant admitted he hired the wagon and oxen, but he denied the liability for the loss of the oxen, and admitted his liability in £8 10s. for a horse. The Magistrate heard all the evidence, and then gave judgment generally for the defendant, but he did not balance the items which were proved as he ought to have done. The proper course would have been to send the case back to the Magistrate to adjust the accounts, but to save expense his lordship would not do so. The Magistrate found there was no neglect on the part of the defendant, and the evidence supported the finding. The Magistrate should not simply have given judgment generally for the defendant, and the judgment would be altered to one for the plaintiff for £11 19s., with costs in both courts.

TSHAYIVITI V. TSHAYIVITI.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of the Resident Magistrate, Victoria East, the plaintiff successfully claiming to be heir to certain stock.

Mr. Benjamin was for the appellant (defendant), and Mr. Gutsche was for the respondent.

Mr. Gutsche took exception on the ground that the case was decided by a magistrate between natives, and according to native law there was no appeal to the Supreme Court under Act 18 of 1864. Counsel referred his lordship to the case of Tabata v. Tabata (5 Juta, 328), which, he submitted, showed there was no appeal from the judgment of the magistrate under the jurisdiction conferred upon him by the Act.

Mr. Benjamin said there was a gross irregularity on the part of the Magistrate. According to the plaintiff, there were only seven oxen claimed, and the Magistrate gave an order for the return of nine. Counsel submitted it was a case for review. He further submitted that the Magistrate had erred, because there was nothing to show that deceased had lived in a proclaimed location.

Mr. Gutsche said his learned friend could not substantiate any gross irregularity.

Buchanan, J., said he thought it quite right of Mr. Gutsche to call attention to the fact that there was no appeal in this case.

Counsel on both sides having been heard in argument.

Buchanan, J.: The Native Succession Act, 1864, makes the Magistrate sole arbiter of questions arising under native law between natives. In this case the question brought for the Magistrate's decision was, who, according to native law, was the heir of the deceased native. This Act applies only to deceased natives, who had certificates of citizenship, or to deceased natives, who had lived in a proclaimed location. It is not alleged in the summons either that the deceased had a certificate of citizenship or that he had lived in such a location, but, incidentally the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court, the sheriff's return of the summons and the evidence given by some of the witnesses indicate that the parties all belonged to a native location. It seems to me most probable that the deceased native did not reside in a location called Mabandle's Location. Then again, if the Magistrate had no jurisdiction in the case, one would have expected the parties on the spot to have taken exception, but such exception was not taken in the court below. I think it most probable that this is a proclaimed location, or the Magistrate would not have heard the action. However, if it is not a proclaimed location then, of course, he has no jurisdiction under the Act. That point will stand over. Assuming for the present that it is a proclaimed location, I think the Magistrate's decision in this case should not be interfered with. Assuming that he had jurisdiction, he had the witnesses before him, he heard the evidence, and indeed the heirship is admitted. He says: "It is conclusively proved that the plaintiff was the sole heir to the estate, and admitted by the defendant, and, such being the case, he was entitled to the property claimed, and I gave judgment accordingly, with costs of suit." Mr. Benjamin now says that the property claimed in the suit is ten head of cattle, and that as a matter of fact there are only eight head of cattle in the estate. The question of how much property there is actually in the estate may or may not be in doubt. I notice that the surety bond given by the persons in whose possession the cattle are mentions less head, but to make perfectly clear that no injustice should be done, the judgment will be that plaintiff be declared sole heir of the estate, and, as such, entitled to the property of the said estate. This judgment is given subject to its transpiring that it is a proclaimed area. The case will be sent back to the Magistrate to report to the Court whether this is a proclaimed location or not. It will be unnecessary to argue the case before the Court again. If it is a proclaimed location, under section 6 of the Act, the judgment will stand; if it is not a proclaimed location, the judgment will be set aside. If the appellant be successful, then the appeal will be granted, with costs; if unsuccessful, the appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

VAN DER WATT V. MCDIARMID.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court at Elliot in an action brought by the present appellant to recover certain sums of money, amounting in all to £91 4s. The Court below had given judgment for the present respondent.

From the record it appeared that plaintiff sued the respondent in the Magistrate's Court for a sum of £7 being as and for the hire of a certain wagon and 12 oxen which defendant hired for a journey to Indwe; £75 4s. as and for damages sustained by plaintiff by reason of the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully and without the consent of the plaintiff taking the wagon further than Indwe, and keeping the wagon and oxen until the 26th September, instead of until the 5th September, and £9 balance due on sale of a certain horse to the German Government by defendant on behalf of plaintiff. As to the horse, he said that he sold the animal, not for £18, as had been alleged by plaintiff, but for £17 10s., and he had set off the balance due to plaintiff against moneys which he (defendant) had lent to him. In reconvention defendant claimed £35 0s. 4d., for moneys lent, moneys disbursed, food supplied to the plaintiff's boys, pound fees, and so forth. He said that there was a half-share of proceeds of the trip due to plaintiff, amounting to £12 18s.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the plaintiff was well aware of the purposes for which his wagon and oxen were required. Unfortunately, owing to the inclement weather, the undertaking proved a most disastrous one to both parties, who were partners in the trip, but that was beyond the control of the defendant. The loss of the oxen was due to the weather, and through no fault of the defendant. Judgment was for the defendant.

Mr. Benjamin was for appellant; Mr. Van Zyl for respondent.

Mr. Benjamin observed that the decision of the Magistrate was a most singular one. He gave judgment for the defendant, but not for any amount. Again, there was absolutely not a word of evidence to show that the parties were partners. He submitted that the judgment of the Magistrate was one of the most slovenly ever delivered in this country. The reasons were certainly careless. There was no finding upon fact, and now it was cast upon his lordship to find upon every fact of the case. There was not a tittle of evidence to show that the parties were partners in the trip. Counsel then proceeded to argue on the facts of the case.

Mr. Van Zyl having been heard in reply,

Buchanan, J., said the plaintiff sued in the Magistrate's Court on a contract for the hire of a certain wagon and twelve oxen. In all he claimed £91 4s. Against this the defendant pleaded certain payments as a set-off and also a claim in reconvention. The defendant admitted he hired the wagon and oxen, but he denied the liability for the loss of the oxen, and admitted his liability in £8 10s. for a horse. The Magistrate heard all the evidence, and then gave judgment generally for the defendant, but he did not balance the items which were proved as he ought to have done. The proper course would have been to send the case back to the Magistrate to adjust the accounts, but to save expense his lordship would not do so. The Magistrate found there was no neglect on the part of the defendant, and the evidence supported the finding. The Magistrate should not simply have given judgment generally for the defendant, and the judgment would be altered to one for the plaintiff for £11 19s., with costs in both courts.

TSHAYIVITI V. TSHAYIVITI.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of the Resident Magistrate, Victoria East, the plaintiff successfully claiming to be heir to certain stock.

Mr. Benjamin was for the appellant (defendant), and Mr. Gutsche was for the respondent.

Mr. Gutsche took exception on the ground that the case was decided by a magistrate between natives, and according to native law there was no appeal to the Supreme Court under Act 18 of 1864. Counsel referred his lordship to the case of Tabata v. Tabata (5 Juta, 328), which, he submitted, showed there was no appeal from the judgment of the magistrate under the jurisdiction conferred upon him by the Act.

Mr. Benjamin said there was a gross irregularity on the part of the Magistrate. According to the plaintiff, there were only seven oxen claimed, and the Magistrate gave an order for the return of nine. Counsel submitted it was a case for review. He further submitted that the Magistrate had erred, because there was nothing to show that deceased had lived in a proclaimed location.

Mr. Gutsche said his learned friend could not substantiate any gross irregularity.

Buchanan, J., said he thought it quite right of Mr. Gutsche to call attention to the fact that there was no appeal in this case.

Counsel on both sides having been heard in argument.

Buchanan, J.: The Native Succession Act, 1864, makes the Magistrate sole arbiter of questions arising under native law between natives. In this case the question brought for the Magistrate's decision was, who, according to native law, was the heir of the deceased native. This Act applies only to deceased natives, who had certificates of citizenship, or to deceased natives, who had lived in a proclaimed location. It is not alleged in the summons either that the deceased had a certificate of citizenship or that he had lived in such a location, but, incidentally the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court, the sheriff's return of the summons and the evidence given by some of the witnesses indicate that the parties all belonged to a native location. It seems to me most probable that the deceased native did not reside in a location called Masandla's Location. Then again, if the Magistrate had no jurisdiction in the case, one would have expected the parties on the spot to have taken exception, but such exception was not taken in the court below. I think it most probable that this is a proclaimed location, or the Magistrate would not have heard the action. However, if it is not a proclaimed location then, of course, he has no jurisdiction under the Act. That point will stand over. Assuming for the present that it is a proclaimed location, I think the Magistrate's decision in this case should not be interfered with. Assuming that he had jurisdiction, he had the witnesses before him, he heard the evidence, and indeed the heirship is admitted. He says: "It is conclusively proved that the plaintiff was the sole heir to the estate, and admitted by the defendant, and, such being the case, he was entitled to the property claimed, and I gave judgment accordingly, with costs of suit." Mr. Benjamin now says that the property claimed in the suit is ten head of cattle, and that as a matter of fact there are only eight head of cattle in the estate. The question of how much property there is actually in the estate may or may not be in doubt. I notice that the surety bond given by the persons in whose possession the cattle are mentions less head, but to make perfectly clear that no injustice should be done, the judgment will be that plaintiff be declared sole heir of the estate, and, as such, entitled to the property of the said estate. This judgment is given subject to its transpiring that it is a proclaimed area. The case will be sent back to the Magistrate to report to the Court whether this is a proclaimed location or not. It will be unnecessary to argue the case before the Court again. If it is a proclaimed location, under section 6 of the Act, the judgment will stand; if it is not a proclaimed location, the judgment will be set aside. If the appellant be successful, then the appeal will be granted, with costs; if unsuccessful, the appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

SEARLE AND CO. V. WARNER { 1906.
AND CO. } Apr. 6th.

Mr. Upington (for defendants in the suit) moved for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of Quartermaster-Sergeant Ashford, of the Army Service Corps, who was about to leave Cape Town by a vessel timed to depart on Tuesday week. The action was one in which plaintiffs sued for £15 damages sustained in the stacking of certain coal in a lane adjoining their premises.

Mr. Gardiner (for plaintiffs in the suit) did not object to the appointment of a commission, but he submitted that the costs should be borne by the applicants, inasmuch as when the case was called during the February term plaintiff and his witnesses and counsel were ready, but the other side were not ready, counsel not having been briefed.

Commission de bene esse granted Mr. Advocate P. S. T. Jones to be commissioner, question of costs to stand over until the trial.

ADMISSION.

Mr. Lewis applied for the admission of Julius Vernon Levin as an attorney and notary.

[Buchanan, J.: What is the urgency in the application?]

Mr. Lewis: I cannot say that there is any particular urgency in the matter, but the applicant wishes to enter upon his profession as soon as possible. He is already practising as a law agent with the approval of the Law Society.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the R.M. of Bredasdorp.

WATSON V. JENSEN. { 1906.
 } Apr. 6th.

Set off—Liquidated and unliquidated claim—Magistrate's jurisdiction.

W. sued J. in an R.M. Court for £28 8s., due as wages for work and labour done, and also for £9 13s. in lieu of a month's notice. The claim was reduced to £20, to bring it within the Magistrate's jurisdiction. In reconvention J. claimed £10 18s. 3d. as damages for injury done to machinery and 17s. 6d. as a set off for two days' work not done by the plaintiff. The Magistrate gave judgment in convention for £20 and in reconvention for £11 15s. 9d., which he set off against the full sum of £38 1s., which he considered to be due to the plaintiff.

Held on appeal, that the Magistrate had rightly given judgment in convention for £20: but had erred (1) in setting off any claim for damages on either side. (2) In setting off the sum awarded to defendant against the full sum of £38 1s. instead of against the reduced claim of £20.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Barkly East in an action brought against appellant by respondent to recover wages for services rendered and damages for wrongful dismissal.

From the record, it appeared that the plaintiff, a jumper driller, had in the early part of last year gone up from Cape Town to Barkly East, and had been engaged by defendant to work his percussion drill. Plaintiff continued at work until about the 13th September, and his services were then dispensed with without notice. Defendant now alleged negligence on his part in the management of the machine, whereby he said he had suffered damages. Plaintiff brought an action for wages and work and labour done, and damages for dismissal without notice, and reduced his claim to £20 so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the Court. Defendant claimed in reconvention for damages to his drill occasioned by plaintiff's neglect and default, and reduced his claim to £20 for the purposes of jurisdiction. The Magistrate found for plaintiff in convention in three sums amounting to £38 1s., and for plaintiff in reconvention on certain items amounting to £11 15s. 9d., and he gave judgment for plaintiff in convention for £20, with costs, setting off the amount of £11 15s. 9d. on which he had found in favour of defendant against the sum of £18 1s. abandoned by plaintiff.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for appellant; Mr. Benjamin was for respondent.

Mr. De Villiers submitted that the Magistrate was not entitled to set off the amount for damages which he had found in favour of the defendant against the sum which had been waived by the plaintiff.

[Buchanan, J.: You say that £11 15s. 9d. ought to have been set off against the sum of £20?]

Mr. De Villiers said he submitted that the Magistrate should have found for £20 for plaintiff in convention, and £11 15s. 9d. for plaintiff in reconvention, and such order as to costs as he might have considered reasonable. It was clearly an illiquid demand.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the Magistrate had found for liquidated amounts on the claim in reconvention. He contended that the amounts were capable of being set off against the claim in convention, and submitted that the Magistrate was correct in the judgment he had given. He relied on the case of Walmesley v. James (15 Supreme Court Reports, 120).

Mr. De Villiers submitted, on the authority of Sey v. Thomas (12 C.T.R. 237) it was clear that the amounts in the claim in reconvention were not liquidated.

Buchanan, J.: Plaintiff in this case, a jumper driller, sues in the Magistrate's Court for a sum of £41, according to account annexed to the summons. He reduced his claim to £20, so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the Court. In reconvention, defendant filed a claim for £50, which claim he too reduced to £20, to bring it also within the jurisdiction of the Court. The plaintiff's claim was made up of a claim for wages and for work done, and also for £13 in lieu of a month's notice, which is in the nature of damages. The Magistrate found that for work and labour done, there was £28 8s. due to plaintiff, and damages for want of notice £9 13s., making £38 1s. in all. The claim in reconvention, however, is altogether in the nature of a claim for damages with the exception of one item allowed by the Magistrate, 17s. 6d., which is a set-off against two days' work not done by plaintiff. That 17s. 6d. can clearly be set off against the claim for wages in the claim in convention, but as there is a sufficient surplus, after deducting the 17s. 6d. to sustain the Magistrate's judgment, the Magistrate's judgment in convention for £20 must stand. Then the question comes as to the judgment in reconvention. The Magistrate has allowed on the claim for damages in reconvention £10 18s. 3d., eliminating the 17s. 6d. for wages. But, having then found for this amount for the defendant, he set this off against the surplus of damages for the plaintiff. Now, in my opinion, had this sum of £10 18s. 3d. been a liquidated claim, it might have been so treated by the Magistrate, because a liquidated claim does, by operation of law, extinguish so much of the plaintiff's claim as may be liquidated, and, consequently, if the £10 18s. 3d. had been liquidated it could have been set off. But an unliquidated claim for damages cannot be so set off.

A claim for damages does not become liquidated until some Court or other tribunal has assessed the amount. In this case, therefore, as the £10 18s. 3d. cannot be set off against the plaintiff's claim it must, I think, be set off as against the £20, for which judgment has been given, not against the surplus against which the Magistrate has set it off. The claim in reconvention illustrates what can be set off and what cannot be set off; 17s. 6d. being for wages, can be set off against the claim for wages, but the £10 18s. 3d. being purely for damages cannot be set off. Consequently, the appeal will be allowed with costs, and the judgment of the Court below altered to judgment for the plaintiff in convention for £20, and for the plaintiff in reconvention for £10 18s. 3d. Defendant must pay the costs in the Magistrate's Court. The effect will be judgment in the Court below for plaintiff for £9 1s. 9d., with costs.

BEETJE V. VENTER.

Magistrate's jurisdiction—Tembuland.

By Proclamation No. 140 of 1885, Magistrates in Tembuland have jurisdiction in all civil suits within their respective districts.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Elliot in an action brought by the appellant against the respondent for delivery of a certain house at Elliot. Mr. Van Zyl was for appellant; there was no appearance for respondent.

Plaintiff's ground of claim was that he was a builder, and that he had been in lawful possession of the house in question, which he had built and erected. On the 4th January last, he alleged, defendant wrongfully and unlawfully broke open the windows and doors of the house, and forcibly took possession thereof. When the case came on for hearing, exception was taken to the summons on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction in an action for spoliation, and could not order specific delivery. The Magistrate upheld the exception.

Mr. Van Zyl submitted that the Magistrate had been under a mistaken impression that the Act 20, 1856 (sub-section 3, section 8), which dealt with the jurisdiction of Magistrates, applied to the Native Territories. There was full power in the Magistrate at Elliot to deal with this case.

Buchanan, J.: This case comes in appeal from the Resident Magistrate's Court at Elliot. By the Tembuland Annexation Act, provision is made for legislation in that territory by Governor's proclamation. The Governor has legislated by proclamation and the present proclamation governing the country is No. 140, 1885. The Magistrate's jurisdiction in Tembuland is that which is fixed by this proclamation. As far as I can ascertain from the proclamation, the Magistrate had jurisdiction in all civil suits and proceedings between persons residing within the respective districts of Tembuland. The exception taken in the Court below is founded on the limited jurisdiction exercised by Magistrates in this colony. Now that limit does not extend to Tembuland, and, therefore, the Magistrate was wrong in refusing to hear the case under the jurisdiction conferred upon him by the Governor's proclamation. The appeal must be allowed with costs, and exception of want of jurisdiction overruled and case remitted to the Magistrate to hear on the merits, costs in the Magistrate's Court to be in the discretion of the Magistrate.

RABINOWITZ V. JOHNS.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Namaqualand, giving absolute from the instance in a case in which the plaintiff sued the defendant for £15 on a promissory note. The defendant admitted his signature on the note, but denied the debt. The defendant bought a horse for the plaintiff, and as it was found to be in bad condition within a month after the sale the defendant denied any liability and offered to return the horse. The plaintiff denied that he gave any guarantee with the horse. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said it was clear from the evidence that the plaintiff agreed to sell the defendant a sound horse, and when the plaintiff called on defendant subsequently he then agreed to take back the animal.

Mr. Benjamin was for the appellant and Mr. P. Buchanan was for the respondent.

Mr. Benjamin said the Magistrate had not based his decision on the relative credibility of the witnesses before him. Counsel submitted that the Supreme Court was quite as well qualified to draw inferences from the evidence as the Resident Magistrate, and after reviewing the evidence, counsel contended that the inferences on the record were entirely in favour of the plaintiff.

Without calling upon Mr. Buchanan,

Buchanan, J.: This action is brought on a document signed by the defendant, in which he agreed to pay to the plaintiff £15 for a horse. The evidence shows that the plaintiff, who is a speculator, had certain horses for sale. The defendant wished to buy a chestnut horse, but the plaintiff could not sell that one, and the plaintiff said he would send him another horse. According to the evidence before the Magistrate, the plaintiff was to deliver this horse, but he did not do so. The defendant sent a man for the horse, and the horse sent back was one which had a sore back, and was in a faulty condition, and the defendant refused to accept it. He wanted to send it back again, but the plaintiff was moving about from place to place, and he consequently could not do so. Afterwards the plaintiff came to the defendant's place, when the defendant refused to accept the horse. The Magistrate who heard the evidence believed the plaintiff agreed to take the horse back. The whole case depends upon the credibility of the witnesses, and on how the Magistrate found on the facts. I think it is clear this horse was not pointed or shown to the defendant before he gave the note, and when he received this faulty animal he refused to accept it. I think the Magistrate was right, and the decision will not be interfered with. The appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

MEYER V. DENYSEN.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Namaqualand in a case in which the plaintiff claimed £20 damages for breach of contract, and was awarded £5, with costs. The defendant, it appeared, agreed to sell a horse to plaintiff, and to deliver it on a certain date in consideration of £30, to be paid to him. He failed to deliver the horse on the specified date, and the plaintiff had incurred expenses in purchasing a horse elsewhere. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said it was clear from the evidence that there was a definite contract for the delivery of the horse by a certain date. The defendant did not keep his part of the bargain. The plaintiff had been put to a deal of inconvenience, and some expense, and he found for him in £5 and costs.

Mr. Benjamin was for the appellant, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff bought a horse from the defendant. The horse was not seen by the parties; it was running in the veld some three days from the place where the contract was entered into. The plaintiff stipulated that this horse was to be delivered to a Mr. Loynes at Garies, also a considerable distance from defendant's residence. He was to examine the horse, and if he approved the purchase was to be completed and the price paid. The plaintiff alleges that he wanted this horse by the 9th September, and that he told the defendant so. The defendant said he could not deliver it at that time, and the defendant says he did not promise to deliver in a specified time. I will assume that he did promise to deliver the horse at a specified time, and did not do so. The purchase of the horse was not a completed transaction until the horse was approved by Mr. Loynes. When the defendant went back to his farm the horse was running in the veld, and he had to send for it. It was not brought to defendant's residence until the 8th September. On the 12th September the horse was sent to Garies, and when the horse arrived Loynes authorised another person to inspect it, who did so and approved of the purchase. The purchase price was then paid and delivery taken without any objection being raised. The plaintiff says he suffered damages because the horse was not delivered at an earlier date, when he then wanted to go hunting. Now what damages did the plaintiff sustain? Plaintiff says he wanted the horse to go to hunt. But he says he suffered some inconvenience and was put to some expense in sending messages to other members of the hunt, etc. But another member of the party supplied plaintiff with a horse. The plaintiff could have refused to take the horse, but his agent accepted it and paid for it without demur. I think, under the circumstances, the Magistrate was not justified in giving any damages to the plaintiff. The appeal will be allowed with costs, and judgment altered to one of absolution from the instance, with costs.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné. Respondent's Attorneys: Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset.]

MATHU AND ANOTHER V. GOOSEN.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant, and Mr. Van Zyl was for the respondent. Mr. Gardiner explained that there was another matter, that of Joyner v. Goosen, which would affect the present case, and he suggested to his lordship that both matters might be heard together, and be postponed until the trustee in Joyner's estate decided whether or not to proceed in the second case.

Mr. Van Zyl objected to this course, and

Buchanan, J., said the second appeal would stand over until the trustee in Joyner's estate had an opportunity of deciding whether he would go on or not.

The appeal of Walker and Another v. Goosen was from a judgment of the R.M., Maclear, awarding the plaintiff £40 in a claim for rent under an agreement.

In the case of Mathu an action was brought by Goosen (respondent) for the recovery of rent, and for an order of ejectment. The plaintiff was the owner of a farm in the district of Maclear. On the 30th May, 1902, the plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement, the plaintiff to let and the defendant to hire certain lands for a period of five years, commencing on the 1st June, 1902, the rent to be £40 a year. The defendant paid the rent due on June, 1903, and June, 1904, and then refused to pay in June, 1905, whereby the plaintiff contended that he was entitled to a cancellation of the agreement, and he claimed £40 for rent and possession of the farm. In the agreement it was to be clearly understood that the lands hired by the lessees were only those belonging to the lessor. The lessees were to have the right to extend the lands hired by them. The defendants tendered £20, and as to the balance pleaded the general issue, and stated that there was no authority to break up new lands. The veld had been leased to Joyner. About May last plaintiff took from the defendant certain of the old lands, and let them to one Venter, and the value of the lands was £10 per annum, and to that extent the defendant claimed rebate. The defendant claimed £10 in reconvention and for a declaration of rights. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff for £40, and absolution from the instance was granted on the claim in reconvention, the defendant to pay the costs. The Magistrate in his reasons said the rent due was not disputed, but the defendants disputed the title, and contended that half of the lands leased belong to one Joyner. In his opinion, the claim of a third party could not enter into the matter. It was the duty of the lessor to put the lessee in possession or pay damages. The defendant had not proved the claim in reconvention.

Without calling upon Mr. Van Zyl, Buchanan, J.: Goosen, a farmer, in the Court below sued the present appellants, Mathu and another, two natives, for £40, rent due under a document of lease. It appears that the natives had hired this land three years ago, that they paid the rent for two years, and the rent for the third year they paid to their own attorney, who held it pending these proceedings. They now object to paying £40 for the third year, on the ground that portion of the land leased by them is claimed by one Joyner. Goosen had let land to Joyner also, and Goosen had sued Joyner in the Magistrate's Court for the rent of these lands also. In that case the Magistrate has held that the lands let to Joyner are not the same lands as those let to the natives in this case. But whether they are or not, the natives having leased from Goosen, cannot dispute the landlord's rights to rent for these lands; they have had occupation of the lands, but they say they fear that Joyner might sue them for rent. I think that this fear on their part is not well founded, and they have no legal defence against paying Goosen, their landlord. In addition to this, there is a claim in reconvention, in which, in the first place, the natives seek to recover £20 a year within the two years, and £40, rent which has already been paid. This stands on the same footing as the other claim. They have no right to recover this from the landlord to whom they paid it, after having had possession of the land. They also claim £10, because they say portion of the land leased to them is taken away, and leased to one Venter. On this question, there is a distinct conflict of testimony. The Magistrate does not go very fully into the point, but he says in his reasons: "I did not consider the defendant's claim in reconvention proved, and so gave absolution from the instance." On the case as it is presented now before the Court, I see no legal grounds for interfering with the Magistrate's decision. He certainly is right, I think, both on the law and the facts, in holding that the £40 is due. I think the Magistrate's judgment is sound on the evidence, and the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

MARE V. MICHAU AND } 1906.
HOFMEYR. } Apr. 9th.

Surety—Married woman—Renunciation of benefits—Signature on back of a promissory note.

Mrs. M. had signed her name on the back of a promissory note made by her husband without having renounced benefits.

Held, that as by Sec. 20 of Act 19 of 1893, a married woman who becomes surety for her husband need not renounce benefits, she must be held liable as a surety.

Priest v. Stegmann (15 C.T.R., 407) distinguished. Klopper v. Van Straten (4 C.T.R., 101) followed.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of Cradock in an action brought by the present respondents for payment of £190 upon a promissory note.

From the record it appeared that in the Court below the defendant denied liability under the note, and said that she had not renounced the legal exceptions. The Magistrate gave judgment for plaintiffs. The note in question was dated July 5. and payable on the 5th October, was signed by Paul Jacobus Mare, but the space reserved for the signature of surety and co-principal debtor had not been filled in. On the back, however, was his wife's signature—J. A. Mare. Mrs. Mare, in her evidence in the court below, said that she had carried on a separate business as a boarding-house keeper for four years, and her husband had been farming. She admitted having signed the note, but said that she had received no value, and that when she signed the note it was blank. Her husband had surrendered his estate as insolvent.

Mr. Gardiner was for appellant, Julie Aletta Mare; Mr. Benjamin for respondents.

Mr. Gardiner said that this case was covered by a decision given by his lordship in 1901 in the case of Clarke v. Wolf (11, C.T.R. 201). He contended that there was no liquid liability upon the appellant. He proceeded to quote from Byles on bills. He submitted that in the present case appellant did not sign as drawer or acceptor, and, therefore, she would have incurred the liabilities of an endorser to the holder in due course. Michau and Hofmeyr, he urged, were not holders in due course, because, according to the Bills of Exchange Act a holder in due course only came in after negotiation of the bill. In this case there had been no negotiation of the bill. If there had been any liability on the part of Mrs. Mare, it was that of an aval. She had not renounced the legal benefits, and, therefore, she could not be held liable. Counsel also referred to Priest v. Stegmann (15, C.T.R. 407), but said that that case was quite different from the present one.

Mr. Benjamin said that his learned friend, by a very ingenious argument, had asked his lordship to accept the view that under section 20 of the Bills of Exchange Act a person who put his or her name on the back of a note, as defendant in this case did, was not an endorser. That view, he submitted, would not be upheld. Defendant in this case clearly endorsed the note. His learned friend had quoted from the English law on a point where the English law did not recognise any liability at all. He could not see how the present case could be distinguished from the case of Priest v. Stegmann. Under the 20th section of the Act, it was not necessary for appellant to renounce the legal exceptions. She had clearly incurred the responsibilities of an endorser. The extracts which his learned friend had quoted from Byles only applied to the state of things under the English law.

Mr. Gardiner having been heard in reply.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiffs in this case sued upon a promissory note made by one Paul J. Mare in favour of the plaintiffs or order. At the back of this note there is written by the defendant her signature. The question we have to decide is what liability the defendant incurred by writing her signature at the back of the note in question. This case differs from the case of Priest v. Stegmann, in which case a woman was held liable for her husband where she had endorsed a promissory note as surety and co-principal debtor. In that case the defence set up was that she had done so without expressly renouncing the benefits of the Senatus Consultum Feltianum and the exception de authentica si qua mulier, and that she had had no notice of the dishonour of the bill. The Court there held that she was not in the position of a surety merely, but that she had become liable as co-principal debtor, and consequently being in the same position as the maker was not entitled to take advantage of want of notice, and, further, held that under section 20 of the Bills of Exchange Act, through such a signature, she was not entitled to rely on the exceptions which prevailed under the old law. We have not now to discuss the policy of the law which protected women—especially married women—against the persuasions of their husbands from making their property liable for the debts of their husbands. The question is what alterations were made in the law by the Bills of Exchange Act? Now it is necessary to consider what is the position of the defendant in this case. If it had been an application for provisional sentence, the previous decisions of the Court show that the endorsement on a non-negotiable promissory note would not prima facie have rendered her liable to the payee. There was not a liquid liability by the endorser to the payee upon which provisional sentence could be obtained. But the action in the Magistrate's Court was not an action for provisional sentence, but an action on the contract itself. In that case the liability of the defendant could be discussed more fully than it could have been if it had been an action for provisional sentence only. The previous decision of this Court in Klopper v. Van Straten laid down that a woman endorsing a note in this way prima facie rendered herself liable as an aval or surety to the payee. By the 54 section, where a person signs a bill otherwise than as drawer, he or she incurs the liabilities of an indorser to a holder in due course. "A holder in due course" as defined by the Act would hardly meet the description of plaintiffs. But as plaintiffs are legal holders of the promissory note, which prima facie she has indorsed as aval or surety, it seems to me to follow that under the 20th section as an endorser the protection afforded by the old Senatus Consultum has been swept away. I think the Magistrate was right in holding, under these circumstances, with the previous decisions of the Court before him, that the defendant was liable on this note as surety for her husband, and it is no defence to say that she has not renounced the benefits referred to. The 20th section is as follows: "Capacity to incur liability as a party to a bill is co-extensive with capacity to contract, provided that to the validity of a bill, accepted or indorsed by a woman, the renunciation of the benefits Senatus Consultum Feltianum and Authentica si qua Mulier shall not be requisite. In this case the defendant had full capacity to contract. She has not renounced the benefits. But this renunciation, it is now enacted, shall not be requisite. That is the only defence set up in the Court below, and on that point the Magistrate found against her. I think the Magistrate was right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

HENDRICKS V. CUTTING.

Interpleader—Sale on credit—
Passing of property.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of Wynberg in an interpleader suit to decide the ownership of a certain Raleigh cart which had been seized in execution against one Du Toit.

The question was whether Hendricks, who made the cart, for one Abdol Falal, had sold it under a suspensive or resolutive condition. Falal appeared to have sold the cart to one Du Toit, and Cutting obtained a judgment against Du Toit, and took out execution and seized the cart. Hendricks then came and claimed that the cart was his property. The Magistrate had found that the cart was liable to execution as belonging to Du Toit.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the cart was attached in order to satisfy a judgment in the case of Cutting (judgment creditor) and Du Toit (debtor), the cart being then in the possession of Cutting, who had seized it by way of security from Du Toit. The cart was now claimed by Hendricks, who said that it was sold to Falal on condition that it remained his property until such time as the purchase price had been paid off. Falal denied the condition, and asserted that he became the owner of the cart on delivery. The evidence as to the suspensive condition was very conflicting, but it appeared to him (the Magistrate) that delivery had taken place, and that ownership had passed to Falal, who had subsequently sold the cart to Du Toit.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for appellant; Dr. Greer was for respondent.

Mr. Jones submitted that the reasons given by the Magistrate for his judgment were not borne out by the evidence. The Magistrate did not find that the document between Hendricks and Falal was not a genuine document, but rather seemed to suggest that it was genuine, because he said that the ownership in the cart had passed to Falal before this document was written. His (counsel's) contention was that the Magistrate had founded his judgment upon a wrong principle, because he seemed to have thought that when the cart was delivered in the yard ownership then and there passed. At no time, however, had any arrangements been made as to the purchase price. In this case delivery could not have any effect until the document had been signed. In order that delivery should pass there must be either cash or some arrangement as to credit. Hendricks would never have acquiesced in the sale if he had known the circumstances. If there was anyone who could give a proper explanation as to the whole transaction, it was the defendant, but he did not give that explanation. As there was no evidence to impeach the document, counsel submitted it must be held to be binding.

Without calling upon Dr. Greer, Buchanan, J.: As between Hendricks and Falal, the whole of the record goes to show that as long as the cart was in Falal's possession the property therein remained in Hendricks, and therein it could not be taken in execution. But, unfortunately, while the property was in possession of Falal he sold it to one Du Toit, and the record shows that this sale was with the knowledge of Hendricks, for when Hendricks was told of the sale he acquiesced in it, and said it was good. Du Toit afterwards was unable to pay for the cart, and he said he would hand back the cart to Falal. But meanwhile, unfortunately, perhaps for Hendricks, Du Toit had become indebted to Cutting, and the cart had been delivered by Du Toit to Cutting as security for the debt. Du Toit had bought the cart with the knowledge of the owner, and gave the promissory note in payment. He had not actually paid for the cart, but the sale being on credit the ownership passed to Du Toit. While in Du Toit's possession the cart was taken in execution of a judgment obtained by a creditor. The Magistrate was right in the result of his decision, though in his reasons the evidence does not support his view of the original contract between Hendricks and Falal. I do not think the judgment should be interfered with. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

IN CHAMBERS.

ISHMAEL V. ALLY. { 1906.
Apr. 12th.

Interdict—Proof of debt—Medietio fugæ.

Where it was sought to restrain certain banks from parting with moneys, the property of the respondent, on the ground that the respondent owed money to the applicant and contemplated leaving the Colony.

Held, that no interdict could be granted, as there was no proof how much the respondent owed, and if applicant could show that he contemplated leaving the Colony, applicant had his remedy under the 8th Rule of Court.

This was an application brought by Shaik Ishmael upon notice calling upon Kariem Ally to show cause why a certain rule temporarily interdicting the moneys of applicant standing in certain banks to applicant's credit should not be set aside.

From the affidavits it appeared that the rule was granted on an ex parte application by Ally, who alleged that Ishmael owed him a sum of £724 8s., that Ishmael had offered him £150 in settlement of his claim, and had threatened that unless he accepted that amount he (Ishmael) would withdraw his moneys from the African Banking Corporation and the Standard Bank, and go to India. Ally was a speculator, who had been carrying on business in Strand-street, Cape Town, and Ishmael was a butcher who has been carrying on business at 100, Hanover-street. The debt, Ally alleged, was for sheep that he had supplied to Ishmael. Ally admitted in his petition that his estate was at that time under a provisional order of sequestration. Ishmael now filed an affidavit, in which he denied that he was indebted to Ally in the sum of £724 8s., or any other sum. He admitted that he had had transactions in sheep with the applicant, but said that he had paid for the sheep that he had bought. He repudiated the alleged offer of £150, or threat to leave for India. He also said that a sum of £400 or thereabouts standing to his credit in the bank had been interdicted, and he was prevented from carrying on his business. He added that he had no intention of leaving the Colony for India, or elsewhere. Ally, in a replying affidavit, repeated the allegations contained in his petition, and denied that the transactions he had had with Ishmael had been for cash. He said that owing to the very short period allowed to him to answer the respondent's allegations he had not been able to produce direct proof of the transactions, the proof being contained in certain consignment notes in the hands of stationmasters at Ceres-road, Tulbagh-road, and elsewhere.

Mr. M. Bisset was for the present applicant (Ishmael); Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for respondent.

Mr. Bisset submitted that Ally had no locus standi whatever to appear in any proceedings. As the respondent himself admitted, in his affidavit, his estate had been provisionally sequestrated.

[Maasdorp, J.: I am afraid that won't help you very much; it will only stay proceedings.]

Mr. Bisset said that the respondent's estate had been provisionally sequestrated at the time of the original application. Respondent had no locus standi to make such an application, and it should have been brought either by a curator bonis or a trustee. The creditors were not responsible for the proceedings which Ally had taken. If the applicant sustained any damages as a result of the rule, there would be no one that he could sue except a man of straw, whose estate had been provisionally sequestrated.

Dr. Greer (interposing) said that he was instructed by certain creditors, upon whose petition the provisional order had been granted, to ask the Court to continue the interdict pending proceedings to be taken by the creditors.

Mr. De Villiers submitted that the application of the creditors would remove the chief objection raised by counsel for Ishmael. It had, he urged, been impossible in the brief interval allowed to his client to obtain direct proof of the transactions. He submitted that applicant would now have ample security for any damages that he might incur.

Dr. Greer said that he appeared on behalf of certain judgment creditors, Gent Olivier, of Tulbagh, and Kriel, Roux and Co., also of Tulbagh. He contended that the creditors whom he represented should have had notice of the proceedings. He asked that the matter should be allowed to stand over until Tuesday next, so that the creditors might properly come before the Court.

Mr. Bisset submitted that the real point in the case was whether Ishmael intended to leave the jurisdiction, and that there was absolutely no proof of such an intention.

Maasdorp, J.: It is quite clear that the Court will not interfere to stop a man from carrying on his ordinary business, simply because he happens to be indebted to any person in a certain sum of money, nor will the Court, for that reason, deprive him of property lawfully belonging to him. In this case it seems that the Court has granted relief to Ally because of the very strong allegations made in his petition that Ishmael had threatened to leave the country and take with him all the property which he was possessed of. That would have been, in itself, an act of fraud, and done for the purpose of delaying and defeating creditors, and in order to prevent such a fraud, the Court granted a provisional interdict, restraining certain banks from paying out to Ishmael the moneys deposited to his account with them. Now, the question arises whether, upon the facts which have now been brought to the notice of the Court, such a case has been made out upon which the Court in the first instance would have granted an interdict. Interdicts are an extraordinary use of the powers of the Court, and they are only granted when the right of the applicant is absolutely clear, and where there is danger of irreparable loss. The question arises whether, upon the facts, as they now appear before the Court, there is complete proof of a debt due by Ishmael to Ally. Upon the original petition, the statement in respect to such debt was in itself very meagre and vague. We now have a statement on the part of the respondent that he did owe certain moneys to the applicant, but he has actually paid off in cash certain large amounts, and that those payments were really in respect of his total indebtedness. Here we have the respondent going into some detail by the production of documents showing what his indebtedness was, and what the payments in respect of it were. It is quite reasonable now to expect that the applicant should bring in specific information to clearly establish his claim, but it appears to me that he has wholly failed to do so. He says himself that he is not in a position now to produce direct proof of his debt. Well, no Court would grant any interdict at all unless it considered that there was direct proof of debt. To my mind, there is nothing to show conclusively that the respondent is indebted to the applicant in the amount claimed by him. It appears that a portion of the indebtedness was paid off, and there would be only a balance due now. The whole of the account must appear before the Court so as to establish clearly what such balance is before the Court would interfere by way of interdict. Now, another ground upon which the Court seems to have proceeded in this case was that there was an intention to defraud by the debtor threatening to leave the country, with all his property. That has now been denied by the respondent, and there is no supporting evidence given by the applicant to substantiate his original statement. The ordinary procedure where a debtor threatens to leave the country without paying his debts is to have him arrested, and that procedure would still be open to the applicant if he can satisfy the Registrar of the Court, or the Court, that there is a clear intention on the part of the respondent to leave the country. Under all the circumstances, without reference to the provisions of the Insolvent Ordinance, I come to the conclusion that, if the case had appeared before the Court in the first instance as it now appears, it would have been held that the whole matter was too vague to support an interdict. It does not seem to me that there would be no right on the part of a person whose estate has been provisionally sequestrated to appear before the Court in the manner in which Ally has appeared here to protect his property during the period of provisional sequestration. I think that not only could Ally appear, but any creditor; if he put before the Court certain facts—he might say that by means of fraud an irreparable injury would be done to the estate—the Court might grant him relief, and, consequently, I do not hold that the mere fact that Ally's estate has been provisionally sequestrated would prevent him from coming to the Court to ask the Court to protect his estate in the manner in which he has done in this case. But I come to the conclusion that there is no clear case made out, and no irreparable damage has been proved, because redress can still be obtained by means of arrest and the interdict must, therefore, be discharged. With reference to the creditors, I may say that if they have any cause to appear before the Court on legal grounds, it may still be open to them to do so. They themselves have not supplemented the information given by the respondent, and their case is consequently no better than that of the respondent. The interdict must be discharged with costs against Ally. No costs have been incurred so far as the creditors are concerned.

Ex parte RAICKOVIC AND OTHERS.

Dr. Greer moved, on the petition of Raickovic and five others, for an order upon the immigration authorities requiring them to allow the petitioners, who are detained on board the steamship Fifeshire, to land at Table Bay Docks. Mr. Howel Jones appeared on behalf of the Colonial Government, and opposed the application.

The applicants, in their petition, said that they arrived in this colony on the 4th inst., having come as cattle men from the Argentina. They were able to read and write in Montenegrin, which was a living language, and they had sums in their possession varying from £6 to £26. They were all subjects of the Principality of Montenegro. Attached to the petition was a letter from Sir John Jackson and Son, Ltd., signed by Mr. C. Brooks (agent), certifying that the firm were willing to give the applicants work at Simon's Town. Petitioners therefore submitted that the authorities had no right to restrain them from landing on these shores.

Mr. Jones said that he wished to take a preliminary exception that the applicants had no locus standi in this court. The point had been decided more than once by this Court that aliens, as these persons were, had no right, by force of action, to enter British territory. They had absolutely no right of action. Counsel quoted the cases of Raner (14, C.T.R., 247) (on behalf of an alien 'S'), and Mina Belmont (16 C.T.R., 231).

Dr. Greer asked for the indulgence of the Court, as he had not had sufficient time to prepare his case.

Maasdorp, J., asked Counsel why he had not prepared his case properly, before he brought on the application.

Dr. Greer said there was a danger that the applicants might be taken away again at any moment, hence the urgency of these applications. The applicants, he went on to contend, were detained, but there was nothing to show that they were undesirable persons. The Court had no evidence before it that the applicants fell within the six classes of persons defined in section 2 of the Act of 1902, as prohibited immigrants, and the inference was that persons who did not come within those classes were entitled to enter the Colony.

Mr. Jones (in answer to the Court) said that he was prepared to produce affidavits in case the Court should be against him on the point he had taken.

Dr. Greer submitted that the respondent's position would be very different if the Colonial Secretary had made an affidavit that he had exercised the discretion that resided in him, and refused the applicants permission to land. Under the circumstances, he urged that the Court should enforce the law as it stood.

Maasdorp, J., said that, in face of the authorities cited in respect of aliens, he would, if counsel for the applicants wished it, allow the matter to stand over in order to enable him (Dr. Greer) to go into that question, otherwise, unless other authorities were cited, he should consider himself bound by the authorities already given, and dispose of the case simply on the ground that an alien had no right to make such an application. He did not wish to finally dispose of that point if counsel desired to look into the authorities and renew the application.

Dr. Greer said that there was a danger of the applicants being sent away in the meantime, should the case be adjourned.

[Maasdorp, J.: I do not suppose that the Government will spirit the men away without letting you know.]

Dr. Greer: I take it that the matter having been mentioned to the Court, the Government officials will stay their hand.

Mr. Jones pointed out that that was not a matter that was in the hands of the Government. They had nothing to do with the re-shipping of these prohibited immigrants. That matter was really in the hands of the agents. When the ships were ready to sail, then the men were taken away. There was a large number of them at the Docks.

The matter was then ordered to stand over, and counsel for applicants was given leave to mention it again.

Mr. Long moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against defendant on an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £64 2s. 8d.

Defendant did not appear.

Order granted.

ESTATE BRUHNS V. REDHOUSE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £416, with interest and costs. Counsel explained that the matter had previously been before the Court, but was then ordered to stand over owing to a defect of service. The defendant lived in the Vryburg district, on the borders of the Transvaal, and was in the habit of crossing the borders in order to avoid service. Judgment had been obtained against defendant in the Transvaal Courts, but he thereupon removed his goods into this colony. Service had now been effected on his son, at defendant's farm. Counsel read an affidavit by the attorney in the plaintiff estate.

Maasdorp, J., said that a letter had been received from defendant's son denying that his father resided in this colony, and declaring that he resided in the Transvaal.

Order granted.

ROSENBERG V. LUNTZ BROS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the First Special Judicial Commissioner at Johannesburg, Transvaal, for £57 16s., together with costs.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers took exception, on the ground that the judgment of the Special Commissioner was superannuated. The judgment was given eight years and two months ago, and under the Transvaal law it actually became superannuated in twelve months. Counsel called the attention of the Court to the Transvaal law as to the Landrost Courts and the High Court.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the question raised was one of foreign law, which should have been put on affidavit.

The matter was ordered to stand over for the production of affidavits on the question.

OLIVIER AND OTHERS V. ALLY.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

OOSTHUIZEN V. NAUDE.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £600, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Counsel added that the defendant's estate was, he believed, about to be surrendered, but he submitted that plaintiff would not be estopped from obtaining provisional sentence, but only from selling the property.

Maasdorp, J., granted provisional sentence, and declaring the property executable, but said that the latter part of the order would be suspended pending an application by defendant to surrender his estate.

HIDDINGH V. SCHWARTZ.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,100 with interest, less £55 paid on account. The bond became due by reason of non-payment of interest. Counsel also moved to have the property specially hypothecated declared executable.

Order granted.

HIDDINGH V. JOUBERT.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence for £660, with interest, on a mortgage bond, which became due by reason of non-payment of interest, and that property be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE DE VILLIERS V. RUBENSTEIN.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £3,000, with interest, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond became payable by reason of non-payment of interest.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

KRUGER V. KRUGER. { 1906.
 { Apr. 17th.

This was an application to have the respondent declared insane and incapable of managing his affairs, and to have a curator or curators appointed for the care of his person, and to administer his affairs. Mr. Roux was for applicant;

Mr. Van Zyl appeared as curator ad litem.

Wm. John Dods, medical superintendent at Valkenberg Asylum, having given evidence,

Mr. Van Zyl said that he did not oppose the application.

Mr. Roux suggested the appointment of Mr. Jacobus Marthinus Theunissen, attorney, Prince Albert, as curator of the respondent's person and property.

An order was granted declaring the respondent insane and appointing Attorney Theunissen as curator of respondent's goods and person.

COURTNEY V. COURTENAY.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a decree of divorce in default of the defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights. Counsel read an affidavit filed by defendant, in which he made wholesale reflections upon his wife's chastity both prior to and since his marriage. He stated that he married plaintiff in Worcester, England, and that she was then keeping a cheap restaurant. He was lured into the place by hearing her charming voice from the street. Defendant went to allege that his wife was unfaithful on her voyage out, and that she had been guilty of misconduct in East London (where she disembarked), at Cathcart, Queen's Town, and elsewhere. Defendant mentioned the names of several people with whom he accused his wife of improper conduct. He stated that he had been in the employ of De Beers Mines at Kimberley since 1903, and that he should have come to Cape Town to give evidence, and defend the case had he had sufficient funds. He, therefore, asked the Court to allow him to give his evidence on commission in Kimberley. Deponent also made statements about having lost thousands of pounds in connection with a certain sauce, of which he was proprietor. Counsel added that he had other affidavits, but Maasdorp, J., interposed and said: You need not read them. The man is not in his sound senses I should say. It is quite clear that he does not intend to comply with the order of Court, judging by the contents of the affidavit, and the letters he has put in.

Mr. Benjamin (in answer to the Court) said that he had to apply for a decree of divorce, custody of the minor children, and an order upon defendant to contribute £2 per month for maintenance of each child until such child reached the age of 16 years, and also for costs of suit.

Maasdorp, J., granted an order as prayed, and directed defendant to make the first payment on the first day of next month.

RAY V. RAY.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Defendant, counsel said, was in Australia. The matter had been ordered to stand over, because the affidavit of service was not supported by a certificate from the Colonial Secretary of Australia. This document had now come to hand, and the matter was in order.

Order of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 2nd July, failing which, to show cause on the 14th July why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

KONING V. KONING.

Mr. Sutton moved for a decree of divorce in default of the defendant's compliance with an order of the restitution of conjugal rights.

Ordered to stand over for proof of publication of the rule.

STYLE V. STYLE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.

Decree of divorce granted, and defendant declared to have forfeited benefits of the marriage.

GULTIG V. GULTIG.

Mr. De Waal moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.

Decree granted, plaintiff to have custody of minor children, and defendant declared to have forfeited benefits of marriage. Defendant to pay costs.

Transfer dues—Date of purchase—Reclaimed and reclaimable land—Act 5 of 1884, Sec. 2.

The Colonial Government had agreed with C. & Co. to allow them to reclaim certain land near the shore of Table Bay, on condition that such land should become the property of C. & Co., if reclaimed within 10 years. Some 6 years before the conclusion of this agreement, C. & Co. had entered into an agreement with another company, whereby they sold some 70,000 square feet of ground "lately reclaimed from the sea," and other certain land thereunto adjoining and covered by the sea, which the vendors had a right to reclaim. Further sales of the property took place, until finally the rights of C. & Co. vested in the applicants. These sales were all made with the consent of the Government. Finally, in June, 1905, the Government granted to C. & Co. the original land reclaimed by them, together with a portion which had been reclaimed by their original successors in title, but refused to make a separate grant to the applicants of the land not reclaimed by them, on the ground that they had consented to the applicants taking over all rights from their predecessors in title. The applicants now desired to obtain transfer of all the reclaimed ground, but in order to do so, it was necessary to pay transfer dues, which the Civil Commissioner could not accept without the customary declarations of purchaser and seller. Applicants asked to have a special date, as the date of sale to them, fixed by the Court for transfer purposes. Under Act 5 of 1884, Sec. 2, transfer duty is payable only upon freehold and quitrent property.

Held, that as applicants had purchased a right to obtain freehold property from the Government within a certain time, of which property the sellers were not at the time of sale in a position to give transfer, it was not competent for the Court to fix a date of sale for transfer purposes.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton) moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute calling upon the Hon. the Treasurer, as representing the Colonial Government, to show cause why applicants should not be allowed to declare the 8th July, 1905, as the date of alienation to be ascertained for valuation of certain property. Mr. Schreiner said that this matter arose in connection with the reclamation of land in the Dock-road under an agreement of 1895, which was sanctioned by Parliament. The reclamation of the land was completed on July 8, 1905. Up to that date there was no grant of the land. During the time from 1895 to 1905 the original cessionaries of the land parted with their rights, first to one company and then to another company. The point that now arose was that the Imperial Cold Storage and Supply Co. applied to have the date ascertained and fixed, which should be taken to be the date of the actual alienation. His Lordship would understand that the peculiar point in the case was this—that until the completion of the reclamation there was really no land that could possibly be transferred. Transfer was not possible until there was a grant, and until that grant was made there could be no date fixed for transfer.

Mr. Howel Jones (who appeared on behalf of the Government to show cause) read a lengthy report on the whole matter prepared by the Registrar of Deeds. Mr. Jones went on to say that the position taken up by the Registrar of Deeds was simply that the whole difficulty that the petitioners might feel was provided for by the Transfer Duty Act of 1884, and that it was a most unusual course to come into court in this way, a course which the Court would not encourage when the facts were put before it. Petitioners sought to go behind the terms of the Act, and applied for an order fixing the date. What they should have done was clearly to go to the Civil Commissioner and tender the transfer duty to him,

His Lordship asked counsel how the property came into the hands of the petitioners.

Mr. Jones said that it was granted by the Government to Combrinck in 1899 by agreement, but the land was not actually transferred to Combrinck. Then Combrinck sold the land to the South African Supply Company on July 20, 1895. The Supply Company sold it again in 1902 to the Australasian Company, and that company, on May 28, 1903, sold it to the Imperial Company. Now, the Imperial Company wished the Court to fix a date upon which the sale took place. The reason why the Australasian Company did not transfer to the Imperial Company the property mentioned in sections 1 and 2 was because they did not get title on May 28, 1903, when the sale took place. Counsel cited different sections of the Transfer Duty Act, and contended that it was the Civil Commissioner with whom the applicants should have dealt, without coming to court. It was clear within six months of the sale that transfer should be paid. The parties had not even attempted to deal with the Civil Commissioner, and until they fulfilled that precedent condition they were not entitled to come to court.

Mr. Schreiner pointed out that his learned friend had overlooked the fact that it was impossible to obtain a transfer until there was a grant. The first transaction by Combrinck and Co. was shown to have taken place when the Hon. J. X. Merriman, as Treasurer-General, accepted the S.A. Supply and Cold Storage Company in place of Combrinck and Co., and that was the best title that could be given at the time. The Transfer Duty Act did not contemplate any duty payable upon a transfer other than on land held from the Government. This land was not held from the Government until the grant was given. The applicants could not go to a Civil Commissioner, who had no power under the circumstances to help them.

Maasdorp, J.: On the 10th day of July, 1895, the Colonial Government entered into an agreement with Combrinck and Co., whereby the Government agreed to allow the firm of Combrinck and Co. to reclaim from the sea a piece of land, which land shall after reclamation become the property of the firm, and a title thereto, embodying certain conditions, will in due course be granted to them. One of the conditions of the contract was that the whole work of reclamation shall be completed within ten years from the date of obtaining the sanction of both Houses of Parliament to the agreement, failing which, such portions of the area as shall then remain unreclaimed shall revert to the Harbour Board. It would therefore appear that as far as the reclaimed portion was concerned, the firm of Combrinck and Co. would be entitled to claim a grant upon the expiration of ten years. On the 4th day of May, 1899, the firm of Combrinck and Co. entered into an agreement with a company called the South African Supply and Cold Storage Company, whereby, amongst other things, they sell to the company all that piece or parcel of land situate in Dock-road, Cape Town, containing 70,010 square feet or thereabouts, lately reclaimed by the vendors, including the North Wharf, together with the buildings and chambers used for refrigerating and cold storage, and all the fixed plant and machinery thereon. Secondly, all that piece and parcel of land now covered by water adjoining the property above described, stretching towards the Coaling Wharf, and containing 43,727 square feet or thereabouts. In another portion of the agreement, it is pointed out that these are portions of the property that a grant of which from the Government the firm of Combrinck and Co. shall under certain conditions become entitled at the expiration of ten years.

In similar terms, the South African Supply and Cold Storage Company agreed, on the 27th of February, 1902, to sell this property to the South African and Australasian Supply and Cold Storage Company. The vendors agree to do all acts that may be necessary to secure for the company registered title to the land. It may also be mentioned that the property secondly mentioned above is now described as being partially reclaimed. On the 30th of October, 1902, an instrument is executed whereby the South African Company purports to cede and transfer to the Australasian Company the land in question. Again, on the 28th day of May, 1903, the Australasian Company, in similar terms, sells the land in question to the Imperial Company; and on the 8th of February, 1904, the former company executed an instrument purporting to cede and transfer the land to the latter company.

From time to time the Government consented to the engagements entered into by the different companies. On the 8th June, 1905, the Government granted to Combrinck and Co. the land which formed the subject of their agreement, including the portion subsequently sold to the Imperial Co., and refused to make a separate and direct grant to the Imperial, as claimed by that company, upon the plea that the Government had consented to their taking over the rights to that portion from the other companies. It now becomes necessary for the Imperial Company to obtain transfer of the property, and before doing so, they are obliged to pay transfer duty, which cannot be accepted by the Civil Commissioner until they have made the requisite declaration of purchase. In this solemn declaration they will be under the necessity of declaring upon what day the property was purchased, and the amount of the purchase price. The assignment of the day of sale in the declaration is mainly of importance because, under the 5th section of Act No. 5 of 1884, the transfer duty is payable within six months from the day of the date of the sale, and after the expiration of such six months, interest is payable upon such duty at the rate of 12 per cent. The Imperial Company, the applicants in this matter, move for a special order fixing, for transfer duty purposes, the 8th of July, 1906, as the date of sale, at a price to be ascertained by valuation. It struck me during the argument that perhaps the objects of the applicants would be attained by a declaration of the day upon which the duty became payable, rather than a declaration of the day of sale, the latter being a question of fact within the knowledge of the applicants themselves, whereas the former might be a subject of controversy. It seemed not unreasonable that under the circumstances of this case, although the contract was entered into upon a certain day, seeing that it could not be carried into effect until the Government grant was obtained, there might be some provision of law postponing the due date of the transfer duty. But it would seem that similar questions had been anticipated by the Legislature, and it was enacted in sections 6 and 7 of the Act that where in a contract of sale it is stipulated that possession shall not be given or that the sale shall not take effect until some future day, or where the sale is conditional, the date at which the contract is entered into, and not such future date or the day when the condition is fulfilled, shall be the date from which the space or term of six months shall be reckoned. There was a peculiar provision contained in section 9 of Act 8 of 1861, where it was enacted that when a condition contained in a contract of sale was a suspending condition, the six months were to be reckoned from the date upon which the condition happened, but that Act has been repealed, and the provision referred to was not taken over in the later Act. It is clear, under all the circumstances, that for the purpose of calculating transfer duty, it was the intention of the Legislature that regard should be had to the date of the day of sale, and no other date. However, the intention of the applicants in this case is of a different nature. It is argued that under section 2 of Act 5 of 1884 transfer duty is payable only upon the purchase price of freehold property and property held from Government upon quitrent, and the leasehold tenure, and in this case at the date of sale that was not the character of the land in question, which could not answer that description until the grant was made by Government on July 8, 1906. It was contended, that only upon July 8 could the previous sale of certain rights in the property have matured into a sale of freehold property. It will appear quite clear from the phraseology of the documents referred to above that the parties did not intend merely to assign certain rights they possessed, but to sell and purchase land with the express purpose that the freehold title should be transferred. At the time the Imperial Company bought the land the sellers were in occupation of the property, and in full enjoyment of all the beneficial rights of ownership. The Imperial Company, upon purchasing the land, did not purchase only such rights, but the right to obtain title to freehold property from the sellers at the appointed time. The Imperial Company bought property of the character described in section 2 of the Act, which the sellers were not then in a position to transfer, but which they expected to be in a position to transfer at the expiration of a fixed period. The contract of sale was not made on July 8, and it is consequently not in the power of the Court to fix that day as the date of sale for transfer duty purposes. With reference to the valuation of the property, it can only be said that the Act contains all the necessary machinery for arriving at the required value. The application will, therefore, be refused, with costs. A preliminary objection was raised to the Court entertaining the application, and it is quite clear that in ordinary course the applicant should have proceeded in accordance with the provisions of the Act, and only appealed to the Court if they felt themselves aggrieved by the action of the Civil Commissioner. But in this case it seemed so clear that the issue between the parties was one which would inevitably come before the Court, that I felt it expedient to deal with the matter at once. In the ordinary course, the view expressed by the Assistant Registrar of Deeds would undoubtedly be correct. The application is refused, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

INDWE MUNICIPALITY V. { 1906.
INDWE RAILWAY AND { Apr. 18th.
OTHERS. " 25th.

Municipality—Owner's rate—Act 45 of 1882—Perpetual quit-rent lease — Emphyteusis — Registration.

The defendant Company in 1896 sold the leases of certain erven forming part of a farm belonging to it for the purpose of founding a township, the conditions of the sale being that the persons offering the highest rental should become lessees in perpetuity with the right of redeeming the rent by payment of 20 years' rent in advance, with the right of assigning the lease and with the right of registering the lease in the Deeds Office, whilst the Company reserved the right to cancel any lease should the lessee fail to pay rent for two consecutive years. In 1898 a municipality was established for the township under Act 45 of 1882, and the lessees were always, without any objection on their part, assessed in the plaintiff Council's books as the owners liable to the owners' or landlords' rent, no tenants' rent being ever imposed.

Held, that the defendant Company was not liable to the payment of owners' rate on the erven of which they had thus sold the perpetual leases.

This was an action brought by the Municipality of Indwe against the Indwe Railway, Collieries, and Land Company, Limited, to recover a sum of £421 14s. 11d. in respect of unpaid landlords' or owners' rates.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is the Municipal Council of the municipality of Indwe, which is constituted under the Act No. 45 of 1882.

2. The defendant is the Indwe Railway Collieries and Land Company, Limited, which is a company duly incorporated and registered in this Colony, and carries on business at Indwe aforesaid.

3. In virtue of the provisions of Act No. 45 of 1882, and more particularly section 125 of that Act, the plaintiff Council from time to time during the years 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904 and 1905 duly and lawfully assessed and levied certain landlords' or owners' rates upon rateable property situated within the municipality of Indwe in manner provided by that section, to wit:

For the year 1899 a rate of 3d. in the pound on the value

1900	2½d.
1901	3d.
1902	3d.
1903	3d.
1904	2d.
1905	2d.

4. The said rates when so duly assessed and levied became due and payable upon certain dates fixed by the Council, and it became and was the duty of all persons liable for such rates to pay the amount thereof to the Municipal Clerk or collector authorised by the Council.

5. Among the rateable property so situated are sundry erven whereof the defendant company is the owner, which erven were valued according to law for the purposes of such assessment and levy of rates as aforesaid during the aforesaid years.

6. In the account and lists hereunto annexed and marked A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, the erven referred to are more particularly detailed, together with the rateable valuations thereof from time to time and the amounts of assessment of rates therein in the several years aforesaid, and the plaintiff craves leave to refer to the said account and lists as though here inserted.

7. At the foot of the said accounts the defendant company is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £421 14s. 11d. after deduction of all sums received on account of the rates assessed and levied as aforesaid.

8. All things have happened, all conditions have been performed, and all times have elapsed necessary to entitle the plaintiff to recover payment of the said sum of £421 14s. 11d. but the defendant company after lawful demand, neglects and refuses to pay the whole or any part thereof.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays for judgment for the sum of £421 14s. 11d. together with interest a tempore morae, that is from the several due dates of the respective rates, or for such further or other relief as this honourable Court may seem meet, together with costs of suit.

To this declaration the defendants pleaded as follows:

1. The defendant company admits paragraphs 1 and 2, and says that the plaintiff Council was first established in or about the year 1898.

2. As to paragraphs 3 and 4, it admits that the rates set forth were assessed under the provisions of Act 45, 1882, but it denies that they were duly assessed or levied as against the defendant company.

3. As to paragraph 5, it admits that the erven were valued by the plaintiff Council for the purposes of assessment, but denies that it (the defendant company) was the owner or was liable to pay any rate in respect thereof.

4. As to paragraphs 6 and 7, it does not admit the correctness of the lists, as showing the amounts due in respect of the erven therein mentioned, and refers to such proof as plaintiff Council may adduce in respect thereof.

5. It denies paragraph 8, and save as above denies all the allegations in the declaration.

6. In or about the year 1896 the defendant company owned the land now situated within the municipal limits and sold the leases of certain erven or lots of ground surveyed by the company for the purpose of establishing the township of Indwe; the defendant company craves leave to refer to the copy of the conditions of sale hereunto annexed marked A as showing the conditions on which the said lots were sold.

7. Thereafter, in or about the year 1897, a village management board, and later on a municipality under the provisions of Act 45, 1882, were established on the said township.

8. The leases of the lots were sold as aforesaid in perpetuity, the purchasers having the option to redeem the rents at any time by paying twenty years' rent in advance, at which time they are entitled to have transfer of the lots passed to them in terms of the conditions of sale.

9. The said erven have been from time to time valued for municipal purposes since the constitution of a municipality, and the purchasers of the leases aforesaid have from time to time paid the municipal rates levied in respect of their erven; and the amount claimed in this suit is in respect of rates unpaid by the said purchasers upon their erven purchased under the aforesaid conditions of sale.

10. The defendant company contends that it is not the owner of the said erven, within the meaning of the aforesaid Act of 1882, and is not liable to pay any rates in respect of the said erven; but that the purchasers of the aforesaid leases are the persons liable for any rates which may have been duly assessed and levied, the said leases being in effect alienations of the said erven.

11. In or about the year 1900 the defendant company agreed to allow the plaintiff Council to exercise certain rights and privileges upon the vacant and unsold ground belonging to the company and styled the commonage, the said rights and privileges being fully set forth in a certain draft deed to which defendant company craves leave to refer.

12. The plaintiff Council has taken the benefit of the rights and privileges referred to in the said deed, has established a pound, collected licenses for brickmaking and quarries, and hut tax at the native location on the defendant company's commonage, but has failed and neglected to execute the said draft deed which recognises the position of the defendant company as contended for in this plea: the moneys collected by the plaintiff Council in respect of licenses and taxes on the defendant company's ground exceeds the amount now sued for.

Wherefore the defendant company claims that the plaintiff Council's claim may be dismissed with costs.

And for a claim in reconvention the defendant company, now plaintiff in reconvention, claims:

13. It craves leave to refer to the matters set forth in the plea in reconvention.

14. The plaintiff in reconvention is entitled to claim that the Council be ordered to execute and complete the said draft deed or in the alternative, to account to the plaintiff in reconvention for all such benefits and privileges exercised by the said Council, as are set forth in the said draft deed and to pay over to the plaintiff in reconvention all sums of money received or collected by the said Council through the exercise of the aforesaid rights and privileges.

The plaintiff in reconvention claims:

(a) That the defendant in reconvention execute and complete the said draft deed.

Or in the alternative:—

(b) Account for and pay over to the plaintiff company all moneys collected or received by virtue of the exercise of any of the rights and privileges on the plaintiff company's commonage as are therein provided for.

(c) Alternative relief.

(d) Costs of suit.

ANNEXURE A.

Conditions of sale upon which John Linden Bradfield, in his capacity of auctioneer, will sell, for and on behalf of the Indwe Railway, Collieries and Land Company, Limited, proprietors of certain piece of land, being lot No. 17, situate in the Division of Wodehouse, field-cornetcy of Guba, by public auction, at Indwe, on 22nd day of April, 1896, the leases of the building stands or erven, comprising sub-divisions of certain portions of the said farm, for the purpose of forming the township of Indwe, according to the general plan framed by the surveyor, E. Gilbert Hall, Esq.

1. The term company in these conditions of sale shall mean the Indwe Railway, Collieries, and Land Company, Limited, or their lawful assigns.

2. The sale shall be held for sterling money.

3. The leases of the building stands or allotments will be sold separately, the present lot being building stand No. and the upset annual rental, £

4. The highest bidder, who shall have offered not less than the upset rental, shall be declared the lessee of the said stand in perpetuity, at the annual rental at which the property shall have been knocked down, subject to these conditions, and the right of the company to accept or refuse any bid that may be offered, and subject also to the right of the purchaser of redeeming the said annual rent as hereinafter provided.

5. The lessee shall be bound to pay one year's rent in advance, commencing from the 22nd day of April, 1896, together with £1 11s. 6d., for surveyor's diagrams, and these conditions of sale, and to sign these conditions of sale and lease on the spot immediately after the sale, and should any purchaser fail to fulfil the provisions of this clause the company shall have the right of having the lease put up again and re-sold at the risk of the defaulter, who shall submit himself to any loss the renewed sale may occasion without benefitting by any eventful profit thereon.

6. The second year's annual rent shall be payable at the office of the company, at Indwe, on the 22nd day of April, 1897, and the annual rent which shall thereafter accrue, also in advance, on the 22nd day of April in each succeeding year, for ever, unless redeemed as hereinafter provided.

7. Should the auctioneer commit any error in the sale it shall not be considered binding, but be rectified.

8. The company reserves the right to cancel any lease should the lessee fail to pay rent for two consecutive years, upon giving the lessee one month's notice of its intention so to do, such notice to be held as duly given when posted to the tenant, addressed to his then last known place of residence, and, in the event of such cancellation, the company shall not be liable for any claim of the lessee in respect of improvements, nor shall the right of the company to any other legal remedy be affected.

9. No assignment of lease will be recognised by the company unless the same shall be duly registered in the books of the company, for which a fee of two shillings and sixpence will be charged.

10. Every lessee whose rent shall not be in arrear, and who shall not be in default in regard to any condition incumbent upon him to perform, shall possess the right of having his lease duly registered in the office of the Registrar of Deeds of this Colony, at the cost, charge, and expense of such lessee.

11. The building stand or allotment is leased as to its extent such as it lies, and the company or vendors will not benefit by any eventual surplus neither will they be answerable for any possible deficiency in the extent thereof.

12. The purchaser or lessee shall be bound to regard and obey all such lawful rules and regulations as the leaseholders by a majority of votes, may frame and promulgate from time to time, pending the erection of the township into a duly constituted municipality or village board of management, according to law, providing that such rules and regulations are not repugnant to, and do not interfere with the rights reserved by the company, and provided, also, that such rules and regulations shall have been passed at a meeting of leaseholders convened, upon the requisition of not less than 25 resident leaseholders by a justice of the peace for the district, after at least seven days' written or printed notice shall have been posted at some conspicuous place in the town.

13. Until such municipality shall take over the company's water scheme or create a water supply of their own, a water rate of ten shillings per annum shall be payable to the company by lessees or purchasers, for or in respect of each building stand, the first payment to be made on the 1st day of January, 1897.

14. The company or vendors expressly reserve the right to, and property in, all deposits of coal or other minerals in or upon the stand leased or purchased, in and upon any portion of the commonage, reserves for native locations, recreation grounds or other purposes, together with the right of mining for the same—subject, however, to the obligation of making compensation to the owners of any building or other improvements which may be damaged by such mining operations.

15. The company further expressly reserves the sole right from time to time to extend the limits of the town, and, for the purpose to survey and dispose of new stands or erven; and furthermore, to survey and dispose of such suburban allotments as they may think proper for residences, erecting brick-kilns, woolwashes, mills, and manufactories, and also to appropriate additional land for railway purposes and mining, as may from time to time be necessary, and for the purpose of creating burial grounds, squares, gardens, reservoirs, and water-courses, and generally such matters and things as may tend to the common advancement of the township and benefit of the proprietors, which newly-surveyed and disposed of stands and allotments shall be at all times subject to the same conditions as those already surveyed and marked on the general plan; and the proceeds of all such future sales shall be payable to and belong to the company.

16. The town and commonage shall be deemed to comprise portions of farms Nos. 17 and 18, Block 3, portion of the "Camp" Farm, and portion of the mining lease on "Camp" Farm, the last-mentioned property being held under a lease from Government of 99 years, from first day of June, 1886, under the provisions of Acts No. 9 of 1877 and 15 of 1883, the remainder being grants from Government to the company, and to be held under title, still to be issued, similar to those held by owners of land under Act 15 of 1887; the joint extent of the whole of the said properties measuring, according to diagram framed by the surveyor aforesaid, 2,160 morgen and 363 square rods.

17. The lessee shall have the right or option at any time of redeeming the lease rent, by payment of twenty years' rent in advance; and if he shall elect to do so, and shall also pay the transfer duty on such capitalised rent, he shall be entitled to have transfer effected into his name by the company's solicitors, on payment of the usual fees according to law, and subject to the provisions of clauses numbered from 9 to 16 inclusive of these conditions.

18. In the event of ten pounds or upwards being bid for the annual rental of any building stand, the transaction shall be regarded as a sale, and the purchase price shall be deemed to be twenty times the amount so bid, payable in manner following, at the office of the company:

(a) One-tenth of the purchase amount on the day of sale, with costs of these conditions (21s.), diagrams, transfer, and transfer duty.

(b) One-tenth three months from the day of sale.

(c) The balance four years from the day of sale, with interest thereon at the rate of five per cent. per annum, payable annually, subject, however, to the right of the purchaser of sooner paying the same; and should he elect to do so, interest shall only be claimable up to the date of payment, and no longer.

(d) On payment of the second instalment, the purchaser shall be entitled to have transfer of the property—upon payment of all expenses—passed into his name, through the company's solicitors, subject to the provisions of clauses numbered 11 to 16 both inclusive, of these conditions, upon passing a bond or kusting brief in favour of the company for the balance of the purchase money and interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable as aforesaid.

ANNEXURE B.

Memorandum of agreement made and entered into by and between the Indwe Railways and Collieries and Land Company (Limited) (hereinafter styled the company) of the one part and—(hereinafter styled the municipality) of the other part.

Whereas the limits of the said municipality are duly defined and set forth in a proclamation of the Governor No. 150 dated 7th day of May, 1898, and published in the Government Gazette of the 13th day of May, 1898.

Whereas the company is the owner of the land within such limits save and except the buildings, stands or erven sold by it on the 22nd day of April, 1896, and portion of the mining lease on camp farm such portion being sold on lease from the Government, and

Whereas for and in consideration of and for the purposes of the good government of the municipality the said company has agreed to give grant, and cede to the said municipality certain rights and privileges.

Now therefore it is hereby agreed between the parties aforesaid as follows:

(1) The said company doth hereby assign, cede and transfer to and unto the said municipality all such rights, powers, privileges (in so far as the company possesses them) as may be necessary to enable the municipality to from time to time make, alter or revoke for the purposes of the government of the municipality and the management of the affairs thereof in accordance with the laws from time to time constituting and regulating the said municipality provided however that nothing herein contained shall be considered or taken as precluding the company from at any time objecting to the making altering or revoking of any such bye law or regulation.

(2) The municipality shall have the right to grant licenses for the making of bricks and quarrying of building stone at such place or places as may be agreed to by the said company and the municipality shall receive the fees arising from such license for its own use.

(3) The company hereby consents to the municipality establishing a pound and erecting the necessary buildings thereof erecting a sheep dip or dips, building a store room for the plant, implements, and tools of the municipality, planting trees, constructing tramways, building a house for the municipal sanitary inspector or inspectors, building a camp for the municipal police, at such respective places on the commonage as the company may agree to and without payment of compensation to the company. Should the company sell (as hereinafter provided) any piece of land on which any of the aforementioned buildings may be erected or on which any building has been erected by the municipality, or should the company require any such piece of land in accordance with the rights reserved by it in clause five hereof then the company shall pay the municipality compensation for such buildings which shall be their then value should the company and municipality fail to agree on the amount of such value it shall be arrived at by arbitration.

(4) The municipality shall have the sole control of the recreation grounds, burial grounds, and all public squares and native location at present established within the municipality, but shall not establish any other location without the consent of the company first had and obtained.

(5) Anything to the contrary above-mentioned notwithstanding.

(a) The company expressly reserves the right to and property in all deposits of coal or other minerals, in or upon land within the limits of the municipality reserves for native locations, recreation grounds or other purposes together with the right of mining for the same

(b) The company further expressly reserves the sole right from time to time to extend the limits of the town and for that purpose, to survey and dispose of new stands or erven and furthermore to survey, and dispose of such suburban allotments as they may think proper for residences, erecting brick kilns, woolwashes, mills and manufactories, and also to appropriate additional land for railway purposes and mining as may from time to time be necessary, and for the purpose of creating burial grounds, squares, gardens, reservoirs and water courses, and generally such matters and things as may tend to the common advancement of the township and benefit of the company, which newly surveyed and disposed of stands or allotments shall be at all times subject to the same conditions as those already surveyed and marked on the general plan, and the proceeds of all such future sales shall be payable to and belong to the company.

(c) The company further reserves the right to make such roads and erect such buildings on the commonage as it may from time to time deem fit in pursuance of its operations.

Nothing in this agreement contained shall be taken to in any way diminish, interfere with or prejudice any one or more of the rights reserved by the company in this fifth clause.

(6) All the company's buildings situate within the limits of the municipality (save and except such as may be exempted by law) shall be subject to the same bye laws and regulations and liable to the same rates and taxes from time to time as all other buildings within the same limits.

(7) The said company shall not be entitled to claim any compensation or payment from the municipality for any of the rights herein given to the same.

(8) The municipality having decided not to take over the company's water scheme but to create a water supply of its own from the Indwe River for the township under a scheme already submitted to the municipality, it is agreed that as soon as such water supply is created and the municipality is in a position to regularly supply the company at its reservoir at the Green Mine with water for the period and as hereinafter set forth the said company in consideration of such supply shall pay an annual contribution of two hundred pounds sterling for a period of thirty years to the municipality, payable at the office of the Town Clerk at Indwe in two equal instalments of £100 each on the first day of January and the first day of July in each and every year, the first of such payments shall be made on the first succeeding 1st day of January or first day of July as the case may be after the date on which the municipality commences to deliver the supply of water aforesaid, and the municipality in consideration of the said annual contribution agrees and undertakes to supply the said company at the said reservoir at the Green Mine with such amount of water as may be required by the said company for its own purposes for a period of thirty years reckoned from the said date on which the municipality commences to supply, not however exceeding an amount of fifty thousand gallons per diem.

The said company shall have the right at its own cost to take water from any water furrow or pipe line of the municipality, at such place or places as the company may desire in addition to receiving it at the reservoir at the Green Mine, provided that the total amount of water supplied to or taken by the company shall not exceed the said 50,000 gallons per diem.

It is, however, specially agreed by the said company, that whilst the maximum amount of water to be supplied to it is fixed at 50,000 gallons per diem, that in the event of a scarcity of water at any time the company shall only receive a pro rata share of the available water, such pro rata share being considered as one-third of the total supply obtained by the municipality.

(9) The company agrees to grant such sites and land the property of the company as may be necessary under the aforesaid municipality scheme for the construction of a reservoir or reservoirs, and water furrow or water furrows, and the laying of a pipe line from the reservoir to the town with the free access at all times to the agents, employees and servants of the municipality, to enter upon the said site and land, for the purpose of making such repairs and alterations to the said reservoir or reservoirs, water furrow or water furrows, and pipe line, as may be necessary, provided however that no such reservoir, water furrow or pipe line, shall be constructed or laid as to interfere with or encroach upon any lot which has already been surveyed by the company for the formation of the township, and shown on the general plan thereof. The municipality shall further in carrying out its own water scheme, provide that the route of the pipe line and furrow shall not interfere with the extension of the township upon the lines of the existing plan.

(10) Should the municipality not have made a substantial commencement of the work in connection with the said water supply by the 30th day of June, 1902, clauses eight and nine hereof shall be considered as lapsed, and of no effect.

The plaintiff made replication and pleaded in reconvention in the following terms:

1. Paragraphs 6 and 7 of the plea are admitted; the plaintiff begs to refer to the terms of the leases referred to, and says that the defendant is still owner of those erven in respect of which the rates claimed in this action are due and unpaid.

2. The erven have been from time to time valued, and certain municipal rates have been from time to time paid by the lessees, but the amount claimed in this suit has not been paid by them, and is outstanding and due from the owner, the defendant company to the municipality.

3. As to paragraphs 11 and 12, before, in and since the year 1900 the plaintiff exercised and had the benefits of the rights referred to therein, and more particularly lawfully established and managed a pound, collected licences for brick-making and quarries, and collected hut tax at the native location on the commonage, all which was done with the knowledge and consent of the defendant and none of the moneys collected were collected on its behalf but for lawful municipal purposes. The draft deed to which the defendant refers was never mutually agreed upon, though long negotiations before, in and since 1900 took place with a view to arriving at an amicable arrangement and understanding with regard to various matters of common concern to the municipality and the defendant, and the plaintiff did not fail to execute the said deed, and has never agreed, nor in law would have power to agree to the contention of the defendant now pleaded, or specifically to exempt the defendant from the payment of municipal rates lawfully due in terms of the statutes governing the municipality and payable by the defendant as owner of the said erven.

4. Save as aforesaid, and save in so far as the allegations in the declaration are admitted in the plea, the plaintiff denies all allegations of fact and conclusions of law therein contained, joins issue thereon and again prays for judgment with costs.

5. For a plea in reconvention the plaintiff (now defendant) begs to refer to the foregoing replication, denies that the defendant (now plaintiff) is entitled to demand either that the said draft deed shall be executed and completed by the plaintiff (now defendant) or that the plaintiff (now defendant) shall account for and pay over to the defendant (now plaintiff) all or any of the sums of money collected in manner set forth in paragraph 3 of the replication, and denies all the allegations and contentions of the defendant (now plaintiff) in the said claim.

Wherefore the plaintiff (now defendant) prays that the said claim may be dismissed with costs.

The rejoinder and replication in reconvention were general.

Mr. Schreiner (with him Mr. Close) for the plaintiffs. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton) for defendants.

Mr. Searle said he saw that to a great extent defendants must produce evidence on the point, but there was one point as to which plaintiffs certainly ought to make their case clear. When the evidence was gone into it would at once appear that this was a perfectly recent claim of the municipality, and that for years past the people who had been rated in the municipal books were the erf-holders, not the company at all; except where the company were rated for unsold erven which did not come into the present dispute. He thought it would be quite clear that the company never had notice of the valuations of the plaintiffs for the purpose of objection.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How is it that point is not pleaded?]

Mr. Searle: It is pleaded that we are not the owners, and I think that is sufficient. I submit that it is sufficiently pleaded when we say that, in terms of Act 45, 1882, we are not the owners.

De Villiers, C.J., suggested that the plea should be amended so as to cover the point.

Mr. Searle said that under the circumstances he would have the plea amended.

George E. Dugmore, managing director of the Indwe Company, said he remembered the sales of the erven. A plan was originally made by Mr. Hall showing about 570 erven. A sale took place in 1896 of about 270 erven, the balance being sold in 1902. The former sales took place on quit-rent leases, and the 1902 sales were made according to different conditions and transfer was given. A Village Management Board was established in October, 1896. The rate was then collected by the company on behalf of the Divisional Council, and the company received a commission of 5 per cent. on the amount collected. In 1898 the Indwe Municipality was constituted. The erven were built upon from time to time, and the township of Indwe sprang up. No demand was made by the Municipality for rates upon the leased lands. The unsold erven were valued and rates were paid upon these by the company. The first demand by the Municipality for rates upon the leased erven was not made until December, 1904. Valuable buildings stood on a number of the erven, and in several instances the rates would considerably exceed the quit-rent. In 1899 negotiations began with regard to what was called a declaration of rights between the Municipality and the company. Subsequently a draft agreement between the parties was drawn up. A public meeting was held on the 27th July, 1900, to which the draft agreement was submitted. The water supply question was raised in the draft in addition to other questions. All the questions were settled except that of the water supply.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Searle): Then how can you claim that plaintiffs should execute the agreement?]

Mr. Searle admitted that there was a difficulty, but he pointed out that plaintiffs had exercised privileges under other sections of the draft deed.

Witness (continuing) said that the Municipality had obtained benefits under the deed in the collection of revenues from the Commonage.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: In the 1896 conditions of sale the company undertook that all future sales of erven would be under similar conditions. In the sales of 1902, the company broke that agreement by selling under different conditions.

Mr. Schreiner (in answer to the Court) said that the Municipality's case certainly was that the Municipality never did until 1904 make any claim upon the company. What they said was that they could not make a gift away at all of that which was their duty as a Municipality to collect from all owners. They had been under the impression up to then that they were to collect rates from the lessees.

Cross-examination resumed: Witness's company had paid the Divisional Council rate he believed all through, and had collected the amount from the erf-holders. A tenant rate had never been levied in Indwe. He considered that the draft agreement was adopted at the public meeting in July, 1900, except as to the water proposals.

Mr. Schreiner: Indwe is like a child of yours?

Witness thought it was very likely that licences were issued by the Village Management Board for the making of bricks and taking of stone. In regard to the hut tax, the company considered that if they were liable as owners of the site, they should have the benefit of any revenue. He was not sure that it really was a hut tax that the Municipality levied. From the first the Municipality had had full control of the native location. The natives paid nothing to the company for the ground they occupied. The company had no wish to take over the control of the location. Witness would be very much surprised to learn that the expenditure on the location and commonage in the years in question had greatly exceeded any revenue received by the Municipality from those sources.

Mr. Schreiner: But that is the fact.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out that witness's opinions on these questions did not matter. The case would have to be decided upon the correspondence. It was a question of law. The correspondence would decide whether an agreement was made.

Re-examined: Since the declaration of rights had commenced the company had sent out circulars to the erf-holders as a result of which some 70 had taken transfer of the erven.

By the Court: As far as witness knew none of the erf-holders had objected to paying rates. He believed the Council had passed a resolution saying that they would not take rates from the erf-holders.

Mr. Schreiner: We sued the company in February, 1905, in the Magistrate's Court, for rates upon three erven, and got judgment.

Joseph R. Nightingale, secretary of the company, said he had drawn up the account showing items of £83 odd in no case recoverable from the company. The company had never been rated in the Municipal books for the erven, in respect of which rates were now claimed. Under the heading of "owners" the names of the erf-holders were given.

Cross-examined: The second case in the Magistrate's Court went off upon exceptions, and nothing then remained but to come to the highest Court in the Colony.

Harry Neville, formerly Mayor of Indwe (called by Mr. Schreiner), said that he had lived at Indwe since 1899. He had been secretary of the Municipality since the first of last month. Witness took a prominent part in the meeting of July, 1900. From that time he took an active part in the negotiations with the company for a water supply and other things. He had never, while he was Mayor, understood that an agreement was entered into with the company. Constant difficulties cropped up just as they were about to come to an agreement. The Municipality changed their attitude with regard to the liability of the company for these erven, on account of a Divisional Council election. It was found when they wanted to have a member for Indwe on the Divisional Council that not more than one had the qualification to sit. Many lease-holders were men of some substance, worth about £4,000 or £5,000 in leasehold property, but they were not qualified to sit on the Divisional Council, because they were not registered owners. Witness gave figures showing that during the period in question there was a deficiency of £600 as between revenue and expenditure on the location and commonage.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The erfholders were still assessed in the municipal books for these erven. At the public meeting in 1900 the different clauses in the draft agreement were treated and voted upon separately. The leaseholders were many of them in a position to pay, but they would not pay pending the decision of the Supreme Court. One of the erfholders (Mr. Sissons) tendered some little time payment of the rate for his erf. He tendered a cheque, which the Council refused, because there was some doubt as to whether it was a sufficient tender. The cheque was not refused because this question was pending.

Mr. Searle: You have been the moving spirit of the whole thing throughout?

Witness: It is good of you to say so, but I don't think it is so. In further cross-examination, witness said that he was Town Clerk, superintendent of the location, and overseer of the commonage.

Mr. Schreiner, in his argument, dwelt upon the difficult position in which the municipality had been placed by the company, valuable and important as that company was, and said he hoped there would be a clear declaration as to the position of this young municipality, which had been hampered at every turn.

Mr. Searle said his learned friend had drawn a somewhat lurid picture of this municipality that was hardly borne out by the facts. The municipality were now seeking to get rates from a company that had got no powers or privileges of ownership, as laid down in Roman-Dutch law. The municipality were, as a matter of fact, the leaseholders, and they were attempting to make the company pay the rates of the ground of which they were lessees. Counsel did not press the claim in reconvention.

Mr. Schreiner having been heard in reply,

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (April 25th).

Do Villiers, C.J.: This is an action to recover certain arrear municipal rates alleged to be due to the plaintiff Council by the defendant company, as the alleged owner of certain erven within the Municipality of Indwe. The defendant company, by its plea, denies that it is the owner of the erven, inasmuch as the leases of the erven had been sold by it to individual purchasers under conditions of sale which, as the plea alleges, in effect transferred the ownership to such purchasers. The plea further alleges that the rates were assessed and levied as against the purchasers of the leases, who have been treated and appear as the owners in the plaintiff's books, and that the defendant company has allowed the plaintiff Council to exercise certain privileges upon land belonging to the defendant company, known as the commonage, which privileges have brought in a larger revenue for the Council than the amount now sued for. For a claim in reconvention the company claims that the Council be compelled to execute a draft deed setting forth the terms of an agreement relating to matters in dispute between the parties, or, in the alternative, to account for and pay over to the company all moneys received by the Council by virtue of the exercise of the privileges on the commonage already mentioned.

It appears that in the year 1896 the company, which was the owner of the land on which the township of Indwe now stands, sold the leases of certain erven or lots of ground for the purpose of establishing such township. Among the conditions of sale the following are the most important. The highest bidder who shall have offered not less than the upset rental shall be declared the lessee of the stand in perpetuity, at the annual rental at which the property shall have been knocked down, subject to the right of the purchaser to redeem the annual rent. The company reserves the right to cancel any lease should the lessee fail to pay rent for two consecutive years, and in the event of such cancellation the company shall not be liable for any claim of the lessee in respect of improvements. The lease may be assigned provided that such assignment be duly registered in the books of the company on payment of a fee of two shillings and sixpence. Every lessee whose rent shall not be in arrear, and who shall not be in default in regard to any condition incumbent upon him to perform, shall possess the right of having his lease duly registered in the office of the Registrar of Deeds at the expense of such lessee. The lessee shall have the right or option at any time of redeeming the rent by payment of twenty years' rent in advance, and if he shall elect to do so he shall be entitled to transfer of the property on payment of transfer duty and other expenses of transfer. In the event of ten pounds or upwards being bid for the annual rental of any building stand, the transaction shall be regarded as a sale, and the purchase price shall be deemed to be twenty times the amount so bid. In the year 1898 a Municipality was established for the township under the provisions of Act 45 of 1882. The owners' rates were assessed and levied by the plaintiff Council as against the purchasers of the leases, who appeared and still appear as owners in the plaintiff's books. The leases of the erven, in respect of which the owners' rates are now demanded from the company, have never been registered in the Deeds Office, but the erven have continued to be in the occupation of the lessees or their assignees. The real question to be decided is whether the company is still the owners of the erven in question, so as to be liable to the payment of the owners' or landlords' rate, under the provisions of Act 45 of 1882.

I quite concur in the view, which the plaintiff's counsel has strongly urged upon the Court that by the law of this colony a lease for ten years or more requires registration in the Deeds Office in order to bind particular successors and creditors of the lessor, although, in order to be binding between the parties, such lease requires no registration. Any doubt that might exist on the point is removed by the able reasoning of Innes C.J., and Curlewis, J., in the Transvaal case of Canavan v. New Transvaal Gold Farms (T.S.C., for 1904, p. 136). In that case our own case of Green v. Griffiths (4. Juta, 350), was cited with apparent approval, but it does not appear that the subsequent case of Hite's Executor v. Jones (19. S.C.R., 244) was referred to. In this last case I ventured to remark that "the rule giving a real right to the lessee, as against the purchaser, does not extend to terms exceeding ten years, without notarial registration of the lease upon the title deed of the property." The leases now in question, which are leases in perpetuity, have not been so registered, and if the company were now to sell and transfer the land to persons ignorant of the perpetual leases, the cases just mentioned would have an important bearing on the respective rights of the purchasers and lessees. They have no direct bearing, however, upon the question whether the company is liable to the owners' rate levied as against the erven. The plaintiff's contention is that the lessees not being registered owners are not liable to the rate, but it does not appear that any of the lessees themselves, whose names appear in the Council's books as the rated owners ever objected. It is important to observe that the Act of 1882 does not speak of "registered owners," as would have been done if registration was intended to be the only test of ownership under the Act. In the case of Kimberley Divisional Council v. London and S.A. Exploration Company (2. A.C., 23), the Court of Appeal carefully guarded itself against lending any support to the view that registered owners are alone liable to the payment of Divisional Council rates. "As a general principle," it was said, "the best proof of ownership is registration . . . , but there may be special circumstances to take the case out of the general rule." Take the case of a person who, for the full period of prescription, has been in the undisturbed occupation of land within a municipality, and has during that period raised no objection to his name appearing as the rated owner, it would be idle pedantry to say that he is not the owner liable to pay the rates. Or take the case of a person who has purchased land from a non-resident registered owner, and has paid for and occupied such land, but has neglected to secure transfer, it could not be successfully contended that he is entitled, by reason of such neglect, to be freed from the payment of the owner's rate. Or take the case of an erfowner within a municipality, who holds a perpetual quitrent lease of his erf, and has increased the value of his erf a thousand-fold by erecting thereon extensive buildings, which he has let to several tenants. In the estimation of the whole local community he would be the owner, the obvious intention of the legislature would be that he should be liable to the owners' or landlords' rate, and the tenants to the tenants' rate, and his neglect to register his perpetual quitrent lease would not prevent the Court from giving effect to the intention of the legislature. In the present case the defendant company has, by the leases in question, parted with its owners' rights in respect of the land thus leased. It is true that the company has the right to cancel any lease in case (?) two successive years' rent is unpaid, but until such cancellation actually takes place the company has no control whatever over the property, nor has it any rights in respect of the reversion. So long as the lessee pays the rent he has every right of the owner. He may assign his right, he may improve the land without giving the company any right to the improvements, and he may at any time become the registered owner of the freehold by payment of twenty years' rent in advance. In point of fact, it is admitted that valuable buildings have been erected by many of the lessees, and that owing to the improvements thus made the rates payable are in many cases far in excess of any rents payable to the company. In this connection it should be borne in mind that the Council, in levying and suing for rates, really acts on behalf and for the benefit of the whole body of municipal voters, who should not have the benefit of non-registration of the leases if the practical effect of these leases is to endow them with all the rights and privileges of owners. If plaintiff's contention is correct, the only person liable to the owner's rate is the company, which has parted with its rights in the leased lands, whilst the persons who had all the owners' rights and are in enjoyment of municipal protection would go scot free. It is clear from the evidence that no tenant's rate has ever been levied. The lessees appear on the books as the rated owners, and as such they are entitled to appear on the voters' list. They elect the Municipal Councillors, and thus control the affairs of the municipality, including the levying of rates. The company, as the owner of unsold erven, does not deny its liability to pay owner's rates thereon. But even if it paid, in addition, the rates on all the sold erven, it can have only three votes in all under the 28th section of the Act. The result would be that in every election the votes of the company would be entirely swamped by the votes of the lessees as the nominally rated owners. The further result would be that the lessees would have the full benefit of all improvements made by them on their stands without paying any rates, even on the increased value, whilst the Municipal Council, by levying no tenant's rates at all, could throw all the expenses of the municipality on the defendant company alone. Fortunately such a state of things does not appear to me to be countenanced by the Municipal Act of 1882. The tenure upon which the stands are held by the leaseholders is to all intents and purposes the emphyteutical tenure. The company may still be the dominus directus of the land in the same way as the Crown is the dominus directus of land granted by the Governor on perpetual quitrent tenure, but the practical ownership has passed to the lessees. It has never been suggested in this colony that the Crown is liable under section 115 of Act 45 of 1882, or under Act 36 of 1891, to the payment of municipal rates in respect of land granted on perpetual quitrent. If the leases of the erven now in question had been duly registered there would, to my mind, have been no doubt as to the lessees being liable to the owners' rate under the Act of 1882, and I have already attempted to show that the neglect of the erholders to have their leases registered should not release them from a liability which would have existed if registration had taken place. The company, which is not assessed as the owner in the municipal books, is not, in my opinion, liable to the payment of owner's rates under the Act. In this view of the case the claim in reconvention, which seemed to have been framed by the company to meet the contingency of an adverse decision on the claim in convention, falls to the ground. There is, moreover, no proof of such a final agreement between the parties as to justify the Court in giving effect to the claim in reconvention. There must be abolution from the instance on the claim in convention, as well as on the claim in reconvention. but the plaintiff Council will pay the costs of this action, with the exception of costs incurred by reason of the claim in reconvention, which must be paid by the defendant company.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

HERRING V. HERRING. { 1906.
Apr. 18th.

This was an action for a decree of divorce brought by Sydney Herring, of Matatiele, against his wife, on the ground of her adultery. Mr. Sutton was for the plaintiff and the defendant was in default. The matter had been previously before the Court, when it was ordered that further evidence should be taken on commission as regards the conduct of the defendant. The evidence on the first occasion was an admission by the defendant and the co-respondent, Clement Johnstone, of the adultery, and now the evidence on commission went to show that the parties were living as man and wife in Durban. At the hotel where they stayed their names were entered on the book as Mr. and Mrs. Johnstone.

Decree of divorce granted, with forfeiture of the benefits under the marriage, the defendant to pay the costs.

GENESE V. GENESE.

Mr. Benjamin was for the applicant, and the respondent was in default. The application was for an order of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce against the husband, Arthur Genese, of Simon's Town, on the ground of his malicious desertion.

Rebecca Genese said her husband was managing a tailoring business in London at the time of the marriage. Six months afterwards he became greatly addicted to drink, and in June, 1902, he left for South Africa. Witness followed him subsequently to Cape Town. The defendant had not contributed towards her passage, and had not given her anything towards her maintenance, and she was forced to take employment to support herself. The defendant deserted her, and wrote a letter, saying he would leave her free to do what she pleased, and finished up the letter with: "Good-bye, and God bless you."

The defendant was ordered to restore conjugal rights by the 1st June, or show cause by the 14th June why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

BERRANGE V. BERRANGE.

Mr. Russell was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

The action was for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The defendant was at present living in Heidelberg, under the assumed name of D. F. de Villiers. In 1895 the defendant left the applicant in Phillip's Town, and since then had not returned.

The plaintiff, Geesine Katrina Berrange, stated that in November, 1885, she was living in Phillip's Town, when her husband, who was in trouble—there was a warrant out against him left for Vryheid. The defendant asked her to go to Vryheid, but she did not go, as he would have been found out. Since that time he had not returned to her, and had contributed nothing towards her support. Since the issue of summons the defendant had written acknowledging receipt, and describing his feelings at the receipt of it. In the course of the letter he said, "This is the last nail in my coffin."

De Villiers, C.J., said there was no evidence of desertion here. The man was compelled to leave, and in his letter he expressed the wish to have his wife back.

Mr. Russell submitted the defendant should go further than merely express feelings.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff's case depended upon the establishing of the fact that the defendant had wilfully and maliciously deserted her. Under certain stress of circumstances he was obliged to leave the country with her knowledge, and she was aware of the circumstances under which he left, and when at one time, he was prepared to receive her she thought it best for his safety not to join him. For the larger portion of the twenty years he had resided in the Free State, and that raised a serious question as to his domicile. On the evidence he did not think there was sufficient proof that the defendant was domiciled in this country. With reference to the desertion the defendant, according to the correspondence, seemed shocked at the plaintiff's action. There was no proof of desertion, and the question of domicile was in doubt. The action would be dismissed.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte DA COSTA AND OTHERS. 1906.
Apr. 18th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order for the compulsory liquidation of the South African Trade Protection Society.

Order for liquidation granted, Mr. J. B. Hobday appointed liquidator, with powers under 149th section of Act 25, of 1892.

INSOLVENT ESTATE M. SEAGULL AND CO. V. NEW ZEALAND INSURANCE CO.

Sir Henry Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Struben) appeared for the defendants (the excipients), and there was no appearance for plaintiffs.

Counsel explained that this was an action to recover the amount of an insurance policy in respect of a fire which occurred on May 24, 1904. One of the conditions of the policy was that any action in respect thereof must be instituted within six months for loss, and this action was not instituted until September 4, 1905, or 16 months after the fire. Plaintiff, in replication, pleaded that an action was instituted by Pilney and Co., and abandoned, and Pilney and Co. retained the policy, with the result that they were unable to bring the action within the stipulated time. To the declaration the defendants excepted. Further, the defendants stated that the policy was ceded by Seagull and Co. to Pilney and Co., and the former had no interest in it. Plaintiffs pleaded that the cession was not valid, and to that defendants excepted.

De Villiers, C.J.: Plaintiffs' allegation that some other person had instituted an action is no answer to the plea, and the exception to the replication must be sustained with costs.

TURPIN V. DISTRICT OF STUTTERHEIM SCHOOL BOARD.

Sir Henry Juta, K.C., appeared for applicant, and there was no appearance for defendant.

This was an application for an order declaring the election of members of the District of Stutterheim School Board on December 5, 1905, invalid.

From the affidavits it appeared that the applicant, a farmer in the Stutterheim District, was a candidate in the election, and received 16 votes, as against 17 for Mr. Oosthuisen, who was at the bottom of the list of successful candidates. The Act provided for the election of two-thirds of the members of the Board by municipal ratepayers in the case of a municipal area, and by Divisional Council ratepayers in the case of a Divisional Council area. The question was what were Divisional Council ratepayers? The Government erroneously, counsel submitted, issued instruction to the return officers that the only persons entitled to vote were owners of property, and acting on these instructions the returning officer at this election refused to allow certain persons to vote who were not owners of property, but were lessees and occupiers, and who wished to vote for Mr. Turpin. These votes would have resulted in applicant being elected. Supporting affidavits of persons who were refused votes, and contended that Divisional Council ratepayers were not merely the owners, but the persons who paid the rate and included lessees and occupiers.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., for applicant. Respondent in default.

Counsel quoted authorities in support of his contention, and referred his Lordship to the Divisional Council Act 40, of 1889. Section 243 set out that "all persons owning immovable property within any division, including any municipality within such division, shall be liable to be rated for the purposes of this Act." Section 269 read: "Every Council may in suing for the recovery of rates proceed against the owner, lessee, or occupier." Section 17 set out the persons entitled to be on the voters' roll and section 18 the persons not entitled to vote. Here the lessee or occupier wanted to vote, and the objection was that the rate had remained unpaid, but it was said that this had got nothing to do with the case, as he was not a ratepayer, and did not fall under section 18. The Court held in a former case that the lessee or occupier was liable for the rates without any previous demand. In this case all the persons who tendered their votes had actually paid their rates. It seemed very hard to see logically in the instructions that a lessee who actually paid the rates should not have a vote. Counsel submitted that the Civil Commissioner was incorrect and had taken an erroneous view of the law.

De Villiers, C.J.: The applicant is one of the candidates duly nominated for election to the School Board for the district of Stutterheim. There were six other candidates at this election. After the votes had been taken, the returning officer returned the six other candidates as duly elected. Applicant now complains that certain persons tendered votes for him at the polling booths, and their votes were refused. He alleged they were duly qualified voters, and that their votes were refused on illegal grounds. It seemed that four persons claiming to be duly qualified voters tendered their votes, but the polling officer informed them that, as they were only occupiers or lessees of certain landed property in the district, and not the owners, they were disqualified from voting. The polling officer seemed to have acted upon instructions received from some Government officer, who, for the aid of polling officers, had drawn up certain instructions, and among other things had informed the polling officers that only such ratepayers as were the owners of immovable property in the school district would be allowed to vote. His Lordship drew attention to section 10 of the Act, and, proceeding, said that in this case the district was not a municipal area, and consequently the qualified voters were the Divisional Council ratepayers. Now, it was quite clear, from the authorities quoted, that the voters whose votes were rejected on this occasion were Divisional Council ratepayers. They were not owners of property, but occupiers and lessees under such rights as made them liable to pay the Divisional Council rate, in case the rate was not paid by the owners. Being liable to pay these rates, His Lordship was of opinion that upon the authorities cited they must be described as ratepayers. The polling officer was therefore guilty of an irregularity in excluding their votes. It appeared that the applicant received 16 votes, and if the polling officers had done their duty according to law he would have received four votes more. That would have given him 20 votes, and it seems that two other candidates declared elected immediately above him received 17 and 18 votes respectively. It followed, therefore, that the applicant would have been declared elected upon this list if the votes which had been tendered were received. It was quite clear, therefore, that these other two candidates had not been duly elected. The question, therefore, arose whether these circumstances ought to affect the election of the other candidates, whose position upon the list would not have been affected by the addition of these four votes to the applicant's votes, but it was impossible for the Court now to act, as it were, as returning officer, and include these votes, and place applicant in that position upon the list which he ought to have occupied. It seemed to his Lordship that the only course open to the Court was to declare the whole of the election invalid. The election would be declared invalid and illegal, with costs against the other six candidates.

Ex parte ESTATE OF THE LATE OWEN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved to make absolute a rule calling on all persons concerned to show cause why there should not be an order for the cancellation of certain sales of land.

Dr. Greer appeared for the representatives who purchased lot "i."

Rule made absolute in all cases except sections "d," "l," and with regard to "i," the matter to stand over for further inquiries.

ESTATE MACKINTOSH V. DRUMMOND.

Mr. Upington appeared for the curator bonis in the estate of C. E. Mackintosh, and moved to make the interdict final restraining the respondent from collecting any accounts in the estate, and counsel said the respondent, who represented the Assets Realisation Association, was in court, and had no objection to the application.

The respondent stated that Mackintosh, two days before the provisional order of sequestration, when he made the assignment, had no idea he was in solvent. Mackintosh at the present moment was in durance vile, and had no idea of these proceedings. The curator bonis, Mr. Hennessy, was working only in the interest of Hammond and Co., and not in the interest of the creditors.

Respondent was prepared to consent to the interdict continuing until such times as a trustee be appointed, and he would ask his lordship to fix a date, and order the trustee to proceed forthwith.

De Villiers, C.J., said the matter would remain open at present, and Mr. Hennessy would collect the debts by consent, and retain them pending the decision of the question between the parties. Should any difficulty arise in the collection of the debts, the respondent to be acquainted, so that he could take steps to protect himself. The trustee to proceed forthwith with the action when elected.

Ex parte FLUCKIGER.

Mr. Rowson moved on behalf of the petitioner for leave to sue her husband, Jacob Fluckiger, in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation for a decree of divorce by reason of his malicious desertion. Counsel also applied for substituted service, as the respondent was in Switzerland.

The matter was referred to counsel for the usual certificate, a rule nisi to be issued and sent by registered letter as soon as the respondent's last known place of address was put in.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ESTATE KEER V. GOLOM- { 1906.
BICK. { Apr. 19th.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

VAN DER SPUY V. HEEGER.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,800, with interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and for rents due to be paid to High Sheriff.

Order granted.

ASPELING V. FALALL.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,400, with interest, and £9 18s. 6d. premiums of insurance; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MARAIS V. NOWAK.

Agent—Conduct of parties—Provisional sentence.

M. applied for provisional sentence against N. for certain sums of interest due on a mortgage bond. N. asserted that he had paid the money to one H., M.'s duly constituted agent. M. repudiated the agency. It was, however, proved that up to Feb. 1st., 1906, H. was in the constant habit of collecting interest for M. On that date M. notified N. that in future his son G. M. would manage his business, and that all payments were to be made to G. M. at H.'s office.

Held, that as M. had allowed H. to hold himself out as his agent, provisional sentence must be refused.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,800, with interest, and on an undertaking subsequently entered into to pay 7 per cent. interest; the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

The defendant's affidavit stated that he obtained the loan in 1901. He had paid the interest to Barry Heatlie Heatlie, agent of the plaintiff, and had likewise paid the insurance premiums due in respect of the property mortgaged. In July, 1904, he received notice from Heatlie, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the interest would be raised from 6 to 7 per cent, and a memorandum was attached to the said notice for his signature. On the 30th January, 1906, he paid interest amounting to £63, which had accrued on the 31st December, 1905, to the said Heatlie, as agent of the plaintiff, and received a receipt (annexed) from a clerk in the employ of the said Heatlie. He had called at Heatlie's office after receiving notice in 1904, and asked how he was to pay the interest. He was told that he must pay it at Heatlie's office. On the 2nd February last he received a letter from the plaintiff, stating that his son, George Marais, would conduct his business in Cape Town from that date, and that until further notification, all payments must be made to him at Heatlie's office, 92, Adderley-street. Deponent verily believed that the said Heatlie had abused his trust, that plaintiff had withdrawn the authority given to the said Heatlie to act on his own behalf. The answering affidavit of the plaintiff said that Barry Heatlie Heatlie had no authority from him to collect interest, and was expressly forbidden by him to do so. Heatlie was authorised to collect his (plaintiff's) rent, on which Heatlie was paid a commission, and, as a broker, he applied for and obtained from deponent many loans on behalf of his clients. Heatlie had kept his (plaintiff's) books. In the middle of 1904 he became aware that, notwithstanding his instructions to the contrary, Heatlie had been collecting interest from certain mortgagors, and he thereupon gave Heatlie emphatic directions that each mortgagor was to be informed that interest was in future to be paid to his credit in the Standard Bank. A formal undertaking was thereupon prepared and printed, including a promise to pay interest at a slightly increased rate, and the said document was, he understood, sent to his mortgagors. It now appeared that the said Heatlie did not properly observe his instructions, and several of his mortgagors, he believed, were not required to sign the said document, and Heatlie continued to collect the interest. The total amount so received by Heatlie was very large. In certain instances, where no notice was sent to mortgagors, and they had paid interest to Heatlie, he had decided to put up with the loss, but, in the instances where, notwithstanding the express directions to pay to him (deponent) at the bank, mortgagors had chosen to pay to Heatlie, he regarded such interest as still owing to him. For many reasons, he had arranged with his son, George Marais, to go to Cape Town and start business, and he, naturally, intended that he should look after his (plaintiff's) affairs; hence the letter which he sent out at the beginning of February. He had not regarded the said Heatlie as his general representative, and, therefore, the construction placed by the defendant upon the said note was quite erroneous.

Sir H. Juta (for defendant) submitted that this was a matter in which the plaintiff should go into the principal case. There were several questions to be decided on which it was of the utmost importance that the Court should have evidence. It was incredible that Mr. Marais did not know between 1904 and 1906 that Heatlie was collecting interest. It was clear this was not an isolated case, but that it was a test case. There was a number of other people in the same position. There was a good number of mortgagors who had been paying interest to Heatlie under the impression that he was the agent of Mr. Marais to receive interest. Heatlie was no longer in Cape Town, and it was alleged that he had taken this money. It was easy, therefore, for plaintiff to say that there was no agency. The bank slips had never been sent to Heatlie, and had never been entered in the books; hence it was impossible to believe that Mr. Marais had during all this time not been aware that Heatlie was collecting the interest. It was an important point as to how far Heatlie was held out to the public as the agent of Mr. Marais.

Mr. Upington (for plaintiff) said that the first point raised was to show how far Heatlie was held out as plaintiff's agent to collect interest. Now, clear and distinct notification was sent to the debtor in what way payment was to be made. That was accepted and agreed to by the debtor in the most positive and clear terms. If a debtor chose to adopt some other method of paying the interest, had he any right to complain, in view of what had happened? There was no proof at any time of agency on the part of Heatlie. As to the question of the bank slips, the interest for 1904-1906 was paid into the bank. It was the conduct of Nowak that had rendered the fraud possible to be committed.

Maasdorp, J.: The question the Court has to inquire into in this case, but not absolutely decide, is whether Heatlie acted as the duly appointed agent of the plaintiff, and the Court has to inquire into that question merely to ascertain whether, upon the documents now before it, the probability of success, if the principal case is gone into would lie with the plaintiff or defendant. It seems that the bond was executed in 1901, and it is admitted that interest was paid up to July, 1905. It appears that that interest was paid from time to time, not to Mr. Marais, but to Heatlie. Now, there is nothing in the bond constituting Heatlie the agent for Marais to receive the money. Therefore the question of relationship merely depends upon the conduct of the parties. Up to 1904 constant payments were made of interest, which was always received up to that date by Heatlie and accounted for by him to Marais. An important document is put in of the 15th July, 1904, and in that there appears to be an express undertaking that the money should be paid into the Standard Bank by the defendant, and that he should send the deposit receipts to B. H. Heatlie, of Cape Town. That must, therefore, be taken to be an agreement, which was in future to be in force between the parties, but it is quite within the power of the parties to waive that condition, and the question is whether that condition was waived. It is merely a printed form, and, to my mind, it does not prove that such a state of affairs had occurred that Mr. Marais insisted that a change should be made, but it is simply a matter in the ordinary course of business which should have arisen without any change having taken place. This printed form was signed by defendant, in which he promised to pay the money into the Standard Bank. The money was not paid into the Standard Bank, but was paid to Heatlie; but, under ordinary circumstances, one would anticipate that Marais would inquire whether his interest had been paid, and if he had made inquiries he would have ascertained whether the deposit receipts had been duly forwarded to Mr. Heatlie. However, the money was paid to Mr. Heatlie, and a doubt now rests to some extent upon that part of the case whether Mr. Marais was aware that the moneys were received, and whether he allowed the defendant to believe that it was paid properly to his agent. I think the strength of the plaintiff's case, as based upon that document, is removed when we refer to the document of the 1st February, 1906. The plaintiff sent a letter to the defendant, in which he says: "I beg to advise you that my son, George Marais, will conduct my business in Cape Town as from to-day's date. Until further notification, all payments must be made to him at Mr. Heatlie's office." What payments does this refer to? Upon the information as given in this case, it refers to the payments of interest. We have, therefore, this position taken up, that, notwithstanding the direction to pay into the Standard Bank, he is here instructed to pay this interest to Marais's son at Heatlie's office. I come to the conclusion that there seems to be strong evidence that Mr. Heatlie acted as agent for Mr. Marais, and was allowed by Mr. Marais to hold himself out to the public as his agent, and that consequently he would be bound. I say there is a strong probability of that; the probability is in favour of the defendant that that is the case. Consequently provisional sentence will be refused, with costs, and the parties can go into the principal case.

HODGSON AND ANOTHER V. VAN GERWE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment under rule 31d, in default of plea for £55 cts. goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs. Order granted.

TIERPIN V. SCHOOL BOARD OF STUTTERHEIM DISTRICT.

Mr. Howel Jones mentioned the matter of Turpin v. School Board of Stutterheim District, in which an order was granted yesterday by His Lordship declaring the recent election invalid and illegal, with costs against the six successful candidates. Mr. Jones said that he had been instructed to appear for the respondent, the Civil Commissioner, to oppose. The motion was a very long way down the list, and it was taken on Wednesday, apparently out of its place, and he (counsel) had no notice of the hearing. He understood that the Registrar was not aware that the application would be opposed. He did not know whether there was any opportunity of rearranging the matter.

[Maasdorp, J.: It may be treated as a case of default where a person gives a good reason for not appearing.]

Sir H. Juta (for applicant) said they had not been aware that the Civil Commissioner was going to appear. The other six respondents against whom costs were asked did not appear, and, in spite of all inquiry, they could not find that anybody was appearing for the respondents.

Mr. Jones said that it was not on the question of costs that he wished to appear. This was an important matter. The Government wished the whole matter to be argued as to whether the School Board authorities were right in the construction put on the Divisional Councils Act, and whether they were right in refusing the leasees or occupiers referred to by applicant, permission to vote. If his lordship did not see his way to allow the matter to be re-argued, the Civil Commissioner would, no doubt, have an opportunity of appealing to a full Bench.

[Maasdorp, J.: That would be the better course. Can you appeal when you are in default?]

Mr. Jones: Well, are we really in default? We had notice given to us, and we intended to appear. Strictly speaking there was no default.

[Maasdorp, J.: I do not think the case ought to go by default in this way when there was an intention to appear.]

Sir H. Juta (in answer to the Court) said he thought the matter was now open to appeal. He should not raise any point as to default.

The matter then dropped, it being understood that the case would be carried to appeal before a full Bench.

Ex parte HOFFMAN.

Extradition—Act 22 of 1882.

H. had been arrested in Cape Town on a warrant issued in the O.R.C. and detained in prison, in order that he might be sent back.

Held, that he could not be extradited until a Magistrate had enquired into his case.

Dr. Greer said that he wished to mention a matter of extreme urgency. It was an application on behalf of a man arrested this morning on a warrant issued in the Orange River Colony, who was to be removed by the 11.45 a.m. train (it was now 11.28). He was petitioning the Court to restrain such removal, on the ground that the provisions of Act 22, 1882, had not been complied with. Applicant's legal adviser had been refused permission to see him, and consequently he had been unable to sign the petition or to swear an affidavit. He (counsel) had now to move for an order restraining the removal of petitioner and authorising his attorney to interview him. The present application was brought on the petition of his legal adviser. Counsel read affidavits by Attorney Friedlander and a clerk in the employ of Friedlander and Du Toit stating that petitioner was detained at Wale-street Police Station under an escort from the O.R.C. and that application to the sergeant in charge and to the inspector at Wale-street for permission to interview the applicant had been refused. Accused was to be removed by this evening's train to Bloemfontein.

[Maasdorp, J.: What is the charge?]

Dr. Greer: Applicant is charged with fraud, in a sum of £4 10s. 6d.

How can there be a removal until the Magistrate has decided the matter? —That is exactly the ground of the petition. We say he must first be brought before a Magistrate, and charged.

[Maasdorp, J.: Nothing of that kind has been done yet?]

No.

Maasdorp, J., said that an order would be granted requiring the officer in charge of the Wale-street Police Station, or other person in charge of the applicant, to detain him until a further order of court, applicant to proceed forthwith with his application, and notice to be given to the Attorney-General. Leave would be granted to applicant's attorney to interview him.

REHABILITATIONS. { 1906. (Apr. 19th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones applied for the release from insolvency of Alfred Russell, and for re-investment with his estate.

Granted.

Dr. Rainsford applied for the discharge from insolvency of Mr. Blair Philip, trading as W. B. Philip and Co.

Granted.

ADMISSION.

Mr. Burton mentioned the matter of the admission of Peter Edward de Wet as a conveyancer, which was granted on Tuesday, but the applicant was not in court, through circumstances over which he had no control, to take the oath.

The applicant now appeared, and the oath was administered.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

VAN ROOYEN V. COLONIAL { 1906.
GOVERNMENT. (Apr. 19th.

Service of summons Bad service —Provisional sentence set aside.

This was an application on notice of motion to have a provisional sentence set aside, with costs, on the grounds that the summons was bad, and that the applicant had no notice of the proceedings. The Government obtained provisional sentence against the applicant for £330 on a mortgage bond, and the property was declared executable. The only intimation he had of the judgment was what he read in the "Weekly Cape Times." The applicant was willing to pay the interest in arrear, which he now tendered.

Mr. Jones read an affidavit, which set out that a telegram was sent by the Deputy Sheriff of Fraserburg, and it was assumed, as no notice was given of the non-delivery of the message, that it was delivered.

Mr. Burton was for the applicant, and Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Government.

Mr. Burton said that a judgment was usually granted upon proof of service of summons. Here there was no proof, and that invalidated the whole of the proceedings. Upon the fact where the summons was stuck up, the applicant had not resided since 1891.

Maasdorp, J., said that the plaintiff in the case obtained provisional sentence against the defendant upon the default of the defendant to oppose the action. The defendant now sought to set aside the judgment upon the ground that the summons was never duly served. Although there was no express rule upon the question, it was within the power of the Court to set aside a judgment upon good cause being shown. His Lordship, after reviewing the documentary evidence, said he did not think the sheriff had observed the spirit of the rules in making the return. Under the circumstances he thought the service was insufficient, and judgment would be set aside, with costs.

Es parte REYNOLDS.

This was an application to have a rule nisi made absolute, officially liquidating the company, and calling on all concerned to show cause why Messrs. Syfret, A. J. Chiappini, and J. P. Muirhead should not be appointed official liquidators. Counsel now applied for the appointment of Messrs. Syfret and Chiappini as official liquidators. The opposition to a third liquidator was on account of the poor state of affairs of the company.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton) was for the applicants, and Mr. Close was for the respondent, the Reynolds Vehicle and Harness Factory, Limited.

Mr. Close appeared on the question of the appointment of the liquidators. There was no objection to the appointment of Messrs. Syfret and Chiappini, but the respondent urged that Mr. Muirhead should join them. His learned friend was showing cause against the original rule, which included Mr. Muirhead. There was no objection, in his learned friend's affidavits, in regard to Mr. Muirhead, and counsel then read affidavits in support of the inclusion of Mr. Muirhead.

Maasdorp, J., said the questions between the parties was one respecting the appointment of liquidators. It appeared that all parties represented here were satisfied that Messrs. Syfret and Chiappini should be appointed liquidators, but some of them who were represented by Mr. Close suggested that Mr. Muirhead should be added to this number. The appointment of the official liquidators was in the discretion of the Court. There was no objection to Messrs. Syfret and Chiappini, but it was contended that there was a probability that certain interests would remain unrepresented in this case if the third liquidator was not appointed, and it was suggested that such interests might perhaps be safeguarded by the appointment of Mr. Muirhead. These were merely suggestions that there were conflicting interests upon which Messrs. Syfret and Chiappini would take a partial view, which ought to be corrected upon the appointment of some impartial gentleman. It was argued that Mr. Syfret had already made up his mind upon certain points implicating directors in an irregularity, and consequently some persons who had an open mind on the matter should be appointed. Three of the directors themselves were satisfied that no objection in that respect could be raised to Messrs. Syfret and Chiappini. There being no objection to these gentlemen, the only question was, should a third gentleman be appointed? No facts had been advanced to show that the business of this company was of such importance that two gentlemen could not manage it. Upon that ground also, the Court should hold that the appointment of two liquidators would be sufficient. The rule would be made absolute, and Messrs. Syfret and Chiappini appointed as liquidators, with powers under sections 149 and 151 of the Act.

MAY V. GOLDSTEIN.

Mr. Close (for applicant) said that this was an application to have respondent restrained from taking out a certain writ in execution of a judgment given by the Court on Tuesday.

Mr. Benjamin (for respondent) said that he was prepared to consent to the writ of execution not being taken out until the application could be heard.

Order in terms of consent, application to be proceeded with forthwith, question of costs to stand over.

Ex parte SALIE AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Rowson moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Salie and another, for a rule calling upon the officer administering the Immigration Act to show cause why he should not be restrained from deporting applicants. The Colonial Secretary's Department, he understood, purposed to deport the applicants; hence the urgency of the application.

[Maasdorp, J.: Why didn't you give notice to the Government?]

Mr. Rowson: I believe notice has been given to the Colonial Secretary's Department, but these people might be spirited away. Counsel read an affidavit by the first petitioner, who gave his address as Longmarket-street, Cape Town, in which he said that he was born in India, and was domiciled in the Transvaal until February last. He came to this colony in February, and the authorities allowed him to remain here for two months to visit his friends. This leave expired on Sunday last. He had obtained employment from a certain general dealer at Simon's Town for two years, and had asked the authorities to be permitted to remain in this colony, where he wished to be domiciled henceforth among his relatives. The officer administering the Act had refused to allow him to remain in the Colony on the ground that he was not domiciled here, and that he had entered the Colony in contravention of the Immigration Act of 1902. He was ignorant of his rights when he gave an undertaking to leave the Colony at the end of two months.

Maasdorp, J., said that the matter had better stand for another week, and notice could be given to the Crown in the meantime. He also pointed out that the affidavits had not been stamped and informed counsel that the matter might be mentioned later in the afternoon, when the affidavits had been put into order.

At a later stage, a rule nisi was granted, calling upon the officer in charge of the Immigration Department to show cause why he should not be restrained from deporting the applicants, rule to be returnable on 26th inst.

Ex parte THE KRAAIFONTEIN HOTEL COMPANY, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Van der Byl applied for an extension of the return day until the last day of term, and for an order as to substituted service. Counsel read a list of contributories upon whom service had been effected, and of those upon whom no service had been effected for various reasons. He asked that, so far as the latter were concerned, an order as to publication should be given.

Mr. Burton said that he appeared on behalf of J. W. van Reenen, C. O. Bowman, J. Berman, and V. A. van der Byl, to oppose the application to include them in the list of contributories. He consented to a postponement, but submitted that the liquidators should pay the costs of to-day.

Maasdorp, J., said that the question of costs of to-day should stand over.

Cornelis Johannes Muller applied for his name to be struck off the provisional list of contributories. He said that he had paid in full any claim that the liquidators had against him.

Mr. Van der Byl raised no objection on behalf of the liquidators.

Mr. Muller's name was, therefore, struck off the provisional list of contributories.

As to the question of extending the return day and substituted service, this matter was ordered to stand over pending further information.

Ex parte STRADLING.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute authorising petitioner to deal with the annual income arising from certain trust funds in the estate of the late J. G. and M. V. Gruber. Counsel added that the widow, who was in Brussels, had now consented.

Order granted in terms of consent.

Ex parte THE ESTATE OF THE LATE VAN ZYL.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute authorising the Registrar of Deeds at Vryburg to pass transfer of certain property.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte LOUBSER.

Mr. Sutton moved for a certain rule nisi to be made final calling upon the executors in the estate of the late Antonie Botha to show cause why she should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis for £500 and transfer of certain property at Worcester. From the petition it appeared that petitioner, who lives at Darling, had been in the employ of deceased as housekeeper, and she claimed that she had been promised the money and property in return for her services in looking after the deceased.

The affidavit of one of the executors denied that applicant was entitled to anything from the estate Botha, and urged that applicant was not entitled to sue, and put the estate to unnecessary expense. There had been no registration of the alleged donation. The affidavit of Daniel Bland, of Worcester, and of a midwife at Riversdale were also read. The cottage had, it appeared, already been transferred at the time of the alleged promise.

Answering affidavits in support of the alleged promise given by deceased to donate to applicant £500 and a cottage occupied by Mr. Uys at his death were read. Applicant said that she was 20 years of age, and was a dressmaker. She had advertised in the "Cape Times" for a situation. Subsequently she replied to an advertisement that she saw in the "Cape Times," and was waited upon in Cape Town by Mr. Botha and a Mr. Lindenberg. They told her that the advertisement had elicited 72 applications. They engaged witness's services, and Mr. Botha promised the donation claimed. She alone nursed Mr. Botha through his illness up to the time of his death.

Sir H. Juta (for respondents) submitted that the applicant's story was such an utterly improbable one that it could not be believed. The petitioner did not show any consideration for this alleged promise. Counsel submitted that Miss Loubser went to live with Mr. Botha as his mistress, and not as his housekeeper.

Mr. Sutton submitted that the petition disclosed a prima facie cause of action, and cited the case of Sanders v. Cape Town Electric Tramway Company (15 C.T.R., 1010) in support of his contention.

Maasdorp, J., said the question for the Court was whether aid should be granted to the applicant to sue in forma pauperis. The applicant claimed she was entitled to receive from the estate of the late Mr. Botha transfer of an erf, and the payment of the sum of £500, which was alleged was due to her through an agreement entered into by Mr. Botha before his death. The arrangement on the affidavits of the applicant and Mrs. Benson appeared to His Lordship to be a peculiar one, and it would require very strong evidence to support it. The arrangement was that this lady was to become the companion of Mr. Botha until his death, when she would be entitled to the erf as part consideration. Now, it appeared he did not possess the erf in question before the arrangement was made. That seemed to throw great doubt upon her allegations that he was prepared to give transfer of an erf which he did not possess. His Lordship had no doubt that Mr. Botha was prepared to make some arrangement for her, but it was to be by will after his death, and having failed to make a will that promise did not become operative. Under all the circumstances the applicant was not entitled to the assistance of the Court to sue in forma pauperis; but it was still given to her to establish her case in any other way she may please. The application would be refused.

Ex parte ACHBERG.

Mr. Alexander moved to make absolute a rule nisi to sue in forma pauperis.

Mr. Howel Jones, on behalf of the Government, appeared to consent.

Rule made absolute, Mr. Alexander to act as counsel, and Mr. J. Buirski as attorney.

Ex parte HARTMAN.

Dr. Greer, for the applicant, applied for his release from civil imprisonment on the ground that the judgment was given against him while he was out of the Colony. He was not in possession of any means at present. Notice had been served on the attorneys on the other side, and they were not opposing.

Order of discharge granted.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. de VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

STEVENS V. STEVENS. { 1906.
{ Apr. 20th.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff; and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the defendant. The action was brought by Susan Stevens against her husband, George Stevens, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The marriage took place in January, 1905, and in May, the defendant deserted the plaintiff, and left her. In June, 1905, the plaintiff instituted an action for restitution of conjugal rights, and it was withdrawn on the defendant undertaking to receive the plaintiff, but he had failed to do so. Plaintiff claimed a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, custody of the minor child, maintenance, and a division of the joint estate.

Decree of restitution of conjugal rights granted, the defendant to return or receive the plaintiff on or before May 1, failing which to show cause by the 15th May why a decree of divorce should not be granted, the plaintiff declared to have the custody of the child, and, further, an order on the defendant to show cause why the sum of £50, one-half of the joint estate, shall not be paid to the plaintiff, and why the defendant shall not be ordered to pay the plaintiff £2 per month until the child attains the age of sixteen, and why the defendant should not pay costs.

WEST V. WEST.

Mr. Van Zyl was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default. The action was brought by Marea Elizabeth Gertrude West, of Woodstock, against her husband, Wm. B. West, also of Woodstock, for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The parties were married at Salt River in 1901, and there were two children of the marriage. Last year the defendant maliciously deserted the plaintiff. The plaintiff, in the course of her evidence, stated that her married life was an unhappy one. They could never agree.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why did he leave you?]

Plaintiff: We could never agree.

[De Villiers, C.J.: On any point?]

Plaintiff: We could never agree on any point.

Decree of restitution of conjugal rights granted, the defendant ordered to return or receive the plaintiff on or before April 30, failing which to show cause by the 14th May, why a decree of divorce should not be granted, the plaintiff declared entitled to the custody of the children, the defendant further to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay £3 per month for the maintenance of the children until both attain the age of sixteen, the defendant to pay costs.

ESTATE GREYLING V. VAN DER WALT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the plaintiff, and there was no appearance for the defendant. Counsel for plaintiff asked for judgment in terms of a consent paper against the defendant in his individual capacity, with costs. The defendant was sued both in his individual capacity and in his capacity as executor, but the action was not withdrawn against the estate.

Judgment granted in terms of the consent paper; in terms of prayers "a" and "b," with the exception of the latter part beginning with the words "failing which," the defendant to pay costs and render a true and fair account within fourteen days.

NESER V. DELPORT. { 1906.
Apr. 20th.

Cancellation of sale—Purchase and sale—Ejectment.

The plaintiff sold certain farms to the defendant and one R. under a deed of sale, which fixed the price and the terms of payment and provided that occupation should at once be given to the purchasers. Part of the price was paid by the defendant and R., but R. became insolvent, and his trustee abandoned the purchase. Now defendant brought an action against the present plaintiff, to compel transfer of one half of the farms on payment of half the price, but an exception to the declaration was allowed by the Court (14 C.T.R., 861). The defendant remained in possession of the farm, and the plaintiff brought the present action to eject him.

Held, that as the plaintiff did not claim the cancellation of the sale, he could not eject the defendant.

This was an argument on exceptions. The plaintiff's declaration claimed that the defendant was in unlawful possession of a farm in the district of Colesburg, having failed to carry out the terms of the deed, and he prayed for an order of ejectment and £100 damages. In April, 1903, the plaintiff sold to the defendant and one Le Roux for £11,500 certain landed property. After £3,200 had been paid on account, the estate of Le Roux was surrendered, and the trustee abandoned the purchase. Possession of the property was given prior to the insolvency. The defendant was still in possession of the farm. The plaintiff claimed that by reason of the abandonment the defendant was not entitled to remain in possession of the landed property. The plaintiff was ready and willing to give transfer to the defendant on payment of the balance of instalments due, and passing a first mortgage bond for the balance, which the defendant refused to do. The defendant excepted on the ground that the declaration disclosed no cause of action, inasmuch as, by the terms of the deed of sale, it was provided that possession of the property should be at once given to the purchaser. The plaintiff in his declaration did not claim a cancellation of the sale.

Mr. Burton was for the defendant (the excipient), and Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), was for the plaintiff.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: The deed of sale was executed on April 7, 1903, between the plaintiff on the one side and the defendant and one Le Roux on the other. The purchase price and terms of payment were fixed, and the third clause provided that possession of the property should be at once given to the purchasers. The purchasers were treated as one, but, in point of fact, one of the purchasers became insolvent, and the trustee abandoned the purchase. There remains therefore only the present defendant as the remaining purchaser. He is in possession of the property under the deed of sale. It may well be that the plaintiff is entitled to have the sale cancelled as against the defendant and to obtain damages from him, but if the sale is cancelled the part of the price already paid would have to be returned. But the plaintiff, while not claiming a cancellation of the sale, cannot claim the right to eject the defendant and at the same time to retain the money paid to him. The exception will be allowed and leave given to the plaintiff to amend the declaration. Costs to be costs in the cause.

[Attorneys for excipient: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton. Attorneys for respondent: Van der Byl and De Villiers.]

INHAMBANE OIL AND MINERAL DEVELOPMENT SYNDICATE, LTD. V. MEARS AND FORD.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved to have this case set down for trial on May 9, and for the appointment of a commission to examine E. C. Winley and Gordon William le Sueur, as necessary witnesses.

Application granted, Mr. Advocate Van der Byl being appointed commissioner.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

WHITE, RYAN AND CO. V. } 1906.
FLORIDA. } Apr. 20th.

Practice—Return day.

It is not necessary, save in provisional cases, that action should be taken on the return day.

Mr. Lewis moved for leave to set down a case for judgment by default against Jennie Florida, married in America to Charles Florida. Petitioners said that respondent was indebted to them in the sum of £50 5s. 11d., balance of account from November, 1904, to February, 1905, for goods sold and delivered. Some time ago they obtained leave to sue respondent by edictal citation, and to attach certain lots of ground on the Frogmore Estate, at Retreat, ad fundandam jurisdictionem. After considerable trouble service was effected on respondent at Manila by the agent of Customs, Philippine Islands. Mrs. Florida did not enter appearance. Petitioners, however, decided at that time not to take any further steps, believing that the assets attached were insufficient to cover the costs of proceedings, but they had now become aware that the assets were of much greater value than at first they had been led to believe, and they, therefore, prayed for leave to set down the case for judgment by default.

[Maasdorp, J.: Why didn't you proceed by the ordinary process? If she did not appear on the return day she is now in default.]

Mr. Lewis: No action was taken on the return day, and the original summons has lapsed.

[Maasdorp, J.: There is no necessity, except in provisional cases, that action should be taken on the return day. The case may be set down in the ordinary way for an order of the Court. There will be no order on the present application.]

Ex parte MAREE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to the minors Nortje, in connection with the subdivision of property in the division of Oudtshoorn.

Order granted appointing Mr. James Alexander Foster, of Oudtshoorn, curator ad litem, as prayed.

Ex parte EXECUTORS, ESTATE SCHOE-MAN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the appointment of petitioners as curators ad litem to the minors Schoeman in connection with the subdivision of certain property in the division of Oudtshoorn.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte MALCOMES AND CO.

Mr. Roux moved for an amendment of registration of trade mark of certain plough called the "blue bird plough," manufactured by the Moline Plow Company, of Illinois, U.S.A., so as to have the trade mark registered in the name of the manufacturers instead of petitioners.

Order granted authorising amendment of registration as prayed.

WILSON V. DAVIS.

Mr. Sutton moved for a rule nisi to be made absolute calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from removing certain movables from 146, Victoria-road, Woodstock, pending result of an action to be instituted by petitioner for rent.

Respondent appeared and said that he owed applicant £65 for rent. He had given notice to applicant that it was his intention to remove his goods to a building four doors away. He had promised to pay Wilson £30 this month in respect of the arrear rent and the balance next month. He had had no notice of the interdict until it was served upon him. He was prepared to give guarantees of his bona fides.

[Maasdorp, J.: The goods must remain there until you have taken steps to satisfy applicant's claim. There need be no action at all if you can come to terms with him. The Court must grant this order. Rule absolute with costs.]

Ex parte DE JAGER.

Articled clerk—Service.

The Court condoned a breach of service during 20 months on account of applicant's illness.

Mr. MacGregor moved for leave to include a certain period during which petitioner was articled to Attorney Hofmeyr, of Cradock, in his articles of clerkship. Petitioner formerly served with Mr. Hofmeyr from the 24th April, 1903, to 24th December, 1904, when he discontinued further service on medical advice owing to a breakdown in health. He now proposed to resume his articles.

Order granted authorising the period in question to be counted in articles of clerkship.

Ex parte THE KRAAIFONTEIN HOTEL CO. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Van der Byl presented the second report of the liquidators for confirmation. The liquidators reported that they had provisionally agreed to sell the hotel, grounds, fittings, etc., of the Kraaifontein Hotel for £2,800, the purchaser being Mr. L. Sacks. They were of opinion that it was in the interests of the creditors that the sale should be confirmed.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE BARNARD.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved on behalf of the sole trustee in the insolvent estate of J. P. Barnard, of Carnarvon, for an extension of time, within which to file the liquidation and distribution account for a further period of nine months. It was expected by petitioner that after the recent rains there might be a good opportunity of selling the farm to advantage. The Master raised no objection.

Order granted authorising extension as prayed, no order as to costs.

Ex parte TRIMMS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved on behalf of petitioner, as executor testamentary in certain estate, for leave to mortgage certain properties.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte PRINCE.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers applied for an extension of the return day of rule nisi until the 1st day of August term.

Return day extended accordingly.

GREENBLO V. MAVIEZKAS.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi restraining respondent from parting with possession of a certain wagon.

From the affidavits it appeared that applicant's allegation was that he bought a wagon from respondent, who was a blacksmith and wagonmaker in Canterbury-street, Cape Town, and paid the purchase price (£25), by cheque. The wagon was delivered to him on Sunday evening, April 1, and on the following Tuesday he placed it in his yard in Canterbury-street. On the following morning he found that it had been removed, and subsequently the missing cart was traced to the possession of respondent.

The respondent's case was that he sold a wagon to applicant for £25, and afterwards took it back on a representation by applicant that the wagon was unsuitable. He agreed to make a fresh wagon for £30. He allowed the applicant to have the second wagon before it was completed for urgent requirements, but the wagon was to be returned in order to be completed. The applicant did not return the cart, and as a balance of £5 was owing, deponent had it removed.

Applicant, in his answering affidavit, denied having agreed to pay £30 for the second wagon, and said that he was given delivery by respondent.

Dr. Greer for applicant. Mr. Lewis for respondent.

Mr. Lewis submitted that the applicant's story was a most ingenious fabrication from beginning to end. Applicant, he said, was an artist in the matter of affidavits. The whole case of Greenblo was of the most improbable character, and was not entitled to credence. The probabilities were in favour of respondent's case.

Maasdorp, J.: It seems to me that the real dispute between the parties is as to whether or not the applicant owes the respondent the sum of £5. That question is not now raised for decision, but it will be an important consideration in dealing with the issue that is now before the Court. It is impossible, upon the affidavits that have been put in, to arrive at any conclusion as to the truth. There is a most direct conflict of evidence between a large number of witnesses on both sides. Upon the facts as proved, I come to the conclusion that there was a delivery of the wagon from respondent to applicant, but beyond that it is impossible to go on these affidavits. An order will be granted for restoration of this wagon by the respondent, but I shall not now decide the question of costs. The question of costs is really dependent upon the further question whether £5 is due by applicant to respondent. Respondent will be ordered to deliver up the wagon to applicant, question of costs reserved pending an action to be brought forthwith in the Magistrate's Court by respondent, if so advised, to recover the balance claimed, either party to have leave to move for costs, applicant to be restrained from parting with the wagon pending decision of the matter.

Ex parte HOFFMAN.

Mr. Greer mentioned this matter, which came before his lordship on Thursday on a petition to restrain the police from removing applicant in custody to the Orange River Colony on a charge of fraud.

Mr. Nightingale (for the Crown) now appeared, and explained that affidavits had been sworn, from which it seemed that a mistake had been made by the Orange River Colony police officials, who thought they were acting under the Prisoners' Removal Act, while, as a matter of fact, they were acting under the Fugitive Offenders' Act. It was clear, therefore, that the prisoner should have been brought before the Magistrate before he was removed. The prisoner's detention had now been le-gruised, and he would be brought before a Magistrate in terms of the Fugitive Offenders' Act.

Dr. Greer said that, under the circumstances, no further order was sought by applicant.

His Lordship said that the rule granted yesterday would, by consent, be discharged.

Ex parte LOTBIET.

Mr. Rowson moved for leave to divide certain property in the division of Britstown, in which minors are interested, and to appoint petitioner as guardian of the minors. The Master's report was to the effect that there appeared to be no necessity for the subdivision, nor for the application. Counsel read a further affidavit by applicant, who said that she was anxious to see all the transfers carried through, and that she was prepared to pay all the expenses and fees which might be incurred.

Maasdorp, J., said that the further affidavit should be placed before the Master. The application would be referred back to the Master.

Postea (April 26th).

The Master having reported favourably the Court granted an order in terms of the report.

Ex parte VAN RENEN.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for leave to raise a loan of £5,000 on first mortgage on a farm at Constantia Vale, in the estate of the late Isabella Hester Ann van Renen, mother of petitioner. Petitioner proposed to reoccupy the farm and to pay off the existing mortgage. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted as prayed.

TODD V. GIRDWOOD.

This was an application to have certain trial cause in which the applicant is the defendant removed to the ensuing Circuit Court to be held at Butterworth on May 2.

The affidavit of the applicant (William Todd) stated that he was being sued in the Honourable the Supreme Court to answer respondent in an action for £1,000 damages, which respondent alleged that he had sustained by reason of a letter written by applicant, and published in the "Transkeian Gazette." Deponent denied that the statements were false, malicious, or defamatory, or that respondent had sustained any damages in consequence thereof. It would be necessary for deponent to call about half a dozen witnesses, all of whom resided at or near Kentani, and to the best of his knowledge and belief the majority of plaintiff's witnesses also resided in the Transkei. Deponent was a poor man, and unable to meet the expense of conveying his witnesses to Cape Town. He was an assistant in a trading station at Kentani, and only earned £4 a month and board. He therefore prayed for the removal of the trial to the ensuing Circuit Court.

The answering affidavit of the respondent (William Girdwood), stated that it was necessary and desirable that he should obtain the highest and most impartial medical testimony, and the witnesses he should call were resident in Cape Town. Such testimony was not available in Butterworth. His private and professional reputation was at stake, and he required the best and most experienced counsel. Such counsel would not go on circuit.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for applicant; Mr. Upington was for respondent (Dr. Girdwood).

Mr. Upington said that the defamation complained of was contained in a letter written to the editor of the "Transkeian Gazette," and the letter, if it were false in its statement of facts, was a very serious libel on plaintiff in his profession. In this letter defendant opened by saying that he would call attention to an accident which had caused indignation in Kentani. Then he described an accident to a young man who was tilting at the ring, and he accused Dr. Girdwood of having neglected this young man, owing to his (plaintiff's) being engaged for a music party. "Surely," the letter went on, "such conduct on the part of a doctor is unprecedented—to leave a man lying unconscious without examining him to ascertain the extent of his injury. If the man had died—as it was he had a narrow escape—would it not have been a case for a judge and jury? I question whether a poor, heathen Kafir would treat his dog as our district surgeon (meaning plaintiff) treated this case."

Mr. Upington said that the case was one of great importance to plaintiff, and that an adverse verdict would mean that he might have to go out of his profession.

Mr. Buchanan contended that there were sufficient medical men in East London, Port Elizabeth, Queen's Town, Graham's Town, and elsewhere who were capable of giving evidence without bringing this case to Cape Town.

Maasdorp, J.: It is quite clear that this case cannot now be conveniently heard at the Circuit Court at Butterworth. The Court sits there, I understand, on the second day of next month, and it appears that the plaintiff has witnesses living in Cape Town. Now, that is sufficient to show that it would be impossible to have the case ready for the next Circuit Court. It is also very inconvenient, and not in the interests of justice, to have a case at the last moment removed to a Circuit Court, when in all probability the full time of the Circuit Court will be occupied, and when the case so removed may be left in an unfinished condition. The only application now is for removal to the Circuit Court at Butterworth, and that must be refused. Whether the parties may not find some court more conveniently situated, and recourse to which would incur less expense than coming to this Court, is quite another question, but there is no such application before the Court at present. Application refused, with costs.

Ex parte CLARKE AND CO.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton) moved for the rule provisionally placing the company in liquidation to be made final, and for the appointment of Mr. E. R. Syfret and Mr. Richard Starling (formerly managing director of the company) as official liquidators. Counsel also applied, on the petition of Mr. Starling, for an order authorising the payment of certain arrears of salary and advances of remuneration.

Rule made absolute, Messrs. Syfret and Starling to be official liquidators, with the usual powers, and ordered that the arrears of salary be paid to Mr. Starling, and that £50 per month be allowed to Mr. Starling as advances in respect of remuneration.

ENSLIN V. WEITZ.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi restraining the executors in estate Weitz from distributing an inheritance of £300 falling due to the respondent (Cornelius Stephanus Weitz), pending an action to be brought by applicant, an attorney, practising at Aberdeen, and to have the said inheritance declared executable to a judgment of this Court. Mr. Gutsche was for applicant; Mr. Burton was for respondent.

After hearing the affidavits and counsel in argument,

Maasdorp J.: In this case it does not appear that there is anything as yet available in the hands of the executors for payment to the respondent, and consequently there is nothing executable. There is no application to have the right to the property declared executable, so that it is merely a question whether there is any money that can be declared executable. There is at present no information before the Court that there is such cash available, but it does appear that at any time such payment may become available, and unless the applicant in this case be protected in some way the respondent may deal with this property. In fact, it seems to be his intention to do so, i.e., he intended to pay certain creditors according to certain arrangements with them. There is no reason why applicant should be prejudiced by any agreement that respondent may have with other creditors. If this is the only money out of which the creditors are likely to be paid, they may have to take some other steps to have a legal distribution made amongst them. However, that is for them to consider. The Court will grant an order restraining the executors from paying out his inheritance to respondent, pending further order of Court, which any of the parties may move for, respondent to pay costs.

Ex parte POTE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Inghbold moved for the appointment of a trustee under a certain antenuptial contract, petitioners praying that Mr. Gus. Trollip should be appointed.

Ordered that Mr. Trollip be appointed trustee, but no order on prayer (2), that petitioner be granted power to appoint another trustee, should it become necessary.

In re THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., presented the second report of the liquidators, and applied for directions as to the report lying for inspection and for publication.

Ordered that the report lie for inspection for two months, and same order as to publication as in the case of the first report.

OLIVIER AND OTHERS V. ALLY.

Dr. Greer moved for the appointment of Mr. W. J. McLeod as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of Kariem Ally.

Order granted appointing Mr. McLeod provisional trustee.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.)]

Ex parte THE ESTATE OF 1906.
THE LATE VISSER. { Apr. 21st.

This was an application for an order confirming the testamentary disposition of a certain farm. The petitioners were Andries Gerhardus Visser and Solomon Jacobus Jacobs, in the capacity as executors testamentary of the estate of the late Floris Albertus Visser, and of Andreas Gerhardus Visser and Philipus Johannes Gerhardus Jacobs, in their capacity as executors testamentary of the late Susanna Johanna Visser, widow of the late Floris Albertus Visser, of the division of Carnarvon. Mr. Van Zyl appeared for Jacob Casper Kruger.

The petition was in the following terms:

(1) That the late Floris Albertus Visser and Susanna Johanna Visser (born Du Toit), who were married in community of property, by their joint will and testament, dated the 16th June, 1836, and codicil thereto, dated 10th October, 1888, bequeathed to their children certain farms or landed property subject to certain conditions. To one of these children, viz., Francina Jacoba Visser, married in community of property to Jacob Casper Kruger, they bequeathed that portion of Blaauwkrantz known as Bulandfontein, in extent 7,390 morgen and 396 square roods, at a valuation of £700, subject to the following conditions: (a) “The survivor of us retains the right to the full and undisturbed possession, use, and usufruct of said properties during his or her natural life, with the right to live and reside where he or she may choose; (b) should the survivor at any time not make use of his or her said right in and to one or more of said properties, but allow the legatee so to do, then and in that case such legatee of such property or properties shall pay to such survivor a sum of money equivalent to 4 per cent. interest on the aforesaid sums mentioned in connection with each bequest for the period during which he or she shall not use the ground, and during which the legatee shall use it. (c) In case one or more of our legatees should happen to die before the testators, then and in that case their lawful descendants by representation shall succeed in their place. (d) Transfers of the said property shall first be effected after the death of the survivor of both of us to those then entitled thereto, according to the above-named conditions, stipulations, and terms. (e) In case one or more (lit., one or other) of our said legatees shall not comply with the above-named conditions, stipulations, and terms, then and in that case, his or her share shall devolve upon the survivor of both of us as his or her undisturbed and lawful property.”

2. The said Floris Albertus Visser died on 11th June, 1890.

3. After the death of Floris Albertus Visser, his surviving spouse, Susanna Johanna Visser (now deceased) permitted all the legatees under the will to occupy the properties bequeathed to them and have the full use thereof, subject to the payment of a fixed annual sum on life interest to the survivor, which payment in the case of Francina her death, her husband (Jacob Casper Kruger) amounted to £28 per annum.

4. The said Francina Jacobus Kruger predeceased her mother, Susanna J. Visser, leaving issue.

5. The aforesaid payment of £28 per annum was regularly made during the lifetime of the said Francina J. Kruger to the said Susanna J. Visser, but, after the death, her husband (Jacob Casper Kruger), who was also the executor of her estate, failed to pay the life interest or any portion thereof to the said Susanna J. Visser.

6. That the said Jacob C. Kruger became intemperate and misspent and wasted the estate of himself and his predeceased spouse, and the remaining assets of the said estate were sold by execution creditors, leaving the children unprovided for.

7. Thereafter, to wit on the 20th July, 1904, the said Susanna J. Visser executed a will. In this will the testatrix, after reciting that she had, in terms of condition No. 5, whereunder Oulandsfontein is bequeathed to the late Francisca J. Visser in the will made by her and her predeceased spouse Floris A. Visser, dated the 16th June, 1836, cancelled that bequest and had taken back the said farm Oulandsfontein three months after her death, and the proceeds thereof be distributed among the children of the late Francisca Jacoba Visser in equal terms.

8. In terms of the said will of Susanna J. Visser, dated July 20, 1904, aforesaid, your petitioners, who are her executors, caused the farm Oulandsfontein to be sold by public auction, and the same was sold on June 10, 1905, for £1,700 to Daniel Petrus Visser and Frans Daniel Visser, to whom your petitioners, as executors, now propose to effect transfer; but before this can be done it is necessary that transfer should be effected by your two first-named petitioners as executors of the late Floris A. Visser in favour of your two last-named petitioners as executors of the said Susanna J. Visser, of the said farm Oulandsfontein.

9. Your two first-named petitioners as executors of the said Floris A. Visser have tendered such transfer as mentioned paragraph 8 hereof to the Registrar of Deeds, who has, however, rejected the deed, maintaining that the late Susanna J. Visser had, under the circumstances above set forth, no right to dispose by her will of the farm Oulandsfontein in the manner she has done.

10. In consequence of the refusal of the Registrar of Deeds to register the said transfer, your two last-named petitioners, who are executors of the late Susanna J. Visser, are unable to effect transfer of the said farm to the purchasers aforesaid.

Wherefore, petitioners pray that your Lordship may be pleased to grant an order confirming the disposition of the farm Oulandsfontein made by the said late Susanna J. Visser in her separate will dated the 20th July, 1904, and directing the Registrar of Deeds to register the aforesaid transfer, or that your Lordships may be pleased to grant such further or other relief in the premises as to your Lordships may seem meet.

Mr. McGregor having addressed the Court in support of the petition,

Mr. Van Zyl said that he appeared for Kruger, who did not oppose the position taken up by the petitioners, but who said that he must get value for his life interest in the meantime. In his affidavit he denied in paragraph 4 the allegation made in paragraph 5 of the petition, viz., that after his wife's death he failed to pay the life interest or any portion thereof to Susanna Johanna Visser. He took up the attitude that he would have lost that life interest if he had failed to pay, but he denied on affidavit that he had failed to pay.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He simply denies the statement that he had not paid, but he does not even add that he had paid?]

Mr. Van Zyl said he must admit that the affidavit had not been carefully drawn, but still it amounted to a denial of the specific allegation that he had not paid after the death of his wife.

De Villiers, C.J., suggested, as a basis of settlement that the respondent should agree to accept £120 as the value of his life interest, subject to the deduction of arrears, should such found to be owing on further inquiry.

This suggestion was acquiesced in both sides.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court will grant an order as prayed, on condition that out of the purchase-price of the aforesaid farm, Oulandsfontein, there be paid to the respondent the sum of £120, less any arrears of the annual payments of £28 payable for life interest to the surviving testatrix, Mrs. Susanna Visser, under the mutual will of herself and her husband, costs of this application to come out of the proceeds of the sale.

Mr. McGregor said he took it that the executors could not claim from Kruger any payment of arrears after the death of the survivor. He should like an expression from the Court as to the period to which the arrears would be payable.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I suppose they would have to be paid up to the death of the testatrix?]

Mr. Van Zyl asked his lordship whether the costs of respondent were included.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The costs of this application will include his costs.]

Ex parte HOFFMAN.

Dr. Greer moved as a matter of urgency, for the admission to bail of petitioner, who has been extradited to Bloemfontein, Orange River Colony, on a charge of theft of £4 10s., by means of fraud. The case had previously been before the Court, on an application by Hoffman for an order restraining the police from removing him in custody to Bloemfontein without first bringing him before a magistrate. It appeared that petitioner had since been brought before Mr. Broers, A.R.M., of Cape Town, and his extradition had been granted under the Fugitive Offenders' Act. An application was at the time made on behalf of petitioner for bail, but this was refused by the Magistrate. Petitioner said that on the 19th inst. he was released from the Convict Station, after serving a term of twelve months, with hard labour, and that he was re-arrested inside the station on the present charge. He submitted that the offence with which he was charged was a bailable offence, and that Mr. Broers was not entitled to refuse bail. Petitioner was prepared to provide substantial bail. He was in a serious state of health, having undergone two operations while in the hospital.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Has notice been given of this application to the Attorney-General?]

Dr. Greer: I am instructed that notice has not been given. Counsel went on to urge that there was no question as to the offence charged against accused being a bailable offence, and said that he was prepared to give such bail as would ensure his appearance at Bloemfontein at the trial. He understood that the petitioner was about to be conveyed to Bloemfontein this evening; hence the urgency of the application and the impossibility of giving notice to the Attorney-General.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court has not sufficient evidence before it to deal with this case. No notice has been given to the Attorney-General, and no notice has been given to the Magistrate. The Court is wholly without information as to the reasons of the Magistrate for withholding bail. Then, it is said that the man is ill, but there was ample time to have got a certificate to that effect. We have only his bare statement to that effect. I am quite satisfied that, if the man is removed to-night, it will be on a doctor's certificate to the effect that he is fit to be removed. We must trust to the humanity of the authorities to see that the man is not removed if he is not in a fit state of health. At all events, there is not sufficient before the Court to justify it now in making the order asked for.

Dr. Greer: Would your lordship allow the application to be made on Monday, and in the meantime restrain the authorities from removing the petitioner?

[De Villiers, C.J.: I cannot do that; I have given my reasons for refusing.]

Ex parte THE INSOLVENT ESTATE
HOFFMAN.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved, on the petition of Gysbert Willem Kotze, of Malmesbury, as sole trustee in this estate, for an order authorising the Deeds Registry Surveyor to accept certain sub-divisional diagrams with the roads shown thereon deleted. Insolvent was of Hooikraal, district of Malmesbury. In October, 1902, prior to insolvency, he had caused a large number of lots known collectively as the township of Hooikraal, to be sold by auction. After insolvent's surrender, petitioner, acting as trustee, sold to C. Starke and Co., Limited, certain land, which insolvent had in November, 1902, sold to several purchasers, and which said last-named sales (except certain six erven since re-transferred) had been abandoned previous to the sale to Starke and Co. The sub-divisional diagrams of the ground sold by petitioner to Starke and Co. were duly submitted to the Deeds Registry Surveyor for deduction, but were rejected by that office on the ground that the roads, as shown on the general plan, filed in his office, were not marked on the said diagrams; subsequently the roads so shown on the general plan were laid down on the said diagrams, which were then re-submitted to the Registry Surveyor, and by him duly passed. No other sales of the ground sub-divided subsequent to the first sale in October, 1902, had taken place. The purchasers at the sale in October, 1902, would be in no way prejudiced by the present application.

Counsel informed his lordship that a similar application came before the Court on the 3rd November, 1904, In re Courtenay (14 C.T.R., 893, 1011), when a rule was granted calling upon all persons interested to show cause why an order should not be granted as prayed, one publication in the "Cape Times" and the "South African News," rule to be affixed to a public place in the locality referred to. That rule was subsequently made final.

De Villiers, C.J., said that a rule would be granted in the same terms as in the case of Courtenay, to be published in the same manner as then ordered, rule to be returnable on the 3rd May.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

REX V. KOENIGSFEST. { 1906.
{ Apr. 23rd.

This was an appeal from a decision of the A.R.M. of Cape Town, convicting the appellant of contravening section 2, sub-section A, of Act 10 of 1895—the Second-Hand Dealers' Act—and fining him in £10, or 30 days' imprisonment. The charge was that the accused, a second-hand dealer, purchased a certain number of stolen sacks, and failed to enter in the book a true and correct description of the articles. The reasons for the appeal were that the conviction was not supported by the evidence before the Court, and that it was contrary to law. The Magistrate, in his reasons, stated that the two boys, who were undergoing a sentence for the theft of the sacks, gave their evidence fairly, and they were corroborated by an independent witness, who saw them enter the shop. The statement of the accused in the box was at variance with that which he made to the detective. The evidence for the Crown he held to be conclusive, and as there were two previous convictions he ordered the accused to pay a fine of £10, or thirty days' imprisonment.

Dr. Greer was for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Crown.

Counsel for the appellant submitted, on the evidence as advanced in support of the charge, that the Magistrate ought not to have found the accused guilty. On the evidence for the Crown there was such a contradiction between the various witnesses that it must be taken as untrustworthy. The boys might have thought that their evidence, which tended to convict the accused, would mitigate their sentences.

De Villiers, C.J., said he saw no reason for disturbing the decision of the Magistrate in a matter like this, involving the credibility of evidence. The appeal was dismissed.

REX V. BUSHULA.

Perjury—Statement material to the issue—Native penal code.

This was an appeal from the Resident Magistrate at Elliot in a case in which the appellant was convicted of perjury by falsely swearing that a certain promissory note for £27 on which he was sued by John William Corderoy, a farmer, of Matatiele, was not read over and explained to him before he signed. Sentence of four months' imprisonment was passed.

The appeal was on the ground that this statement was not material to the issue, and that the evidence was not sufficient to prove the charge of perjury.

Mr. Roux was for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Jones pointed out that the materiality of the statement was not required by the Penal Code, and submitted that the evidence was quite clear.

De Villiers, C.J., said that in the circumstances he considered the Magistrate would have been justified in accepting as a valid defence that the accused did not know at the time he signed that he was to be the person primarily liable, but accused swore positively that the note was not explained to him, and a host of witnesses was called to prove that this was false, and the Magistrate came to the conclusion that it was wilfully false. In his lordship's opinion, the allegation was sufficiently material to the issue, and the appeal must be dismissed.

REX V. HARRIS

Theft — Magistrate's inference from facts overruled.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Resident Magistrate of Swellendam convicting the appellant of the theft of a twelve inch square belonging to a joiner. Appellant was fined 8s. 6d., with the option of seven days' imprisonment.

Mr. J. E. P. de Villiers was for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones for the Crown. The latter said he was instructed not to support the conviction.

Counsel for the appellant said that the Magistrate's finding was against the weight of the evidence, which was very brief and scrappy.

De Villiers, C.J.: It does appear that there was a mistake on the part of this man, who took away one square and left another in its place. He admits that the one he took was the more valuable, but he says it was all done in a hurry. If he had intended to steal the square he would not, I think, have left another in its place, because that square could at once be identified as belonging to him. That is a circumstance which ought to have been borne in mind by the Magistrate in considering the case. It would be very hard if the man for a mistake of this kind was branded as a thief. The appeal will be allowed and the conviction quashed.

REX V. MAPUCENI.

Magistrate's finding on credibility of witnesses overruled—Presumption of innocence.

This was an appeal from a decision of the R.M. of Mount Ayliff. The accused was charged with the crime of theft under section 198 of the Native Territories Penal Code, in that in November, 1905, he stole a goat. The accused was found guilty and sentenced to nine months' imprisonment with hard labour. The grounds of the appeal were that the conviction was contrary to the weight of evidence, and generally that the conviction was contrary to law.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, held that the conviction was supported by the evidence for the prosecution. The accused did not say anything to the owner of the alleged exchange. The manner in which the witnesses for the defence gave their evidence was far from satisfactory.

Mr. Upington was for the appellant and Mr. Nightingale appeared for the Crown.

De Villiers, C.J.: The Magistrate did not seem to have attached sufficient importance to the evidence as to the exchange, but he simply said that he disbelieved the evidence for the defence. It seemed utterly incredible that the accused would have taken over the goat unless he was entitled to dispose of it. His lordship was of opinion it was a case in which, notwithstanding the question of credibility, the Court should have given the accused the benefit of the doubt. The appeal would be allowed and the conviction quashed.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

BLACK V. BLACK AND { 1906.
BLACK. { Apr. 23rd.

This was an application to make absolute a certain rule nisi restraining respondents or any other persons from removing any household furniture belonging to applicant from his house, 31, Albert-road, Woodstock.

It appeared that applicant and respondents, and a third son named David, had carried on business in partnership, and that disagreements had arisen between them. The first proposal was that the business should be wound up, and that a receiver should be appointed, but it was ultimately agreed that respondents should take over the business, subject to certain payments. The respondents had lodged with their parents at a house in Albert-road, Woodstock, of which applicant was the proprietor. The disagreements in business had extended to the household. Applicant said that, owing to repeated quarrels and disagreements with his sons, he had had to leave the premises. Respondents had undertaken to leave the premises on or about the 15th inst. On going to the house, he found that respondents were intending to remove his furniture. Respondents said that there had been repeated quarrels in consequence of applicant's ill-treatment and neglect of his wife (mother of respondents). They added that they owned the greater and more valuable part of the furniture, and that they had no intention of removing any furniture belonging to applicant. They admitted that they had agreed to vacate the premises, but said that that agreement had subsequently been cancelled.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for applicant, James Roger Black; Mr. Benjamin was for respondents, James Black and Alexander Black.

Maasdorp, J.: When an application for an interdict is made, the burden is thrown upon the applicant to make out a clear case of right. Now it would appear upon the affidavits, in the first place, that he claimed all the furniture in the house, and it would then appear that there was no dispute as to the property being in him. In paragraph 4 of his petition, he says that the house of furniture had been acquired by him at his own expense, and petitioner has repeatedly warned respondents not to remove any of the said furniture. It is quite clear that he claimed all the furniture, and upon that the Court granted this rule. Now it appears clear that there is a good deal of furniture in the house that does not belong to the applicant, but to the respondents. Under the circumstances, there is no clear evidence before the Court as to what portion of the furniture belongs to the applicant in this matter. It is said that what is claimed by the respondents as their property is also claimed by the applicant. Therefore, there is a question of ownership in dispute; on the one hand, we have the statement of the applicant alone, and on the other hand there are affidavits by his wife and his two sons, who say that the greater part of the furniture in that house does not belong to the applicant. The question arises whether there is clear proof that the applicant intended at any time to remove the furniture from the house. It seems that there was an agreement by which they were bound to leave the place, but there is no clear proof that they intended to remove any of the furniture of the applicant. It appears clear that, by a subsequent arrangement, the first was cancelled, and there is no provision in the second agreement that the respondent should leave the premises. They contend that, by that agreement, they are entitled to remain in possession, and they intend to remain in possession. That agreement was made on the 10th, and then on the 11th the applicant moves for the interdict. I now come to the conclusion that it has not been proved by the applicant that there is any intention to remove that furniture, and if he intends to retain that furniture, he must bring clear proof to the Court as to what his property is. The order will be discharged, with costs.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL s 1906.
V. PINN. (Apr. 23rd.

Lease—Arbitration—Concealment of material fact—Rule of Court—Stay of execution.

The applicants had expropriated certain property, in which was a shop, of which the respondent was the lesser, under a lease still current. The respondent's claim to compensation for disturbance was submitted to an arbitrator, whose award had, by consent, been made a Rule of Court. The applicant's now asked for a stay of execution of the Rule, on the ground that the respondent had not informed the arbitrator that he had been promised the tenancy of a shop in the immediate vicinity of that which he had to quit: and that such fact was material to the arbitration proceedings.

Held, that the fact was not material, and the application must, therefore, be refused.

This was an application, upon notice to Lazarus Pinn, carrying on business in Cape Town as L. Pinn and Co., to show cause why the issue or execution of a warrant by respondent against applicants should not be stayed, pending an action to be instituted by applicants against respondent to amend an award of arbitrator of the 16th March, 1906, and an order of Court granted thereon on the 24th March, or otherwise, for an order referring the matter back to the arbitrator to take further evidence, and make such other or further award as may to him seem necessary, and why costs should not be costs in the cause.

From the affidavits produced, it appeared that the application arose out of certain arbitration proceedings heard before Mr. Harry Gibson, as arbitrator, in connection with the expropriation of the property of the Dutch Reformed Church in Adderley-street. One of the tenants of that property was the respondent, a jeweller. When he received notice to quit from the Council there were still two months to run of his lease, and he had also the option of renewal for a further term of two years. At the Arbitration Court Pinn presented a claim for £6,000, made up as follows: Loss of profit for 26 months, £2,600; loss of fittings, less amount written off original cost in respect of expired portion of tenancy, £400; loss on stock, £3,000. The hearing occupied five days, and in due course the arbitrator made his award, finding that the claimant was entitled to £1,011. The award was taken up by claimant's attorneys, and, as some question arose in regard to taxation of costs, they moved in the Supreme Court for the award to be made a rule of Court, the Council's attorneys consenting. The ground of the present application, which was based principally on an affidavit by Mr. Lawton (Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne, and Lawton), was that Pinn had wilfully concealed at the arbitration proceedings certain material facts, i.e., that he had been promised a lease of the now premises to be erected by the consistory of the D.R. Church on the surplus land remaining after the street improvement had been carried out.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), was for applicants; Mr. M. Bisset was for respondent.

Mr. Schreiner said that if it had not been that before these facts were discovered a rule of Court had been made upon the award, then the 14th sub-section of section 3, Act 16, 1882, would have founded an application to have the matter referred back to the arbitrator then and there. The position in this case was peculiar, because in all good faith a consent was given by the applicant's attorneys to have the award made a rule of Court. The real point, and the only point, in that application was that there should be taxation of the costs by the taxing officer of the Court. He would suggest to his learned friend that he should consider whether he should have the expense and delay of an action by consenting to a reference back to the arbitrator. The applicants made the averment—and it was an averment of which they were prepared to give proof that there had been a wilful concealment of the most material fact. Counsel referred to Voet (4—1—25).

Mr. Bisset said that, as to his learned friend's suggestion that he should waive his rights so far as the judgment was concerned, if the Court were against him on the law and facts, then he thought it would be much better that the matter should be referred back to the arbitrator rather than that there should be an action. Anyone who was at all acquainted with the arbitration proceedings in this matter would see that it was almost ludicrous to find the Town Council taking up a position that was utterly inconsistent with the attitude they took up at the arbitration. At the arbitration they urged that it was a mercy to Pinn that the Council turned him out of Adderley-street, and that they had thus saved him from being faced by starvation. He denied, firstly, that there had been any concealment, wilful or otherwise, and, secondly, that the fact that they had been alleged to have concealed was material. Pinn was cross-examined by his learned friend, but never once was he asked whether he had taken another shop in Adderley-street. The reason was perfectly obvious—it was inconsistent with the applicant's case at the arbitration. Even assuming that Pinn did get back within twelve months of the twenty six, how was it going to make any substantial difference in the award of the arbitrators.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that it was absurd for anybody to consider that it was not material in connection to the arbitration to know that Pinn was going back to Adderley-street in twelve months. Pinn had not spoken "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" in the evidence he gave before the Arbitration Court. That counsel did not put the question to him in cross-examination which would have brought out this important fact might be a culpa on his part, but it did not save the claimant from the responsibility of concealing a most material and important fact.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the applicants ask for an order of Court to stay issue of execution of a writ by respondent against applicants, and, pending result of an action to be instituted forthwith by applicants against respondent to amend an award of arbitrator, dated 16th March, 1906, and an order of Court granted thereon, dated 24th March, 1906, or otherwise for an order referring the matter back to the arbitrator to take further evidence, and to make such other and further award as may to him seem necessary. It seems that the ground upon which this application is made is stated in the twenty-sixth paragraph of the applicant's petition, in which it is said that the respondent obtained an award for a greater amount than he was entitled to by reason of his wilfully concealing certain material facts that should have been given to the arbitrator, or, by misrepresentation, or misstatement of facts. I shall only go into the facts of this case, in so far as it is necessary to support my reasons for my finding. If it were necessary to go into the matter for the purpose of absolutely deciding whether such a fraud had been perpetrated that applicants in this case might upon the authorities cited bring an action before the Court to have the judgment set aside, then it might be necessary to go more fully into the facts. It seems that certain property belonging to the Dutch Reformed Church had been expropriated. The respondent in this case became entitled to compensation in respect of prospective losses in business through his having to remove from the premises then occupied by him to any other premises he might obtain. It seems that the lease under which he held the premises in question would not lapse for another period of twenty-six months, and the question therefore arose as to what compensation he should be entitled to obtain in respect of the loss of the premises. The matter went to arbitration, and the question the arbitrator had to decide was upon the evidence of the losses the respondent incurred through his having to go into such premises as he was likely to obtain during the 26 months, when he might have made a large profit on the premises previously occupied by him. It appeared that it was said that he was making a profit at the rate of £100 per month at the Dutch Reformed Church premises, and that there would be certain losses if he had to go to other premises. It is now contended that in bringing that issue before the Court the respondent was guilty of making certain misrepresentations. What he actually said is set forth in the sixth paragraph of the petition, where it appears that the respondent stated that "on receiving notice to quit from the Council, he endeavoured to obtain a suitable shop in Adderley-street; the only shop that he could obtain in Adderley-street was one in Jutta's Buildings at a rental of £120 per month; that the premises did not suit him, that they were too deep and the frontage was too narrow for his business, and for this reason, as well as on account of the high rental required, he decided not to take this shop; that he was ultimately compelled to take a smaller shop in Longmarket-street." The applicants say that in saying this, and not saying more, the respondent fraudulently concealed a certain material fact, which was to the effect that he was actually entitled at that time, under an agreement, to a lease of the premises that were then being erected by the D.R. Church in approximately the same locality in which this shop had formerly stood. Now, the question arises whether there was any fraudulent concealment in this of any material fact, and whether, if there were, it is a question which can now be reopened in the manner asked for by the applicants. No direct authority has been given in which the Court has acted in the manner now asked for by the applicants. The authorities referred to have all reference to the question whether an award, before it is made a rule of Court, should not, under certain circumstances, be referred back to the arbitrator, and it has been held that an award so made should be referred back to the arbitrator for certain reasons, amongst others, if the arbitrator had been guilty of an irregularity, or where there had been a mistake of fact, or there had been concealment of facts. Now, it seems to me that if this award had not actually been made a rule of Court, and the facts which are now brought to the notice of the Court had come to the notice of the Court at an earlier stage, it is not improbable that the Court might have referred the matter back to the arbitrators to ascertain whether the matters then brought to their notice were really material, and would have affected the issue; but this case stands in quite a different position now. Now, we have got to deal with an actual judgment of the Court, given upon an award of arbitrators, and the question now arises upon what grounds will the Court set aside such a judgment? Upon the authorities cited, it would appear that by a certain mode of procedure it would be in the power of the defendant to have a judgment of the Court set aside which had been obtained by fraud. Now, the question is whether there is sufficient now before the Court to induce it to interfere at such a stage, because it would always be open to the applicants, whatever the Court may do now, to take an action for restitution for fraud if such fraud can be established. It is alleged that material facts were concealed from the arbitrator. Now, it is quite possible that material facts may not be brought to the notice of an arbitrator, and that, in itself, would not constitute a fraud, and the mere fact that certain matters of some importance might have been known to a party which he had not brought to the notice of the Court does not establish the fact that there is any wilful concealment, because, in the first place, it has to be decided what facts are material, and it is quite possible that a party to a suit may have the opinion that certain matter is not material, and consequently need not be brought to the notice of the arbitrator. There is no evidence that there is an absolutely false statement made by the respondent in this case. The only case made against him is that he omitted, wilfully and fraudulently, to state certain facts of which he had knowledge. Now, it does appear from his own statement that for some time past he had been negotiating with the Consistory of the Dutch Reformed Church for a shop in their new buildings, and that they had agreed to let to him two shops on completion of the said building. "It is still uncertain that deponent will be able to obtain such occupation." Therefore, it is clear that there was some arrangement that when certain buildings were completed, the defendant would obtain a lease of a portion of them for his business, but it does not appear that there is any likelihood of these buildings being completed.

Mr. Schreiner (interposing): Within 12 months, it is stated; he will be only 12 months out of occupation.

Mr. Bisset: I don't know where that is stated.

Mr. Schreiner: In the letters attached.

Maasdorp, J. (continuing): It is said that there is a statement made by the applicant in this case that in 12 months he would be in occupation. There is no proof at all in this case that in 12 months he will be in occupation; there is no positive proof at all that in 12 months the buildings will be in such a state that he will be in occupation. It is still an open question whether within 26 months the defendant may fail to obtain premises situated in Adderley-street in which he can carry on his business, and, besides that, it was quite open to the respondent in this case to be under the belief that, even if he did get back to Adderley-street, he would not immediately recover the same large business as he had before, and, consequently, it is not a necessary and material statement to say that he would go back to Adderley-street, and would obtain rooms upon these premises. Under these circumstances, I do not think the Court ought now to interfere, and it is quite clear that, even if the Court does not now interfere, and if execution is taken out, it will still be open to the applicants to take any action they may think fit. If they are able to establish a case of fraud, and to bring it within the rule of Voot, that in case of fraud restitution will be granted after a judgment has been given, then it is still open to them to take such proceedings, but there is no such information now before the Court as to satisfy the Court that a fraud has been committed by reason of which the Court should now interfere by stay of execution. The application will be refused, with costs.

GINSBERG V. ESTATE ZOER.

This was an application brought by Hyman Ginsberg to have a certain order of Court interdicting applicant from collecting the rents of certain property set aside.

It appeared that in August last provisional sentence was granted against Ginsberg by the Court, on the application of estate H. J. Zoer, upon a certain mortgage bond for £2,650, with interest due, less £24 paid on account, and the property specially mortgaged was declared executable. After judgment had been obtained, plaintiff stayed execution, his explanation being that that was done on condition that defendant (Ginsberg) should authorise the Board of Executors in Cape Town to collect the rents of the property mortgaged. The rents had been collected by the Board of Executors, but defendant in breach of this agreement had subsequently given notice to the tenants withdrawing the authority given to the Board of Executors, and directing the tenants to pay the rents to himself. Upon an affidavit by plaintiff's attorney, the Court granted an order interdicting defendant from collecting the rents, and authorising the applicant estate to collect the rents pending attachment of the property, steps to be promptly taken to satisfy the judgment, leave being reserved to respondent to move the Court on the 17th April, if so advised, to have the said order set aside or modified. This respondent now sought to do.

The affidavit of the respondent (now applicant) denied that he had committed any breach of agreement by withdrawing from the secretary of the Board of Executors authority to collect the rents. He said he had not agreed with his bondholders that the Board of Executors should collect the rent. It was a perfectly voluntary arrangement that he made, for his own convenience, as he was at the time carrying on business at Piquetberg. He said that respondent admitted having taken judgment against him by a "legal oversight."

Certain answering affidavits stated that the applicant agreed to allow the Board of Executors to collect the rents of the property, and apply the proceeds to reduction of the indebtedness of applicant to respondent for interest on a bond. The whole question of the relationships of the parties was gone into at great length in the affidavits.

The replying affidavit of the applicant stated that he had been disgusted with the manner in which his agent (Mr. A. E. Buyskes) had been collecting his rents, and he had handed over the work to the Board of Executors. He declared that he had always paid the interest on the due date, but since he had handed over the collection of rents to agents the proceeds were nearly all swallowed up in expenses, and he had fallen in arrear with the payments of interest.

Mr. Alexander was for applicant: Mr. McGregor was for the respondent estate.

Mr. Alexander contended that the respondent should be ordered to go into the principal case, Maasdorp, J.: It seems to me that the applicant in this case has quite mistaken his rights. He says that a judgment has been taken out against him, and he now moves to have that judgment set aside, but as matters now stand that judgment stands good, and the Court must take it that there is a judgment in favour of the respondent, and against the applicant in this matter. It would seem that the plaintiff in the former action was entitled to judgment; but, by some understanding, judgment was to be postponed, but it was within the legal right of plaintiff to have taken out judgment at any time. Through an inadvertence the understanding that the parties had arrived at seems to have been lost sight of, and judgment was taken, and upon all the grounds it was a legal judgment. There does not seem to have been any legal agreement between the parties which would have prevented the plaintiff from taking judgment. Applicant remonstrated with respondent's attorneys, and the latter expressed their regret, but there was no question that the judgment should be withdrawn. As that judgment stands the plaintiffs are entitled to execution. They are entitled to attach property mortgaged under the bond, and to obtain all the benefits of anything that that property might produce. It appears that applicant is entitled to certain rents of the property. I think, under the circumstances, if execution is now taken out upon the property, which has been declared executable, the plaintiffs would be entitled to the sale of that property, and to any rents which it may produce in the meanwhile. Counsel for the applicant has said that certain rents had been obtained which would satisfy the interest on the bond, but the capital sum remains, and he is entitled to have the rents collected in satisfaction of the capital if necessary. The application will, therefore, be refused, with costs, and the original order will stand.

RABINOWITZ V. MARGOLIN.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi, restraining respondent from disposing of certain stock and fixtures, pending the result of an action to be instituted by applicant. Mr. Inghold was for applicant; Dr. Greer was for respondent.

This matter arose out of a partnership business which the parties had carried on as cafe proprietors in Caledon-street, Cape Town. Applicant alleged, in his petition, that respondent had clandestinely removed the stock and fixtures from the Cafe in Caledon-street. Respondent said that applicant had already removed most of the stock and fixtures and had only left a small portion on the premises which deponent took in security for his claim. Respondent further said that he had been the victim of a malicious prosecution by applicant for theft, of which charge he (respondent) was acquitted. He had given notice to his partner that he would hold the goods pending an action. He proposed to institute an action to recover the amount of £13, which he had contributed to the capital of the business, and also for damages for malicious prosecution. Applicant filed replying affidavits, repeating his allegations.

Dr. Greer having been heard in argument.

Maasdorp, J.: Respondent in this case admits there was a partnership entered into between applicant and himself, and that certain goods were upon the premises, where they had been placed by the partnership, and he admits that he removed the goods from the place where they had been deposited by the partnership, for the purpose of obtaining security in an action which he intended to bring against the applicant. The respondent had no right to interfere with the goods of the partnership, and by helping himself to the property obtained security in an irregular manner. It would have been within the right of the applicant to ask that the Court should order the goods to be restored to the place from which they had been taken, but, instead of doing that, the applicant merely asks that the respondent should now be interdicted from disposing of these goods until the question in dispute between the parties has been settled by an action. The rule will be made absolute, but the question of costs must be allowed to stand over pending an action which the applicant intends to institute. I would suggest, considering the small amount in dispute that the parties should consider whether it is worth while bringing an action. I do not know the amount in dispute, but if it is within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, the parties must consider whether it is not proper for them to bring any action they may be advised to bring in the Magistrate's Court.

GERHARD AND HAY V. FLAUM.

Dr. Greer moved on behalf of defendants in the action for the appointment of a commission to take certain evidence in Hamburg, Germany, and Libau, Russia.

Order granted, the British Consuls in Hamburg and Libau respectively to be commissioners.

Ex parte ESTATE MACINTOSH.

Mr. Upington moved for the appointment of Mr. A. T. Hennessy as provisional trustee in this estate. The matter, counsel stated, had previously been before the Court, when an objection was raised by Mr. Home Drummond that only one creditor supported the application. Counsel now presented affidavits by other creditors. Mr. Hennessy was at present curator bonis of the estate.

Mr. A. T. Hennessy was appointed provisional trustee, with power to collect outstanding debts.

BENNETT V. ALLAN AND SHAW, LTD.

This was an application for reduction of instalments payable on a decree of civil imprisonment, operation of which had been suspended. Bennett said that he wished the instalments payable under the order to be reduced from £5 to £2 per month.

There was no opposition.

The order was amended by the insertion of £2 instead of £5, £2 to be paid as due on the 15th inst.

Ex parte LE ROES.

Dr. Greer moved for an order authorising the amendment of petitioner's name from "Roex" to "Roes" in certain transfer deeds and mortgage bond in Debt Registry.

Order granted as prayed.

EAST LONDON MUNICIPALITY { 1906.
V. LUMSDEN AND OTHERS. { Apr. 24th.

Municipality—Street—Sanitation.

This was an action brought by the East London Municipality against a number of property-owners for a declaration of rights in respect of a strip of land in the vicinity of Oxford-street, which the plaintiffs desire to sell by public auction.

The action was brought by the Mayor, Councilors, and townsmen of East London, against John Lumsden, Arthur John Fuller, David McMillan, Harry

M. Stone, Henrietta E. Becker, Angus W. Newman, J. C. Waberski, Franz Waberski, and James McJannett, for (1) a declaration that plaintiffs are entitled to sell a certain strip of land in vicinity of Albany-street and Stephenson-street without any conditions attached, proceeds of such sale to be applied to certain public improvements; and (2) an interdict obtained on the petition of Lumsden on 23rd February, 1904, restraining plaintiffs from so disposing of the land to be discharged. Defendants were sued as owners of immovable property in block, J. Ward, No. 3, Stone, and Becker, in their capacity of executors of estate Henry E. Becker. All the defendants, except the Hon. Mr. Fuller, had entered appearance. The estate Becker and McJannett submitted to judgment, but the other defendants had filed a plea and claim in reconvention.

Plaintiffs, in their declaration, said that the land was municipal pasture land, and that they had been granted title by the Governor on condition that they sold the land and applied the proceeds to public improvements. Defendants' plea was to the effect that the strip in question connected two public streets in East London; that the land had been left vacant as a street or roadway between two blocks of property; that the drainage and sanitary removal of adjacent buildings was by means of this strip; and that, if taken away, it would be a serious detriment to defendants, whose building plans had been passed by the municipality on the strength of this being a road or thoroughfare, and that it would involve them in considerable expense. In reconvention defendants claimed damages as follows by reason of being deprived of the use of the land: Lumsden, £3,500; Waberski, £1,500; McMillan, £1,500; Newman, £500.

Plaintiffs, in their replication, denied that the strip had been dedicated as a public thoroughfare, or that they had granted a servitude over it to defendants.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), was for plaintiffs; defendants did not appear.

Mr. Searle said that the question of making the interdict perpetual against the Council was left over, with a view to the parties arriving at a compromise. The real question in the case now was whether the land was a public street or roadway, or whether defendants had any right of way or other right over it.

Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that all the defendants had frontages to Oxford-street, so that they could get an exit from their premises without going on to this land.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What can the municipality do with a piece of land like this? Who would buy such land?]

Mr. Searle: Oh, they say it is most valuable. They say it may reach up to £3,000 for stores. They seem confident that they will realise a large amount by it; in fact, defendants have offered to pay a considerable sum for it. It is only a question of how much they should pay.

De Villiers, C.J.: Of course, it is to their interest to buy it; but, independently of the adjoining owners, who would buy that land?]

They say people would buy it for stores, and that it is such an important part of the town that they would have no difficulty in selling it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What would be the entrance to it?]

It has got a street at each end—Albany-street and Stephenson-street.

De Villiers, C.J., said that when the matter was last before the Court, one question was, why was this strip of land left vacant if it were not intended to be a road?

Mr. Searle: I think that can be clearly shown; we have got the transfers of all the surrounding lots, and in every case it is regarded as vacant land. Counsel added that the land was called municipal pasture land.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Pasture land.]

Mr. Searle hastened to explain that he did not think there was much pasturing going on there now.

Evidence was called by the plaintiffs.

Wilhelm Modelfindt, Deputy-Mayor of East London, said that he was Mayor of East London when this dispute arose, and the matter was placed before the Government. He had lived in the neighbourhood of the property, and was well acquainted with it. There had never, to his knowledge, been any public street on the strip of ground in question. The strip had been a nuisance to the town, and had been used by Kafirs. He considered that the ground in dispute would sell for about £2,500; it was suitable for stores. Pieces of ground in worse localities had lately made very high prices. He thought that other provision could be made for the sanitation of the adjoining properties. He did not see that there would be any difficulty as to sanitation of defendants' properties if the land were sold, because the properties could have their sanitation in Oxford-street. He did not think there would be much expense upon the adjoining owners by reason of taking over the land. The Council had tried their best to make a compromise with defendants, but had been unable to come to a settlement. Some of the defendants offered to pay interest on £1,000, but they could not agree among themselves. The Council had a drainage scheme in contemplation, and he did not anticipate that under their draining scheme there would be any difficulty in draining defendants' property. Defendants did not make much use of the ground until the dispute arose.

Robert Edward Dowding, Town Clerk of East London, said that the discussions with the Government in regard to this matter had extended over two years. As far as witness knew, the land in question had never been dealt with by the Municipality as a street. He thought arrangements could be made for the sanitation and drainage of the different lots adjoining.

Walter P. Murray, Deeds Registry Surveyor, Cape Town, said that in all the sub-division diagrams of adjoining blocks, the strip was described as vacant land, with two exceptions, where the land was described as a street. Witness would not pass the diagrams without inquiry to-day; he might have done so in 1897.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why wouldn't you to-day?]

Witness: I can only say I was younger then. In further evidence, witness said they were not as careful formerly as they were now.

Walter Bond, Town Engineer, East London, said that, as far as he was aware the land had never been considered by the Council to be a street or a lane. He thought the drainage and sanitation from houses in block "J" could easily be turned into Oxford-street. The cost of altering the sanitary system would be about £50 or £60 for the whole of the properties.

Thomas Beetham, Sanitary Inspector, East London, said the strip in question was practically a cul de sac. The removals from the houses could be carried into Oxford-street. The drainage could easily be turned into Oxford-street.

This was all the evidence.

Mr. Searle, having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The land which the plaintiff Council wish to sell was granted by the Crown to the plaintiff Council on the 13th February, 1903, and the condition of the grant was that "the land hereby granted shall be sold by public auction, and the proceeds of the sale shall be given to the construction of roads." It appears that defendants owned certain lots of ground, which, on the one side, bordered on Oxford-street, and the back premises bordered on the land now in question. It appears further that all the sanitary arrangements of these owners have been made with a view to the removal by way of this vacant land, which was at the back of the premises. I am unable to agree with the view urged upon the Court by counsel for plaintiffs that, merely because there was a grant to the Town Council and a condition that the Town Council should sell, the Town Council would be bound to sell, even if, thereby, the legal rights of the defendants were prejudiced. The plea is that they would be prejudiced, and the defence comes to this, practically, that this so-called vacant land is really a street, that the defendants' premises were built upon the faith of this vacant land, being a street, and that there would be an infringement of the rights of the defendants if this land which they took to be a street should now be sold to others. But it lay upon defendants to prove that it is a street. They have not appeared to support their plea that it is a street, and all the evidence before the Court is to the effect that it never was a street, that it was a piece of vacant land, and that it was never held out by the plaintiff Council to the defendants as being a street. It is to be regretted that defendants have not appeared to put before the Court their evidence. At present I can only be guided by the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiffs, and, upon that evidence, there is only one course open to the Court, that is to make the declaration as prayed. The Court will, therefore, declare that the plaintiff Council are entitled to sell the said land by public auction, without any condition attached thereto, proceeds to be applied to the public improvement sanctioned as aforesaid. I would add to that, further, that the sale is not to take place within three months of this date. The Court will further order that the interim interdict obtained on February 23, 1904, be discharged, and that the defendants pay the plaintiffs' costs. Then, as to the claim in reconvention, which contains a prayer for damages, there is no evidence whatever as to such damages, and therefore there must be absolution from the instance upon that claim.

Mr. Searle said that there were certain of the defendants against whom the Council did not ask costs, viz., Estate Becker and McJannett, who had simply submitted to the judgment of Court. He did not ask for costs against the Hon. Mr. Fuller, whose interest was purely nominal.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the mere fact that certain of the defendants did not plead made no difference, because the Council had to prove their case just the same.

Mr. Searle said that, as to costs of interdict, the prime mover in that matter was Lumsden, against whom he had to ask for costs of these proceedings.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the Court would make an order in terms of the declaration, but direct that the sale of the land shall not take place within three months of this date, and there would be absolution from the instance on the claim in reconvention, defendants to pay costs of the action, and defendant Lumsden to pay costs incurred in connection with application for interdict.

Mr. Molteno moved as a matter of urgency for an order provisionally winding up the Croydon Brick Co. The company (counsel said) was unable to pay its debts, and it was in the interests of all concerned that it should be wound up. There was an affidavit by the manager that the company was unable to keep the fires alive, and if they were allowed to go out, irreparable loss would accrue.

A rule nisi was granted, calling upon all concerned to show cause why the company should not be wound up, returnable on Thursday week. One publication in the "Gazette," "Cape Times," and "Ons Land."

Ex parte ESTATE LATE PRINCE.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved to make absolute a rule nisi calling upon all concerned to show cause why a certain transfer deed should not be amended, and restraining Attorney T. P. Peters from parting with the deed, pending the result of the application. The deed referred to a piece of land at Claremont, and an amendment was applied for, so as to vest the title in the trustees of the Claremont Station of the A.M.E. Church, against whom costs were asked.

Rule made absolute, with costs.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

DONNELLY V. DONNELLY. { 1906.
Apr. 25th.

This was an action brought by Mrs. Donnelly against her husband, James Donnelly, described as a sanitary engineer, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with custody of the child of the marriage and maintenance. Plaintiff appeared in person; defendant was in default, and had been duly barred from pleading.

Plaintiff (in answer to the Court) said that she was not able to employ counsel to conduct her case. Attorney Sydney had been acting for her, but on Monday he asked her for £10, and she was unable to pay it. Witness was a minor at the time of marriage, and she was married in community of property in 1900 by a judge's order. They only lived together for five months. When she was married, defendant was a soldier at the front, and he was away for a period of seven months. When he came back, they lived together at her mother's. Then defendant was sent away to Port Elizabeth, and on his return, after a few months' absence, they lived together at Observatory-road for a time, during which her husband beat her. He was formerly in the employ of the Harbour Board as a plumber. It was now about three years since he deserted her; she believed that he had gone to Australia. He was aware that she was going to get a divorce, and had told her that he would pay the expenses. The only property that they had was a number of silver prizes that her husband had won, and which he had told her were worth £50.

Order of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before 30th June, failing which, to show cause on 12th July why a divorce should not be granted, with custody to plaintiff of the child of the marriage, defendant to contribute £3 a month towards maintenance, until such child shall reach the age of 16 years, and to pay costs of suit, personal service to be effected, failing which, one publication in a Cape Town newspaper, and one publication in the "Melbourne Argus."

MATTHEWS V. OOSTHUIZEN AND ANOTHER.

This was an action brought by Caroline Matthews, formerly wife of Pieter Marincowitz Oosthuizen (now deceased), of the Oudtshoorn district, against Frederick Simon Oosthuizen and the Estate Oosthuizen, for a declaration of rights in respect of a certain ante-nuptial contract.

From the pleadings it appeared that the plaintiff was one Caroline Matthews, who was also executrix dative in the estate of her late husband Pieter Marincowitz Oosthuizen, and the first-named defendant was the executor dative in the same estate. On the 15th March, 1902, the plaintiff married the late Pieter Oosthuizen, and an ante-nuptial contract was executed at the time, and it was upon the ante-nuptial contract that she was now suing. The ante-nuptial contract declared that plaintiff's husband bequeathed or gave to her the sum of £2,000, upon the condition that the trustee, viz., Frederick S. Oosthuizen, as executor dative of the estate, should be obliged to invest the same at interest on good and approved security, and that during the lifetime of the husband he should be entitled to the interest on the £2,000, and at his death the plaintiff should be entitled to the interest on the £2,000 for her life. Should any differences arise between them during marriage, and a separation take place, then the gift must be void. Then, upon the death of the plaintiff, the sum of £2,000 should become the property of any children of the marriage, and should there be no children of the marriage, it should be given to the brothers and sisters of the husband.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Pyemont), was for plaintiff; Mr. Joubert was for the first defendant; in his capacity of executor dative of P. M. Oosthuizen; Mr. Benjamin appeared as curator ad litem of the minor.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is the same point raised now as was raised in the previous case? See 15, C.T.R., 46.]

Sir H. Juta: In the previous case there was no dispute about the ante-nuptial contract, but what Mrs. Matthews wished to claim in that action was that she was, under the will of her husband, entitled absolutely to this £2,000. As a matter of fact, the claim in the first action was withdrawn, and no judgment was delivered upon it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why was it withdrawn?]

Sir H. Juta: Because it became apparent, in the conduct of the case, that the contention was one that could not very well be supported. She claimed that she was entitled absolutely to the £2,000, quite apart from the ante-nuptial contract, as if the will had annulled the ante-nuptial contract. Counsel went on to say that the defendants now submitted to judgment, but they seemed to maintain that the estate of Pieter Marincowitz Oosthuizen should not pay the costs, because there seemed to be some sort of idea that this ought to have been claimed in the first action, and they drew attention to the fact that there was this original claim in the first action. Counsel read the pleas of the defendants from which it appeared that the first defendant submitted to the judgment of the Court, but prayed that, if any order be made upon the declaration, some person other than himself be appointed trustee under the ante-nuptial contract, and also that the estate of the late P. M. Oosthuizen be not ordered to pay costs. The plea of the curator ad litem was in similar terms, except that the prayer was simply that the estate should not be ordered to pay costs. [De Villiers, C.J.: Is the claim now the same as in the previous action?]

Sir H. Juta: Absolutely different; we have nothing now to do with the will, and we do not claim that we are entitled to this money absolutely.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But does not the question of election come in?]

Sir H. Juta said that there was no question of election on this claim. Counsel added that what £2,000 the late Pieter Oosthuizen was dealing with it was impossible to say. Pieter said it was on Zwartkraal, but they had not been able to find a property of that name. One of the allegations against the late Pieter was that he was of very intemperate habits. His lordship would see in the first part of the will a clause that was almost incomprehensible. Counsel submitted that, upon the pleadings and upon the original record, there was no reason why the plaintiff should not be entitled to the interest on the sum of £2,000 in terms of the ante-nuptial contract. It now appeared that the executor, Mr. Oosthuizen, said that he had never accepted the trust, and that was now admitted, and the matter of appointing a fresh trustee must form the subject of an application to the Court. The plaintiff would suggest that Mr. G. W. Steytler, of the Colonial Orphan Chamber, should be appointed trustee.

Mr. Joubert submitted that the plaintiff should have seen that the result of the compromise arrived at in the first action formed part of the order, and that this matter of the interest should have been included. If that had not been done, then the plaintiff should have come to court by motion. He submitted that unnecessary expense had been incurred by the present proceedings.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In any event, some expense would have had to be incurred.]

Mr. Joubert submitted that the whole matter might have been settled on motion with one counsel, instead of, as they had that day, four counsel.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I have seen one counsel appear in a trial, and three in a petition.]

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the very question now before the Court might have been raised on the first action, and that the costs of the present proceedings should not, therefore, come out of the estate. It seemed to him that the only way in which the will should be read was as a confirmation of the ante-nuptial contract.

[De Villiers, C.J.: To whom does the £2,000 go after the plaintiff's death?]

Mr. Benjamin: To the minor. Three-quarters of the estate go to the minor and also this sum of £2,000.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Who paid the costs of the previous action?]

Mr. Benjamin: Three-quarters were paid by the estate, and one-quarter by P. M. Oosthuizen's father.

Sir H. Juta said that he did not see what the defendants had come into court for, unless it were intended to throw some doubt on the ante-nuptial contract. Why did not defendants admit the plaintiff's claim at the time she made it?

[De Villiers, C.J.: In strictness the costs would have to come out of the £2,000. Has the estate any funds?]

Sir H. Juta: Oh, yes; it is a wealthy estate now. The action was successful, and the surviving child is very well off.

Mr. Benjamin: Mrs. Matthews gets one-fourth and interest on the £2,000 and £100 a year for life.

De Villiers, C.J., suggested that the question of trusteeship should be settled at once to save further expense.

Counsel acquiesced in the proposed appointment of Mr. G. W. Steytler.

De Villiers, C.J., It is quite clear that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment in terms of the prayer of the declaration. There seems to have been some misunderstanding at the recent trial as to what the effect of the withdrawal of prayer (a) really was, but I think it was made clear by Sir Henry Juta at the time that there was a withdrawal only of the claim so far as it was a claim under the will, and that there was no intention to withdraw any claim which the plaintiff might have under the ante-nuptial contract. It appears to me, therefore, that the defendants would have been quite justified in consenting to the order without any further proceedings, simply consenting to the order, subject to the approval of the Court. That would certainly have saved expense. But I do not blame the defendants for defending the action, but if they did defend it I think it is only fair that the estate of Pieter Marinowitz should pay costs. The original action was brought on behalf of those interested in that estate, and it is really only a continuation of that action. The Court will, therefore, order, in terms of the prayer of the declaration, costs of all parties to be paid out of the estate of Pieter Marinowitz Oosthuizen. Then the Court will relieve Frederick Simon Oosthuizen from his trust as trustee under the ante-nuptial contract of Pieter Marinowitz Oosthuizen and plaintiff, and appoint Mr. G. W. Steytler as trustee in his place.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ARMSTRONG V. FEITELBERG { 1906.
AND SONS. { Apr. 25th.
" 30th.

This was an action for the return of the purchase price of a certain oil engine sold by the defendants, brokers and contractors, of Cape Town, to the plaintiff, an engineer, of Robertson. The plaintiff said that the engine was not up to the condition warranted. The plaintiff tendered to give back the engine and claimed £50 damages, with costs.

The plea alleged that the engine was in good order and condition, and that if it failed to work properly such failure was due to its having been unskillfully handled by the plaintiff or his servants.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Alexander was for the defendants.

Peter Armstrong, an engineer and cooper-smith, of Robertson, said that he was well versed in the construction of oil engines. Some time ago he bought a Cornwall, and entered into an arrangement with a Mr. Heyneman for the working of it. He also hired a room in connection with the working of the mill, paying £1 a month for it. In August last he saw in a newspaper an advertisement that set forth that Feitelberg and Sons, of Lelie-street, Cape Town, had certain second-hand oil engines for sale. He entered into negotiations with Feitelberg and Sons, and eventually the firm wrote to him saying that they had a 4-h.p. Tangye converted oil engine that was remarkably simple to use; in fact, a child could work it. It was in splendid order and condition, would run at high or low speeds, and if purchased at the price of £55 it would be started and viewed by a competent engineer before it left the premises of the firm. Further letters followed, and Armstrong said that he was not sanguine about the usefulness of converted oil engines. Consequently all he would offer was £40. This the defendants said they could not consider, but, being anxious to do business, they would let the engine go for £50 down. Telegrams passed, and the engine was bought, the defendants saying that they would like to draw on plaintiff on sight, as the engineer's certificate would be sufficient guarantee that the engine was in good order. The certificate, dated August 15, stated that the Tangye converted oil engine No. 3,001 was in good order and condition, and next day the contract was concluded. Snapshots of the engine were sent to the plaintiff. After some delay in obtaining a tank for the engine, plaintiff, about August 25, started the engine, and found that it would hardly go by itself, much less take a load. A letter was sent to the defendants embodying the defects of the engine. In the presence of Mr. Stewart witness found out that the engine would only go itself; as soon as the band was put on it stopped. The engine was not damaged in transit; it was very carefully looked after.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: He could not expect to get a new engine at the price, although he thought that some of the internal parts should have been new. Piston rings were very brittle, but Mr. Stewart had never cautioned him against the manner in which he withdrew the piston from the cylinder. Stewart was not present when the piston was withdrawn, but a Mr. Cortes had taken the rings out. Mr. Cortes had never pointed out to him that owing to the manner in which the engine had been erected too much oil exploded at one time, with the result that soldering ensued. He wanted an engine to exert 4-horse power, and he had had an engine that had worked his mill. That engine, however, had been a steam one, and steam engines, he thought, exerted far more power than nominally indicated. A steam engine could be worked to double its capacity as indicated. He had no accounts of money disbursed in connection with the engine, but he had incurred loss of money in failing to carry out a pipe laying contract some distance from Robertson, owing to the defects of the engine. He estimated that he lost £10 profit, besides a number of days' work, which he valued at £1 to £1 5s. per diem. One portion of his works had been wrecked by a hurricane about that time, but that had not caused him to lose work. The defendants were the only cause of him losing work. About £6 to £7 of his claim for damages was incurred in obtaining legal advice, £4 4s. of which had been paid to Mr. Stewart. He could not produce receipts from oil-merchants, and had not brought his books to court. The second erection took place long after the issue of the summons, and the cost could not be included in the claim for damages in that summons. He used no oil in the erection of the second engine.

Re-examined: If he had done the work that he did on the engine for an outsider he would have charged £25 to £30. He had met Mr. Cortes in every way, and Cortes had had to confess that he could not make the engine work.

An engineer named Stewart said that the engine was defective. Cortes had made the engine work, but very irregularly. Witness did not see Armstrong handle the engine improperly.

Gert Petrus Nel, attorney for the plaintiff at Robertson, said that at the request of the defendants he had wired to Cape Town and ascertained costs which, with local ones, amounted to about £15. Feitelberg, without prejudice, admitted that the engine was no good, and that he and Armstrong had arrived at a compromise. Feitelberg also said that the £15 would not kill him, and that he would send Armstrong another engine better than the one in question, and that Armstrong would have to meet him in the matter of damages, which would remain open until the other engine had arrived.

This concluded the evidence for the plaintiff.

Carl Voight stated he had some experience of mills, and in his opinion the one in question could not be driven by a 4-horse power oil engine.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: It would require a 6-horse power oil engine to run the mill.

Edward Thomas Brun, in the employ of the Goods Department of the C.G.R., gave evidence as to the delivery of the goods in a good condition.

Edward Feitelberg, in the course of his evidence, said that he was surprised when he heard complaints about the engine. He believed that the plaintiff did not understand the engine.

Postea (April 30th).

Thomas Ferguson, engineer, stated he saw the engine at the defendant's place before it was despatched to Robertson. It was a gas engine converted into an oil engine. He saw the engine work; there were no piston rings broken. The engine was fit for any ordinary work.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: He would not say it was in splendid working order; it was in good working order. The engine was not tried with a load.

Francis Leon Cortes, mechanical engineer, stated he had been in the trade about twenty years. Witness converted the engine for the defendant, and gave a certificate to the effect that it was in very good working order and condition. It was impossible to drive the mill with a 4-h.p. engine; it required a 6-h.p. engine.

This concluded the evidence.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J.: It appears that the plaintiff, who lives at Robertson, ascertained about the beginning of August last that the defendant, who carries on business in Cape Town, had an oil engine of 4-h.p. for sale. After some correspondence between the parties, an agreement of sale was entered into of this engine by the defendant to the plaintiff, upon the express condition that the engine should be in good order and condition. The real issue between the parties in this case now is whether the engine was in good order and condition. It was forwarded to Robertson, and was erected by the plaintiff about the 25th August, and after the erection had been completed the plaintiff requested a Mr. Stewart, who lives at Robertson, and who is a locomotive superintendent of the New Cape Central Railways, to inspect the engine at the plaintiff's shop. Mr. Stewart is entirely a disinterested witness in this case, and from the way in which he has given his evidence, I say he is quite capable to express an opinion on the state of this engine. He discovered, on examination, that two of the piston rings were broken, and he said, upon his ascertaining that there was something wrong with the engine, that he suggested to the plaintiff that the piston rod should be extracted, and then he discovered that these rings were broken. He said some pieces were entirely gone, and he therefore comes to the conclusion that the rings must have been in a broken condition when they were put into the cylinder, and that the breakage could not have been caused by the extraction of the piston by the plaintiff. He also ascertained that the cylinder was suffering from the effects of wear and tear, and that the machine was not in a state to work. If Mr. Stewart is correct in the view he then took, it is quite clear that the engine was not in good order and condition, and I may say it will appear afterwards that the faults he detected were such as Mr. Cortes admitted did exist when he made the examination. Afterwards, upon discovering the condition of the engine, plaintiff communicated with the defendant, who despatched his engineer, Cortes, to make an investigation. After examining the engine, Mr. Cortes said, in the presence of Mr. Stewart and Mr. Nel that the engine was of no use in the condition it then was. He also said the cylinder would have to be bored out. Thereupon, Mr. Cortes leaves Robertson, and returned to Cape Town, and all the information the defendant received as to the condition of the engine he received from Mr. Cortes, because it was not communicated to him by letter by the plaintiff or his attorney, and we find that the information must have been necessarily that the cylinder required re-boring and a new piston adjusted, because, upon the information, the defendant telegraphed to the plaintiff, "Send piston pin and cylinder push." These were to be forwarded to Cape Town, upon the advice of Mr. Cortes, to be rectified before the engine could be fit for use. It was quite clear that Mr. Cortes was of opinion that at that time the engine could not do its work, that certain repairs were wanted. If this is so, the engine was not in good order and condition, and after further consideration the plaintiff might have repudiated the sale. Upon the offer by the defendant to do the necessary repairs, he was told by the plaintiff he might do it at his own risk. Thereafter, the defendant went to Robertson, together with his engineer, and it appeared they then had a cylinder, which was repaired, and a new piston rod. The plaintiff was not obliged to take what would practically be a new engine at that time, but he was prepared to take it if it was found that the machine would work. After great efforts on the part of the defendant and his engineer, they failed to make the engine work, and Mr. Nel says that the defendant said to him that he could not get the engine to work properly, and he arranged a compromise with the plaintiff. Here we have an admission not only on the part of the defendant's engineer, but the defendant himself, that the engine could not be got to work, and the conclusion therefore is that it was not in good order and condition. It is not necessary for the Court to ascertain whether the engine in good order and condition would have developed 4-horse power, because they never arrived at the stage at which it could be properly tested. The Court therefore comes to the conclusion that the express condition of the contract that the engine was to be in good order and condition was not fulfilled by the defendant, and that the plaintiff is entitled to damages. The plaintiff claims £50 damages, but it seems to me that a large portion of it consists of a good deal of time that he says was wasted in waiting for the arrival of the new machine, and repeated attempts made by him to make the first engine work. It was in the power of the plaintiff from the very first to have repudiated the contract when he found that the engine was not up to the warranty, and the plaintiff is not entitled to lie by and accumulate his damages for a long period until the arrival of the new engine. He was willing to do so for his own benefit and advantage, and the Court cannot allow all the loss and personal labour which he suffered in the meanwhile. It appears quite clear that he went to some expense in erecting the engine, in removing it from the station to his shop, in employing labour, and certain material was consumed in attempts to get the engine to work. On the whole, I think it brings up the legitimate damages to about the sum of £30, and judgment will therefore be entered for the plaintiff for £30 with costs, and the Court will declare the plaintiff to be a necessary and material witness.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1906.
Apr. 26th.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for the admission of John Pritchard as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Philippus Albertus Marais as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Bailey moved for the admission of Charl David Burger as an attorney and for leave to take the oath before the R.M. of Bethulie, O.R.C.

Maasdorp, J.: The rule is that applicants for admission residing in a foreign country must appear before the Court or give very good reasons.

Mr. Bailey said that he would ask, then, that the applicant might take the oaths before the R.M. of Burgersdorp.

Maasdorp, J., said he could not consent to that proposal.

Mr. Bailey (in answer to the Court) said that the applicant had served his articles in this colony, partly in Cape Town and partly at Queen's Town and Sterkstroom. He was now living in the Orange River Colony.

Maasdorp, J., said that that put a different aspect on the matter. The application would be granted, with leave to take the oaths as prayed.

Mr. Molteno moved for the admission of Hendrik van der Graaff le Roux as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

HARRIS V. EXECUTORS, ESTATE OF THE LATE HARRIS.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for plaintiff) asked for the indulgence of the Court in order to make a statement in regard to this case. He said that a settlement had been effected. An action was brought by Mrs. Harris, widow of the late Mr. John Harris, of Cape Town, against the executors testamentary in the estate for a declaration of her rights under the will of Mr. Harris, and, after the pleadings had been closed and certain evidence taken, the parties had come to a settlement.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for the executors) said that he consented, subject to the Court's approval. The late Mr. Harris carried on business in this colony, and then went to England and got married. Mr. Harris returned to this colony and carried on business here with Mr. Cleg-horn under the style of Cleghorn and Harris. Eventually he made a will in England. He subsequently died. According to that will he stated that he had a domicile in the Cape, and he wished his will to be construed according to Cape law, but he made no reference to the fact that he had been married to his wife without any settlement, and Mrs. Harris, therefore, brought an action to have it declared that she was entitled to half of the estate, having been married in community of property, and she also claimed certain legacies which had been bequeathed to her by her husband under his will. The pleadings were filed, and the parties wished to come to a compromise, and the approval of the Court was required because there were certain minors interested. The matter had been referred to the Master, who was of opinion that it would be in the interests of the minors that this compromise should be effected. The compromise was in effect this: Mrs. Harris was to give up her right to the half of the estate, and she should have an income from the estate. He (counsel) would submit that, altogether, this was really a good settlement.

Mr. Searle read the consent entered into between the parties, which was as follows: "We, the attorneys respectively for the plaintiff and defendants, do hereby agree to judgment being entered in the following terms: (a) Plaintiff shall withdraw her claim to one-half of the whole estate, left at the death of the late John Harris; (b) the defendants shall transfer the residence of the deceased, known as Beech Hurst, and its grounds, situate in the Gardens, Cape Town, to the plaintiff free from any cost or expense; (c) the plaintiff shall receive during her lifetime from the estate of the late John Harris an annuity equal to one-half of the net income of the said estate, provided that the income to be paid her shall never be less than £2,500, nor more than £3,500 per annum; (d) she shall be entitled to the special bequest of movables plate, linen, and other requisites mentioned in the will of the said John Harris, and to the legacy of £1,000; (e) this consent shall be subject to the approval of the Hon. the Supreme Court, in so far as the interests of the minor heirs may be thereby affected, and subject to the written approval of the major heirs; (f) the costs of the action shall be paid by the defendants."

Mr. Searle added that the major heirs had consented. It seemed to be in the interests of all parties that this arrangement should be come to.

Maasdorp, J., made an order in terms of consent paper.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

LENNIKS V. CORONEL. { 1906.
Apr. 26th

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £60, less £9 3s. paid on account; bond due by reason of the non-payment of instalments of capital. Counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted as prayed.

ESTATE TURNBULL V. COWLEY.

Mr. Lewis applied for this matter to be postponed till next Thursday.

Defendant's husband appeared, and asked that the case should be heard now. He said that he had to dispute the amount and to complain of short service of summons.

Maasdorp, J., said that full time had been allowed by the rules of Court as regarded service.

Mr. Cowley said that all the amounts were quite wrong.

[Maasdorp, J.: These allegations must be on affidavit. We can't take a mere statement.]

Ordered to stand over till Thursday next, to enable defendant to file an affidavit.

OLIVIER V. ESTATE JACOBS.

OLIVIER V. RACHEL LAKAY, DAMON AND JOSEPH JACOBS.

Mr. Howes moved, in the first case, for provisional sentence on four mortgage bonds for £25, £30, £58, and £68 respectively, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Mr. Howes also moved in the second case for provisional sentence for interest on a notarial bond for £125, the arrear interest claimed being £14 8s. 4d. Counsel said that the original claim was for provisional sentence on a bond by reason of the non-payment of interest, but it now appeared that there was no provision to this effect in the bond.

Mr. Alexander submitted that the plaintiff had come to the Court with quite a new case, and that he should be ordered to pay costs of the day. Counsel proceeded to read an affidavit by Rachel Jacobs (the executrix in her husband's estate) and the children, who said that it was intended to take steps as soon as possible to discharge the indebtedness. The deponents also asked for an account as to the payments made.

Mr. Howes said that his client had already handed over a statement of account to the other side. Counsel read an affidavit by Mr. T. Smith, of Oudtshoorn district, in whose favour the bonds were originally granted. Mr. Howes added that the defendants had not tendered interest, the interest was due, and he submitted that plaintiff was entitled to interest.

Mr. Alexander, in reference to the first case, read an affidavit by Rachel Jacobs, and said that tender was made before issue of summons by their attorney of the capital amount of the bonds with interest, but plaintiff's attorney demanded costs, and to this proposal defendants would not consent.

Mr. Howes read an answering affidavit by Mr. Gert C. Olivier, who said that the tender was informal and invalid, and that he had been at all times willing to withdraw the case on payment of the amount due and costs.

Mr. Alexander said that it was only an after-thought on the part of plaintiff's attorney that the defendants' tender was invalid and insufficient.

Maasdorp, J.: In the case of Olivier v. Estate Jacobs, plaintiff claims the capital amount of four bonds, together with interest. It appears that on the 28th March, 1906, the defendant's attorney wrote a letter stating that he tendered the amount on behalf of his client. It does not appear that there was any actual tender made in the ordinary form, in which tenders are regarded as effectual, but on the 30th, plaintiff's attorney replied stating that he declines to accept the defendant's tender, unless costs of summons to date are tendered in addition to capital and interest. It appears clear from that that the tender was regarded as insufficient as to the amount. The claim was made that the tender should be increased by adding the costs of summons, and if that were tendered then the tender would be regarded as sufficient. It appears, however, that the costs of summons had not been incurred on that date, and, consequently, the plaintiff was not entitled to such costs. The plaintiff now says that that claim must have been made through inadvertence, because his attorney must have been under the impression that the summons had already been issued, but, as a matter of fact, it had not been issued, and the defendant was not liable for these costs. I take it that, as between the parties, the tender in all other respects was, therefore, sufficient, and the Court will now hold that it was entirely sufficient, because nothing more was due. Judgment will now be entered on the four bonds with interest, plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs. In the case of Olivier v. Rachel Jacobs and three others, a claim was made for the capital amount of a bond, together with interest. That claim was opposed by the defendant on the ground that the capital amount was not due. The ground on which it had been stated that the capital had become due was that the interest had not been paid. It now appears that there was no provision in the bond that upon the interest not being paid the bond should become payable. Consequently, the capital amount of that bond was not yet payable. The interest, however, was payable. The defendant, however, only comes into Court on the ground that the principal was not due. Judgment will be given for the interest, plaintiff to pay costs.

ESTERHUYSEN V. KRIGE.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

HARGREAVES AND ANOTHER V. SAPAMLA AND OTHERS.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £160, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

SPIILHAUS AND CO. V. KRUMMOCK BROS

Mr. Swift moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

NORTHERN ASSOCIATION COMPANY V. GOTTSCHALK.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, with interest, less £31 8s. 9d., paid on account, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and for the rents, which may become payable, to be attached.

Order granted.

MOWBRAY MUNICIPALITY V. WHITE.

Mr. Watermeyer applied for the discharge of a provisional order of sequestration.

Provisional order discharged.

DU PLESSIS V. FAURE AND WIGGIT.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared for the first defendant. Counsel for the plaintiff moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £1,294, and Mr. Searle opposed on behalf of Faure, whose affidavit set out that if he did sign a promissory note in favour of the first defendant, it was done under misapprehension and misrepresentation.

Provisional sentence granted against Wiggit, with costs.

Provisional sentence refused against Faure, with costs, with leave to go into the principal case.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

WILSON V. DAVIES. { 1906.
Apr. 26th.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment under rule 329d for £65 10s., less £15 paid on account, for rent, with interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

GUTHRIE AND THERON V. SWALES.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for judgment under rule 329d for £61 18s., balance of account for services rendered and moneys disbursed.

Order granted.

WHITE, RYAN AND CO. V. FLORIDA.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment under rule 319 for £50 5s. 11d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

TRUSTEE, INSOLVENT ESTATE RAUBENHEIMER V. RAUBENHEIMER AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for judgment under rule 319, in default of defendant's appearance, for an order in terms of the declaration for an ejectment against the first defendant upon payment to the second defendant of the sum mentioned in the will. Counsel said that the matter arose out of the construction of a will. The action had been brought by the trustee in the insolvent estate of the first defendant, one of the sons of the testators. The will provided that the first defendant should occupy a portion of the farm Klein Doorn River, subject to payment of a certain rental to the second defendant, who was the mother of the first defendant. The trustee offered to pay the rental to the mother as provided in the will, thus taking the place of the son. Counsel added that an order was only asked as to one half of the farm.

Maasdorp, J.: I think, under all the circumstances, the parties not appearing, judgment will be given in terms of the prayer of the declaration.

Judgment entered accordingly.

ZEEDERBERG AND DUNCAN V. SCHACH.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for judgment under rule 319 in terms of declaration for £60, with interest, a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

MOSTERT AND SON V. BERMAN.

Mr. Roux moved for judgment under rule 319 for £10 18s. 5d. and for certain property to continue under attachment.

Order granted as prayed.

JONAS V. ISAACS AND OTHERS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment in terms of consent against defendants individually and in the various capacities in which they were sued.

Judgment in terms of consent.

REHABILITATIONS. { 1906.
Apr. 26th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones applied on behalf of Charles William Leach for his discharge from insolvency.

There was an affidavit of full and fair surrender. The applicant had been in partnership with one Rowson, who had since been rehabilitated.

Application granted.

Mr. Bailey applied on behalf of Hendrik Albertus Smit, jun., for his discharge from insolvency. There was nothing unfavourable in the trustee's report.

Application granted.

SALIE AND MOHAMED V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.Immigrants—Domicile.

Mr. Rowson was for the applicants and Mr. Howel Jones was for the Government. Counsel for respondent pointed out that there had not been proper notice, but he was prepared to go on. The application was for an order restraining respondent from deporting applicants. Mr. Jones put in affidavits by the principal immigration officer, Mr. Cousins, which set out that the applicants were unable to comply with the requirements of section 2 A of the Immigration Act 47 of 1902; in that they were unable to make their application in a European language. Neither had vested interests in the country, and both had signed an undertaking to leave the country in two months.

Mr. Rowson: Two questions arise in this case—(1) were the applicants domiciled in the Transvaal; (2) does domicile in the Transvaal count as domicile in South Africa for the purposes of Act 47 of 1902?

That the applicants were domiciled in the Transvaal is evident. A domicile is a place where a man voluntarily fixes his abode and constitutes as the centre of his business operations. It is said that these men carried on the business of fruit hawkers. Very well, that is an honest occupation. It is not pretended that they carried on this business outside the Transvaal, where they had been resident, one for 5 years and the other for 7. Then as to residence: a residence does not necessarily mean a mansion, or any place comprised within four walls. A residence may be a tent, a wagon or a common lodging house. A man may remove from one lodging house to another, just as a millionaire may change his residence from Berkeley-square to Park-lane, but he does not thereby forfeit his domicile. My point is that these men had "the centre of their business operations" in the Transvaal, that they resided there, and that therefore they were domiciled there.

As to my second point, that has already been decided in ex parte Laloo (15, C.T.R., 992). There it was held that domicile in Natal is domicile in South Africa. Well, in the present case we have only to read "Transvaal" for "Natal" and we have the very same case.

Mr. Jones was not called upon.

Maasdorp, J.: The officer in charge of the Immigration Department alleges that the applicants, as prohibited immigrants, were not entitled to remain in the country, not having entered it under such conditions as are sanctioned by Act 47 of 1902. It appears that they are not able to comply with the requirements of the Act, and the absence of such compliance makes them prohibited immigrants, unless they can satisfy the officer that they are persons domiciled in South Africa, in which case the disqualification in the provisions of the Act would not apply to them. Upon the officer discovering that these two persons had entered the country, he found they could not comply with the requirements of the Act. He ascertained from their conversation that they had no permanent residence anywhere. He therefore came to the conclusion that as they were unable to comply with the conditions of the Act, and were not domiciled in South Africa, that they were prohibited immigrants. The question arises, was the immigration officer right upon the facts. The only allegation the Court has now is the bare statement by the applicants, who appear to have their home in India, that the one has been domiciled in the Transvaal for five years, and the other for seven years. They seemed to have carried on the business of small shopkeepers or hawkers in different places in the country. There was nothing in their affidavits to satisfy the Court that they had their domicile in South Africa. It was necessary for them to put certain circumstances before the Court by which the Court could arrive at a conclusion as to the intention of those people. They seemed to have satisfied the officer they had no permanent residence in South Africa. He informed them they could not stay; thereupon they undertook to leave the country within two months. Upon the information the officer had before him he was right in deciding that the applicants in this case were prohibited immigrants. There was no satisfactory proof that they came under the exception of subsection F of section 3 of the Act, and the application would be refused.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

FICK V. JANSEN AND OTHERS. { 1906.
Apr. 26th.

Mr. Roux was for applicant, and Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent.

Mr. Roux moved to make absolute a rule calling on the respondents to show cause why they should not be ordered to give up possession of a plot of ground in the division of Piquetberg, of which the petitioner was the registered holder.

Maasdorp, J., said it was impossible for the Court to dispose of the rights of the respondents in this manner. The ordinary process for obtaining possession of land would be by form of action. It appeared Mr. Fick sold certain land to a Mr. Tanner, who sold portion of the land to the respondents. The respondents entered into possession, and they alleged they had made certain improvements, for which they ought to have compensation. The application would be refused, leaving it to the applicant to take any other steps he thought fit; but it might be advisable for him to consider if the respondents were not taking up a fair position. The application would be refused, with costs, and His Lordship added that he was not deciding anything in favour of the respondents upon the claim afterwards to be decided.

KHAN V. INSOLVENT ESTATE SHAM-SUDIN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones, for the applicant, said he understood there was no opposition. Counsel applied to have a rule made absolute restraining the respondent from parting with the proceeds of a certain sale.

Rule made absolute, the question of costs to stand over.

Ex parte THE INSOLVENT ESTATE HERMAN.

Mr. Inchbold moved as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Messrs. Liberman and Buirski, large creditors in the estate of Herman, for the appointment of provisional trustees in the estate, the assets of which consisted for the most part of forage and other perishables. The estate was provisionally sequestrated on April 24.

Maasdorp, J., said the Master would appoint a curator when the estate was only provisionally sequestrated. The application would be refused.

VAN BLERK V. ESTATE AURET AND VAN BLERK.

Mr. McGregor was for the applicant, and Mr. Sutton was for the second respondent.

This was an application in respect of interest of a share of inheritance under the will of the late Abraham Auret, who was the father of the applicant, for an order authorising the executors in the estate of her father to pay over the interest due to the petitioner upon receiving a receipt for such payment, without the assistance of her husband. The parties were married in community of property, the husband was at present paralysed, and the parties had been separated for a period of 16 years. A further order was asked for that the husband's signature was not necessary with the payments.

Mr. Sutton pointed out that the parties were married in community of property, and the husband was entitled to the administration of this fund. If assistance had to be obtained for the husband, a curator bonis should have been appointed.

Maasdorp, J.: It appears that there are certain moneys in possession of the respondent executors, in which the applicant and her husband have a joint interest. She asks for leave to receive the moneys, and to grant an acquittance to the executors, which will be sufficient to relieve them of responsibility. In his condition he cannot render her any assistance. Under the circumstances, the Court will grant to her as one of the interested parties the power to receive the interest already due. This, of course, does not dispose of the question as to the rights between the husband and the wife as to this money. That remains an open question. She shall receive it on behalf of herself, and her husband. That will leave the matter open to the husband to assert any rights he may have. The Court will not grant a general order, because this application is only on the ground she cannot avail herself of her husband's assistance. There will be a limited order that the executors are authorised to pay the interest already due to the applicant, and take her receipt as to the acquittance. There is a further reason for acceding to the application, as there had been no objections in the past. If there was any opposition it would be necessary to come to the Court with repeated applications. The applicant will be authorised to receive the money and deal with it as she thinks proper, the executors to pay the interest already due to the applicant, and to receive the acquittance. There will be no order as to costs. Respondent has not assisted the Court in the slightest degree in this matter.

Ex parte KOOMIN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved on behalf of petitioner for leave to sue his wife by edictal citation for an order of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce. Petitioner said that he resided at Villiersdorp, that his wife refused to return to him, and that she had been travelling through Europe and America. She was last heard of in Johannesburg, where petitioner believed she was now living. The parties were married in London, England.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, citation to be returnable on the 14th July, personal service, failing which publication once in the "Government Gazette," "Star" (Johannesburg), and "Cape Times," with leave to serve intendit, and notice of trial with citation.

Ex parte HAMMERSCHLAG.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for leave to sue one Pieter J. Kuhn by edictal citation, for a debt of £47 due to the late partnership of Adler and Co., of which petitioner, who resides in the Konhardt district, had become sole partner. Petitioner believed Kuhn was travelling about the Namaqualand district under an assumed name, or that he was concealing himself.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, citation to be returnable on the 14th July, personal service, failing which publication once in "Gazette" and "Ons Land."

Ex parte DAY.

Mr. Molteno moved on behalf of petitioner, who resides at Wynberg, for leave to sue his wife, Charlotte M. Day, by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Petitioner said that he was married to defendant at Wallington Church, Surrey, England. He came out to this colony in 1902. His wife had several times come out to him, and had gone back to England. She was now in England, and refused to come out here and reside with petitioner.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted. citation to be returnable on July 2, personal service to be effected, with leave to serve interdict and notice of trial with citation.

Ex parte CURATOR BONIS OF MEYER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to partition certain landed property in which Meyer had an interest under the will of his parents.

Order granted appointing applicant curator ad litem to represent Meyer in the partition of the landed property, costs to come out of Meyer's estate.

Ex parte KNIGHT.

Mr. Bailey moved for an order authorising petitioner to sell certain shares in which minor children by petitioner's first marriage are interested. The Master reported favourably.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte ESTATE JOYCE

Mr. Sutton moved on behalf of the assumed executor in this estate for an order authorising transfer of certain property at King William's Town to John Malachi Joyce. J. M. Joyce claimed that he was entitled to the land by a gift from his father. An action was pending in the E.D. Court. J. M. Joyce was prepared to take transfer of the land at the sum of £825. The Master's report was favourable. Counsel said that a question arose as to a certain interest of G. B. Christian and Co. in an inheritance of Peter Patrick Joyce.

Maasdorp, J.: There is no necessity to come to this Court to have minor's interests protected. An action is pending in the Eastern Districts Court, and this is a consent to settle that action. The matter will be referred to the Eastern Districts Court, where the action is pending.

Ex parte NEWMAN.

Dr. Greer moved on behalf of petitioner, who is of Cape Town, for leave to sue his wife in forma pauperis. Petitioner said he wished to institute an action for divorce against his wife on the ground of her alleged adultery with one Abraham Julius, from whom he proposed to claim damages.

Subject to counsel's certificate being filed a rule nisi was granted, to be returnable on the 3rd May.

Ex parte THE EQUITABLE FIRE ASSURANCE AND TRUST CO.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved on the petition of two directors and the secretary of the Equitable Company for an order authorising the company to resign, as co-executors in the estate of the Rev. Theo. Atkinson and wife. The business of the Equitable had been sold to the Northern Insurance Co., and the company had been wound up.

Order granted releasing the Equitable Co. from their trust as executors, no order as to appointment of other executor or executors.

KONING V. KONING.

Mr. Sutton moved on the petition of Mrs. Koning for a decree of divorce against her husband, with costs, plaintiff to have custody of the child, with payment of maintenance by defendant at the rate of £2 a month, until the said child attains its majority. Counsel put in an affidavit to the effect that respondent had failed to comply with the order of restitution granted by the Court.

Rule made absolute as prayed, first payment to be made on the 1st May under the maintenance order.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

WIGGETT V. WIGGETT. { 1906.
Apr. 27th.

Mr. Benjamin was for the plaintiff, and there was no appearance for the defendant. The action was brought by Alfred Wiggett, of Oudtshoorn, against his wife, Emilie Rosie Wiggett, for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce by reason of her wrongful desertion. Counsel for the plaintiff said that the matter had previously been before the Court, when it was found that there was not sufficient publication in the "Gazette" of the substituted service, and the Court extended the return day, and ordered due publication to be made. The Court allowed the evidence of the plaintiff to be taken on commission. The plaintiff resided at Oudtshoorn, and was married to the defendant, who now resided at Epsom, Surrey, in Cape Town, on the 8th April, 1899. About 1900, at Horsaam, Sussex, the defendant deserted the plaintiff. The plaintiff's evidence set out that the defendant agreed to live with him if he remained in England. He bought a farm at Thames Ditton, and after returning from the market one day found that his wife had left. Since his return to South Africa the defendant had written asking for money, and he had offered to pay her expenses out to South Africa.

A decree of restitution of conjugal rights was granted, the defendant ordered to return to or receive plaintiff on or before June 30, failing which, to show cause by the 12th July why a decree of divorce should not be granted, and why the defendant should not be prepared to forfeit the benefits under the ante-nuptial contract.

TOORT V. DALY.

This was an action brought by Herbert Toort, of Observatory, to recover from Marion J. Daly, of Rosebank, £135, with interest, on a promissory note.

The plaintiff's declaration set out that on the 8th April, 1905, the defendant signed a promissory note in favour of the plaintiff and one Thomas Fisher for £220, which became due on June 8, 1905. The note was given for valuable consideration, viz., £150 sterling paid to the defendant by the plaintiff, and £50, which was agreed to be paid to defendant by Fisher, the balance, £20, being in respect of interest and charges. Fisher afterwards was unable to pay the £50, and made over the note to the plaintiff, who became sole holder. When the note became due, defendant owed plaintiff £165, being £150 advanced and £15, the proportionate amount of £20 interest. The amount was reduced by payments made by the defendant of £15, £5, and £10.

The defendant, in his plea, stated that the sum of £200 was actually paid by the plaintiff and Fisher to J. J. van Straaten at the defendant's request. He did not admit that Fisher was unable to advance the £50. He denied that the plaintiff became sole holder of the note before it was overdue. On the 19th April, 1905, the defendant paid to Fisher the sum of £135 on account, and Fisher received the payment on behalf of himself and plaintiff, who declared himself as satisfied. In June, it was agreed that the defendant should feed, stable, train, and race two ponies, the property of the plaintiff, and plaintiff should pay the usual rate of £10 per month, and that plaintiff should pay certain moneys disbursed in the racing of the ponies at Klapmuts. There was due to the defendant in respect of the agreement £57 18s., which extinguished the balance due to the plaintiff under the note.

Plaintiff, in his replication, denied that Fisher had any authority to receive the money, or that defendant informed him before the due date of the note that the payment was made to Fisher. On May 17, 1905, plaintiff bought from Fisher two racing ponies, named Character and Seclusion, and asked Fisher to arrange with the defendant to continue looking after the horses on the same terms as Fisher had paid, viz., £1 a week for both ponies. Defendant was not a licensed trainer, and could not, by Rules of Racing, accept fees for training horses. Plaintiff claimed judgment for £135, less £32 8s. tendered for training and other expenses.

Mr. Roux for plaintiff; Mr. J. E. R. De Villiers for defendant.

Mr. Roux submitted that the onus was on the defendant, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers said he was quite willing to take the onus, and called

M. J. Daly, defendant, who stated his present occupation was speculating. Last year he had two racing ponies, and had stables at Rosebank. His nephew, Van Straaten, was racing on a large scale, and with special permission from the Jockey Club he trained horses for friends. There was no partnership between Van Straaten and himself. When he met Fisher first he explained to him that Van Straaten had a mare which could not be beaten, and he asked Fisher for the loan of £200 with which to make cash bets. Before the 8th April the plaintiff, Toort, whom he had never seen before, came to witness's house with Fisher. Fisher said he was glad to say that they could let witness have the money for two months. Van Straaten was present. While witness was writing out the note Fisher paid out to Van Straaten £200. The note was made payable two months after date on the suggestion of Fisher. He thought he had a "dead certainty," and therefore the £20 interest was immaterial. When the meeting came off the good thing materialised, but they did not win so much as was anticipated. As security witness wrote out promising two racehorses, and undertaking not to dispose of them, which Van Straaten was to sign. At Fisher's offices £135 was paid on the note on the 19th April, and he gave a receipt for the money. Witness did not actually tell Toort about the money paid to Fisher until the due date. Both Fisher and Toort came to witness's house the night before the note became due, and both reminded him that the note had to be paid next day. Nothing was said of a balance. Next day witness and Van Straaten called, and witness asked Fisher and Toort for an extension of time for the balance. Toort, when witness handed him £15, asked him not to pay Fisher any more on the bill, as he had had enough out of it. Fisher afterwards went insolvent. Witness claimed £10 a month for the keep of the pony, and plaintiff tendered 10s. a week.

The plaintiff went out to Klappmuts and took the pony Seclusion from Van Straaten, but defendant was lax in allowing him to do so.

Cross-examined by Mr. Roux: Between the 31st August and 12th September he did not make an offer of £85 to the plaintiff. Subsequently witness made an offer of £100 to the plaintiff without prejudice. Witness was positive that £200 had been paid, although the plaintiff said that only £150 was paid. It was distinctly understood that he should pay the bill to Fisher. He did not agree to take the horses at a small fee, in order to get the chance of betting on them.

J. J. van Straaten stated that last year he pursued racing all over the country, with his headquarters at Rosebank. Witness received the £200 on the promissory note while the defendant was writing out the bill. Witness went as security. The money was required to back a "good thing" at Klappmuts, and although he could bet on account, he preferred to send cash into the ring with strangers in order to get a better price. He saw defendant repay £135 of the money to Fisher and £15 to Toort on June 8. The usual cost of keeping racing ponies was £10 per month. Each pony had to be exercised at a certain hour of the morning, and each pony needed a boy at £1 per week to ride it. It would be impossible to keep a racing pony for 10s. a week.

Mr. De Villiers: So what the plaintiff says about 10s. a week being the charge is wrong?

Witness: Yes; for 10s. a week the pony would have to feed, groom, and water himself.

Mr. De Villiers: And then he would be to the bad.

Cross-examined by Mr. Roux: Witness said that no entry was made on the note when the £135 was paid.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you keep books?—Yes; Daly does.]

Where are they?—At home.

Mr. De Villiers: I am instructed, my lord, that the only book is the betting book, which would not help us much.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But would it not show how much was received on April 8?]

Witness: I don't know, my lord; Daly is a very careless man with his books.

Philip Sydney Hipwell, a trainer of 12 years' standing, said the usual fee for horse keep was £11 to £12 per month, and that did not include veterinary fees.

Mr. De Villiers closed his case.

Herbert Toort, the plaintiff, who is the caretaker of Rhodes's Buildings, St. George's-street, Cape Town, said that he advanced £150 and Fisher £50 to Daly, in exchange for a promissory note for £220. On June 8 defendant told him that he could not pay the money in full, and gave him a cheque for £15 in the Grand Hotel. Van Straaten was not present, and defendant said nothing about having paid £135 to Fisher. On June 3 plaintiff purchased two racing ponies from Fisher for £210 and expected that Daly would keep the ponies for the same amount as he had kept them for Fisher.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: He had lent Fisher money several times. To a certain extent he had relations with Fisher. At present he was in difficulties through lending money to people. He had no right to. At present he was under a charge of fraud, and it was stated in court that Fisher had tried to settle the matter. It was only lately that he went in for racing properly. He could not understand why the defendant made out the note for £220 when witness only paid £150, but Fisher was to pay the balance.

By His Lordship: He could not explain why an item of £7 dated the 23rd May, to make up the purchase-price of £210 to Fisher, was entered on a document dated May 17.

Thomas Fisher, carpenter, of Observatory-road, stated that he promised to try and raise the money for Daly, and he introduced the plaintiff, who paid £150 to Van Straaten. Witness did not succeed in raising the £50 which he promised. The defendant lent witness £75 in June. The defendant suggested that a receipt should be given for £125—£50 which was not received and £75 money lent, as the £50 was not taken off the plaintiff's bill. He never received the £135 as stated by the defendant. The two ponies, Character and Seclusion, were purchased by witness from Daly for £250, £75 being paid in cash and the balance in promissory notes. Witness only intended buying one pony, and he was induced to take the second through the promise of the defendant to keep the ponies at a sum not worth mentioning. Witness subsequently sold the ponies to the plaintiff for £210, the agreement being that the defendant would keep them as previously arranged upon. The document drawn up on the Klappmuts racecourse was a bogus one, as the ponies were running in error under Van Straaten's name.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: The whole thing was done in a most friendly manner; he looked upon Daly as his best friend in Cape Town.

He did not receive the £135 on behalf of Toort; it was made up of £75 lent by the defendant and the £50, with £10 interest. The defendant owed witness money on gambling transactions. One of the ponies was still owned by Mr. Toort, and was stabled behind witness's house at Observatory.

De Villiers, C.J., referred the witness to a document which he signed purporting to have received £135 on account of the plaintiff and himself dated April 19.

[De Villiers, C.J.: According to your evidence this document is a falsehood from beginning to end?—I never received the money for Toort.

Then this is a falsehood?—I never intended it to appear as a falsehood.

Is it true?—No; I never received the money.

What made you write such a falsehood? Daly had lent me £75, for which I did not give a receipt, and with the £50 which I was supposed to have lent him and £10 interest.

It is nonsense; you know you are talking nonsense. Were you sober at the time? I was sober. I was not drunk.

Then you deliberately told a falsehood?—I was asked by Daly to put it in that way.

Then you ought to have refused. You seem to be a fine pair, you and Toort. That will do.

The defendant was recalled.

[De Villiers, C.J.: When do you say the two horses were sold to the plaintiff?—On the day of the races, for £250.

But you had already received £250, minus £60, from Fisher?—Yes.

What made you write on the 4th June that the plaintiff bought the horses for £250 from Van Straaten?—These horses belonged to Van Straaten until the £60 was paid.

Did you consider that was the truth what you wrote?—The understanding was that the monies should remain ours until they were paid for.

There was no purchase that day of the horses for £250 from Van Straaten, inasmuch as Fisher had already bought them?—That was an arrangement between Fisher and Toort.

Don't you see the whole of this thing is simply a falsehood: "I beg to offer you the sum of £250." How can he at that time make an offer to Van Straaten of £250 for a horse Van Straaten sold to Fisher. It is simply nonsense. The whole thing is false from beginning to end. Between the three of you it is difficult to know who is the worst.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The difficulty in this case is not to discover which of the different parties is deserving of credit, but rather who is less deserving of credit. The better course for the Court is to adhere as much as possible to the documents, because the oral evidence does not carry the case much further. Everyone of these parties involved have admittedly been parties to documents, which, on the face of them, were untrue. Now, first of all there is a document for £220. This document sued upon is a promissory note made by the defendant in favour of both Toort and Fisher for the sum of £220. I take it that was the amount advanced. Fisher does not now claim any share of this amount, and the question is whether Toort is to succeed in whole or part. Another document has been put in by which Fisher admits to have received on the 19th April from the defendant Daly the sum of £135, in part payment of this £220. The explanation given by Fisher as to this document is wholly unsatisfactory. I take it that that money was received, because I cannot assume a man guilty of framing that document if the money was not received. Then as to the question of authority on the part of Fisher to receive on behalf of Toort, I quite agree that this was a joint venture by which the two together agreed to make this advance. They were to receive the sum of £20 as interest for two months on the £220, which is a very high rate of interest, and it was a joint speculation on their part to find this money, and make this profit. The money was to be paid at the office of one of them, namely, at the office of Fisher, and I think there is sufficient proof of authority given to Fisher to receive the money on behalf of both. If the £135 was paid then it was a payment made to both of them. It is true that Fisher transferred his interest in this note after the due date to the plaintiff, and that might now give the plaintiff the right to sue upon the note; but it does not prevent the plaintiff from having to account for any payments made to Fisher, and, therefore, from the £220 there must be deducted £135, which is acknowledged by Fisher as being received on behalf of himself and Toort. Then there must further be deducted the sum of £30, which the plaintiff admits was paid to him in sums of £15, £10, and £5. Then there must also be deducted £6 6s., £9 1s., £5 1s., which the plaintiffs admits are expenses he is liable for in respect of fees, and the only further question is as to what the defendant might fairly be entitled to for the keep of these ponies. There is a great deal in what was said as to the benefits which the defendant himself would derive from the ponies being in his possession. It is clear from the defendant's own evidence that he was a betting man, and that he must have considered it a great advantage for the purpose of his betting, to enable him to be more successful in the betting, that he should have these horses on which to bet in his own stables, so that he would have the latest information in regard to their capacity. It was a great advantage, therefore, to him to have these ponies in his possession. I quite agree that he would not be entitled to the same charges which a trainer would be in similar circumstances not engaged in betting in the same way as the defendant was through his nephew, young Mr. Van Straaten. I am not inclined to allow more than £24, which is £12 in excess of what the plaintiff tendered. There is, therefore, a sum of £44 8s. to be deducted, which leaves a balance of £10 12s. still due to the plaintiff, and for that amount there must be judgment for the plaintiff, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

SILBERT, MAISTER AND { 1906.
SHAGOM V. LURIE AND { Apr. 27th, KATZEW.

This was an action brought by Silbert, Maister and Shagom, commission agents, Cape Town, against Lurie and Katzew, of Cape Town, to recover two sums of £3 15s. 7d. and £37 8s. 3d., price of certain eggs sold and delivered and damages for alleged breach of contract.

From the pleadings, it appeared that the main issue was whether the defendants, who were jointly interested in this transaction, bought a consignment of eggs from the plaintiffs, on out-and-out terms, or conditionally upon the samples proving good and suitable. Plaintiffs, in their declaration, said that on the 21st February, 1906, they sold to defendants 86 cases of eggs, containing 30,648, at the rate of 10s. 6d. per 100, or a total sum of £160 18s., the terms being that defendants should take delivery of the eggs immediately at the plaintiffs' store. On the same date defendants removed two cases, each containing 360 eggs, but they had neglected, and still refused, to take delivery of the balance of 84 cases, and thereafter, on the 26th February, plaintiffs, after having given notice to defendants, sold the 84 cases, containing 29,928 eggs, in order to minimise the loss, the amount realised being 8s. per 100 or a total of £119 4s. 3d. Plaintiffs claimed £3 15s. 7d., price of two cases taken by defendants, and £37 8s. 3d. damages for failure to complete contract of sale, based upon the difference between the amount realised on the balance and the rate at which defendants had agreed to purchase. Defendants, in their plea, admitted having bought the parcel in question, but said that it was a condition of the sale that they should take away two sample boxes from the consignment, and should the samples prove bad or unsuitable the sale should be cancelled, and all liability of defendants to plaintiffs should cease and determine. The eggs in the said sample cases had, on examination, proved bad and unsuitable, and the said sale was, by reason thereof, cancelled. Defendants denied that they were indebted to plaintiffs in any sum in respect of the 84 cases. They had tendered and hereby again tendered to plaintiffs the sum of £3 15s. 8d., being the price of the two sample cases, at the rate of 10s. 6d. per 100. Plaintiffs' replication was general.

Dr. Greer was for plaintiffs; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Lewis), was for defendants.

Dr. Greer submitted that the onus was upon defendants to open and prove their allegation that the sale was cancelled by agreement.

Mr. Searle submitted that upon the pleadings the evidence should be begun by plaintiffs.

Maasdorp, J., said that plaintiffs had better open the case.

Max Shagom (a partner in the plaintiff firm) said that on the 21st February his firm had for disposal, partly on commission and partly on their own account, several consignments of eggs from eight or nine different persons. Defendants called and negotiated with regard to the eggs. Witness asked 11s. 6d. per 100, and defendants offered 10s. 6d. They examined several cases—he should say seven or eight or nine, by taking out eggs and examining them. It was finally agreed that the price should be 10s. 6d. per 100, the consignment of 86 cases to be taken away the same afternoon. Witness's firm never sold conditionally, but always outright. No mention was made about samples being taken. On Friday, the 23rd February, defendants called at plaintiffs' office, and Katzew told witness that they had got information from Johannesburg that eggs had dropped, and that they could not take the parcel at the price. They said they would give £10 to plaintiffs if they would cancel the sale. Witness said that it was impossible for them to do so. He did not see defendants on the morning of the 22nd February; the statement made by defendants in their letter was incorrect. About the time of the transaction the market in eggs fell, both here and in Johannesburg. Witness sold the eggs remaining, partly on the 27th and partly on the 28th February. There was no doubt that the eggs were good; they had had no complaints from the person to whom the eggs had been sold. He should describe the produce as "good, saleable eggs." Defendants took and examined eggs from the two boxes in question while they were standing in plaintiffs' stores. Witness had an examination of the 84 cases made at their stores on Saturday, the 24th February.

Cross-examined: Witness believed that defendants carried on separate businesses. Eggs were generally tested by holding them to the light, sometimes by holding them in front of a candle. Nothing was said by defendants about taking away two boxes as samples. Defendants did not come and see him on the 22nd February, and say that the eggs were bad. Witness did not think it necessary to call in the defendants at the inspection on the 24th February, because he had called in two impartial people. He admitted having received a letter from defendants on the 23rd February, which he had not handed to his attorney. He had forgotten about the letter.

Aaron Silbert (another partner in the plaintiff firm) said that he was present at the transaction. Defendants agreed to take the lot at 10s. 6d. per 100, and mention was made of samples being taken.

Peter Millar, plaintiff's storeman, said that he opened about nine or ten cases of eggs at the request of the defendants on the 21st February. The consignments were Colonial eggs. Defendants took about half a dozen eggs from each case, and examined them in the light. He considered the sale to be outright. Afterwards, Mr. Katzew called, and removed two cases that he said he wanted quickly for a customer. Witness called the same evening at Katzew's store, and asked when they were going to take the remainder. Katzew said they would remove the remainder on the following morning.

Cross-examined: Witness considered the eggs to be good and useable. He should regard an egg as absolutely bad when it was black. He should not say that an egg marked with black spots was absolutely bad; such eggs were known as "spot eggs," and were bought by bakers. He should not say that if 160 of the 360 eggs bore black spots they were bad eggs.

H. Chiat, formerly of Saacks, Chiat, and Gumes, said that he was a produce merchant. He bought about 80 cases of eggs from plaintiffs on the 27th February, at 8s. per 100. The eggs were good and useable, and were subsequently sold by witness in different lots at prices varying from 10s. to 12s. 6d. per 100. He sent a quantity of the eggs to German South-west Africa for hospital purposes.

Cross-examined: Only a few eggs in the consignment were spotted. He sold some of the inferior eggs, which were broken or bad, numbering about 480, at 4s. per 100. It was not true that half of the eggs in 35 boxes were rotten.

Jan van Schoor Dreyer, Master at the Early Morning Market, said that the market in eggs dropped between the 19th and 28th, from 13s. 6d. to 11s.

George Chas. Ross, market agent, Cape Town, said that on the 24th February, at the request of plaintiffs, he examined a number of eggs taken from a large parcel, and found them to be good. They had two classes of eggs—fresh eggs, and eggs good, not fresh. In the latter class the customer must take the risk.

[Maasdorp, J.: Then eggs "good, not fresh," may include rotten eggs?]

Witness: Yes.

Mr. Searle put it to witness that if a box contained 160 eggs with black spots out of 360 he would regard that as unmarketable.

Witness: No, they are not unmarketable.

Asked when he considered an egg to be unmarketable, witness replied, "I suppose when it is rotten, black."

[Maasdorp, J.: Suppose a customer buys what you call a "good, not fresh" egg that proves to be rotten, you do not replace it?]

Witness: No.

Re-examined: Witness did not remember having found any eggs bearing black spots among those that he examined at plaintiffs' store.

Johan H. Pentz, market agent, said that he examined about ten eggs at plaintiff's store on the date in question. He regarded them as good eggs of the second class.

Mr. Searle: They were not first-class eggs?

Witness: No; they were not eggs that you could boil, except—

Mr. Searle: At your peril.

Witness (in further cross-examination) said he believed that these second-class eggs were used for baking. They were what one might call table eggs.

Max Hertzman, produce dealer, Cape Town, said that on the 21st February, Katzew told him that he had bought a parcel of eggs at 10s. 6d. per 100.

Dr. Greer closed his case.

Barnett Katzew (one of the defendants). He said that the sale was conditional on the samples proving good and suitable. Both the samples were "no good"; half of the eggs being bad. He tried to communicate with Shagom the same day, but he was unable to do so. Next morning, the 22nd February, he called at Shagom's office at the Market, and told Shagom that it was impossible for them to take the eggs. On the 23rd, witness received a letter from Shagom, saying that he must remove the eggs that day, as they wanted room. Witness instructed his bookkeeper to send a reply. On the 21st witness told Shagom that he had had a good many complaints from Johannesburg about stale and bag eggs. He knew nothing about the story that he had gone to Shagom, and offered £10 so as to be let off the bargain.

Cross-examined: Witness only examined two or three boxes at plaintiff's store. He had had a good many transactions with Shagom previously, but he had never previously taken away two sample boxes. He had had a good many bad eggs from Shagom.

[Maasdorp, J.: What did you do with the bad ones?]

Witness: I threw them out.

Cross-examination continued: It was too dark in plaintiff's store to submit the eggs to the candle test. He expected to find a few bad eggs in a case, but when he found 160 bad ones he could not take cases of that kind. He knew there were more than two consignments, but he only took away two samples. He did not care where the eggs had come from, so long as they were Colonial. He did not ask Millar to let him have two boxes in a hurry for a customer. The market was not falling about the time of the transaction. Witness gave up the contract because the samples were so bad.

Re-examined: Witness had not, between the time he bought and the time he told Shagom he would not take the eggs, received a telegram from Johannesburg saying that the market had fallen.

By the Court: Witness took it that if the eggs in the sample-boxes were good, they would be bound to take the other boxes. He could not explain why his attorney should have written saying that if the eggs were good they would have the right to take the others.

J. Lurie (the other defendant) said that the purchase was entirely conditional on the eggs in the sample-boxes being good and suitable. Witness had a brother in Johannesburg in the same business. They were sending from £800 to £1,000 worth of eggs to Johannesburg every month, representing from 20,000 to 40,000 eggs every week. The sample-boxes obtained from plaintiffs contained a good many bad eggs. It was not true that he had offered to pay £10 if they were released from the bargain. Witness was selling a large number of eggs in Cape Town, Kimberley, and Pretoria, as well as in Johannesburg.

Cross-examined: A good number of the eggs were spotted and black.

By the Court: It was arranged that, in any case, they were bound to pay for the two sample boxes.

Maasdorp, J., pointed out that defendant's attorney said that his clients offered to pay for the two boxes of rotten eggs in order to avoid litigation.

Witness: That is not correct. We were bound to pay for the two boxes.

Abraham Hoffman, egg-dealer, Plumstead, said that he went to Katzew's to buy Colonial and imported eggs. Katzew had two boxes brought to his store. The eggs were sorted into two classes. Out of one box 200 were good, and these witness bought, while the others were set aside as bad. Witness also bought 660 imported eggs from Katzew. He was in the habit of selling eggs from door to door.

E. Koning, egg-dealer, said that he "candled" a good number of the eggs at Chiat's store, and found that a considerable number were bad. Witness told Mr. Chiat that it was impossible to send such eggs to German South-West Africa, on account of the journey. He opened one box, but he could not stand the smell.

H. Licht, egg-dealer, gave similar evidence. He said that the good eggs in the boxes that he "candled" were not many more than the bad ones.

J. B. Shacksnovis, articulated clerk with defendants' attorneys, also gave evidence with regard to a certain letter which it was alleged Mr. Shagom had not disclosed, and which he had received from defendants on the 23rd February.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the direct evidence as to the terms of the sale is contained in the statements of the two defendants on one side and the two plaintiffs on the other, with this addition—the evidence of the plaintiffs is supported by their storeman, Millar, and by a person named Hertzman. But it would not be safe to decide the case merely by the number of witnesses. The version given by the storeman seems to be altogether quite what one would have expected of the parties—that there should be an examination on the spot, where the eggs could be examined, and that the parties should make up their minds at once after such examination, and that they should then close the bargain by accepting delivery. It appears also that the evidence of Millar is corroborated by the defendants, that there was evidently a customer waiting (Hoffman), who was to take these eggs away. It is suggested that that is merely a coincidence. However, I see no reason why I should not accept this, that Katzew knew there was a gentleman waiting at his store prepared to buy these goods. Millar's evidence bears on the face of it, the impress of truth. On the whole, I am inclined to accept the evidence of plaintiffs' witnesses as truthful, and their version of the agreement as entirely reasonable and supported by the view of the independent witnesses, who went afterwards to examine the eggs, and who were satisfied to take the quality of the eggs in the same way as the plaintiffs say the defendants should have been satisfied, i.e., to take an occasional box here and there and be satisfied as to the quality of a part from an examination of the whole. His Lordship commented on the discrepancies between the instructions evidently given by defendants to their attorney and the evidence given by them in court to-day. Continuing, he said there was a breach of the contract of sale on the part of the defendants, and I think plaintiffs acted very properly in selling the eggs promptly. They acted more promptly than we usually find in cases of this kind. Plaintiffs were not bound to sell the eggs, and might have kept them at defendants' risk. Judgment will be given for the plaintiffs as prayed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

Ex parte BASSETT. { 1906.
Apr. 30th.

Mr. Burton moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Thomas Bassett, of the West Country Hotel, for an order restraining one Gilbert Coles from disposing of certain consignment of horses in the S.S. Norfolk, pending an action to be brought by petitioner. From the petition, it appeared that Bassett for the past twelve months had had transactions with Coles in horses. He had sent money to Coles to buy horses in Buenos Ayres, and Coles had sent the purchases here to be disposed of by petitioner. On the 5th March, 1906, he sent to Coles a sum of £250 to enable him to purchase horses to be sent to Cape Town. The S.S. Norfolk arrived in Table Bay on the 28th April, with 30 horses, and deponent on the 29th went to the Docks to see Coles and his (petitioner's) son. He had reason to complain to Coles about the condition of the animals, and to inform Coles that they were not worth the price he had paid for them, viz., £300. Petitioner was informed by Coles that he would pay the freight of the consignment, £150. Petitioner, from this and other circumstances, was suspicious that Coles intended to sell the horses, and consequently deponent would have no security for the debts of £250 for money dispatched, £9 cash advanced, and £18 paid as passage money, due by Coles to petitioner. An affidavit was also put in by another person stating that Coles had instructed an auctioneer to sell the horses.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon respondent to show cause on Thursday next why an order should not be granted as prayed, with costs, rule to operate as an interim interdict.

REX V. COLE.

{ 1906.
Apr. 30th.

Scab Acts—Knowledge of owner.

The appellant, on one of whose flock of sheep the Scab Inspector found a patch of live scab, about six inches in diameter, which, according to the inspector's evidence, would be patent to an ordinary observer, had failed to give due notice thereof to the inspector.

Held on appeal, that the owner could not, by closing his eyes to the existence of scab, avoid liability for not giving such notice, and that the appellant had been properly convicted.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Mount Currie, who, sitting at Kokstad, on the 5th April, had convicted the appellant (James Cole) of failing to report an outbreak of sheep scab. Mr. Upington was for appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Appellant, who is a European farmer, had been charged with contravening section 10 of Proclamation 60 of 1903, "in that, on the 19th March, 1906, at Frankland, in the said district, he did wrongfully and unlawfully neglect or fail to report an outbreak of scab amongst his sheep to the inspector of Area No. 14 (a)." He pleaded not guilty, but was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of £2.

The grounds of appeal were that the conviction was against the weight of the evidence, and, generally, contrary to law.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the evidence fully showed that the flock was infected, and that one ewe was very bad with the disease. The defence set up was that the accused had no knowledge that the sheep were infected, and, consequently, that there had been no contravention of the law. Accused, in his evidence, stated that he carefully examined the sheep when they arrived on his farm, but, in cross-examination, he admitted that he merely had a look at them while in the kraal. But, even assuming that he made a cursory examination, it was difficult to see how he could have failed to detect the infected ewe, seeing that one of the patches of scab was six inches in diameter. He (the Magistrate) was satisfied that accused had knowledge of the infected sheep, either personally or through his servants. He was, therefore, guilty of a contravention of the section, which provided that the outbreak must be reported at once.

Mr. Upington said that section 10 of the Proclamation, except in a certain minor respect, was practically, in its terms, the same as section 7 of Act 28, 1886, the old Scab Act. Under that section of the Act, an appeal was decided of Queen v. Wright (4, C.T.R., 104), on which he (counsel) relied. He went on to submit that, in the circumstances of the present case, the fact that one ewe was infected, and apparently had been infected for a considerable time, although it might be an element in deciding whether or not defendant was aware of the existence of the scab, still was not conclusive. It appeared that a large flock of sheep were brought to the farm from some distance on a certain Saturday, and early on the Monday morning the sheep inspector turned up at the farm and went through the flock, and discovered one ewe with a patch of scab upon it. It was not alleged that in the whole flock there was more than one single ewe that showed any signs of the disease, and the Court were not told where this particular patch was, whether it was in such a position that it could easily be detected or whether it was, as a matter of fact, on some portion of the body where it might be difficult, without close examination, to discover.

Mr. Jones said that he relied on the very strong dicit given by His Lordship in the case of Queen v. Wright. In the present case, the Court might properly presume knowledge on the part of Cole. The sheep had actually been branded on the Saturday at the adjoining farm, Llewellyn, and it was difficult to conceive how, under the circumstances, the patch of scab could have escaped notice. It was not enough for defendant to say that he simply took a casual look at the sheep.

Mr. Upington having been heard in reply,

De Villiers, C.J.: In the case cited by Mr. Upington (Regina v. Wright), it was said that: "The means of knowledge alone is not sufficient, although, of course, the existence of such means of knowledge would go far, in the absence of clear proof to the contrary, to show that the owner knew of the infection. If it would be patent to an ordinary observer, that the sheep were infected it would be difficult to convince any court or jury that the owner or his manager in charge was ignorant of the fact." That seems a fair test. Would it be patent to a competent ordinary observer that the sheep now in question were infected with scab? If so the owner could not, by closing his eyes to the existence of scab among his sheep escape liability for not giving due notice to the inspector. It was suggested by Mr. Upington that the scab may have been upon a part of the body where it would not strike the ordinary observer, but certainly that is not the impression which one derives from the evidence. Inspector Evans had no difficulty in discovering that one of the sheep had the scab, and on examination it was found that the scab was alive there. Then if there had been a thorough examination by Cole of the sheep when they arrived, it is difficult to see how he could have failed to find the scab, but, according to his own version in cross-examination, it was a very perfunctory examination that he made. At the time the sheep were branded it seems he was not present, but certainly the person who branded the sheep ought to have discovered that the sheep had scab upon it. There is just one point urged by Mr. Upington, which certainly would have a good deal in it if the number of sheep found by the scab inspector had corresponded with the number appearing in his permit, because in that case it would have been clear that the inspector who had given the permit for the removal of the sheep had not been able to find scab in the sheep, but, unfortunately, the number differs. There were 922 sheep in this flock, whereas the inspector had given a permit only for 900 sheep, and, therefore, it seems rather likely that this sheep with the scab was one of the 22 which had not been seen by the inspector who gave the permit. Therefore, the argument derived from the fact that the inspector who had given the permit had failed to discover the scab seems to be weakened by this circumstance. If it had been clear that this sheep was one of the sheep, in respect of which another inspector had given a clean bill, I should certainly have hesitated to allow this verdict to stand; but as that point is not made clear, it seems to me that the Court has to fall back upon the evidence of Inspector Evans, whose evidence was fully accepted by the Magistrate, and according to this evidence it was a clear case of a sheep being infected with scab, which the owner ought to have known of. Under these circumstances the appeal must be dismissed.

SHASKOLSKY V. HAUPT. } 1906.
 } Apr. 30th.

False imprisonment — Malicious arrest — Malice — Want of reasonable and probable cause.

The appellant obtained a decree of civil imprisonment against the respondent in a Resident Magistrate's Court, of which, however, the Court on the 21st day of September granted a stay of execution until the 31st of October. The record, however, by mistake mentioned the 21st of October as the day on which the stay was granted, and by another mistake the clerk of the appellant's attorney took it that the stay was until the 30th September, and he accordingly on the 6th of October applied for a warrant of imprisonment. The Magistrate, again by mistake, signed the warrant for immediate execution, although he had ordered a stay until the 31st. The respondent was lodged in gaol for one night, but released by the Magistrate in the following morning on discovery of the mistake. The respondent having obtained judgment against the appellant for damages.

Held on appeal, that there had been no false imprisonment, inasmuch as the warrant was in due form and that there was not such a total absence of reasonable and probable cause as to lead to a necessary inference of malice, and the appeal was allowed accordingly.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of Wynberg, in an action brought by the present respondent (Pierre Francois Haupt) against appellant to recover £20 damages for illegal arrest and imprisonment.

The Magistrate had found for plaintiff for £15, with costs. The arrest took place at Observatory-road on the evening of October 6 last, and Haupt was lodged in the civil debtors' prison at Wynberg, and detained until 11 a.m. on October 7.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the present defendant, Shaskolsky, obtained judgment in his Court in an action against plaintiff on March 30, 1905, for £5 14s. 1d., with costs. The judgment was not satisfied. Subsequently a decree of civil imprisonment was granted against Haupt, to be suspended on Haupt paying £1 a month. On more than one occasion Haupt applied for a stay of execution. On the 21st September the decree was stayed until the 31st October. On the 6th October, at the instance of Shaskolsky, he granted a warrant in execution of the decree, and on the evening of the 6th October, by virtue of that warrant, Haupt was arrested and detained until about 11 a.m. next day. It was admitted by Shaskolsky's attorney (Mr. A. W. Steer) that a mistake was made. The attorney stated that he could not say how the mistake was made. There could be very little doubt that it was through a faulty record of the proceedings. There was, in his (the Magistrate's) opinion, a want of proper care and diligence in the matter on the part of plaintiff's attorney, from which malice and absence of reasonable and probable cause must be inferred. Under the circumstances he did not consider that £15 was an excessive sum to award to plaintiff for damages.

Mr. Benjamin was for appellant; Mr. Roux was for respondent.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that in an action of this kind it was essential to prove malice. All the forms of the Court had been complied with, but there appeared to have been a mistake on the part of the Magistrate's clerk.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out that the record said "the 31st" when clearly it should have been the 31st October.

Mr. Benjamin submitted further that the writ should have been first set aside before the action was instituted by Haupt. There was no evidence whatever of malice in the present case.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is your client liable for the malicious act of his attorney?]

Mr. Benjamin: I submit not.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Action should have been taken against the defendant's attorney?]

Mr. Benjamin submitted that that was so.

Mr. Roux quoted Pollock on Torts on the question of a principal being responsible for the torts of his agent. Everything that his agent did, counsel contended, the principal was bound to authorise. In this case the whole of the acts of the attorney were done for the benefit of Shaskolsky.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the evidence of malice in this case?]

Mr. Roux: There is no proof of malice, but I submit that it is not necessary to prove malice in face of the decisions of this Court. It is clear, however, that there was not reasonable and probable cause for arresting Haupt. If the attorney, through his clerk, had kept the record properly this incident would not have arisen. Council proceeded to cite the case of Pulling v. Harsant (Griqualand Reports, vol. 2, iii.). The writ, he submitted, had, ipso facto, been set aside by the Magistrate who granted it in the first instance. Counsel contended that the Magistrate's judgment was correct, and that the amount awarded was not excessive.

Mr. Benjamin having been heard in reply,

De Villiers, C.J.: I cannot agree with the view urged upon the Court on behalf of respondent, that in the present case there was any false imprisonment. The warrant upon which the respondent was arrested was in due form. It duly complied with the 12th section of the Act, 1856, which is as follows: "When and as often as any such Court, as aforesaid, shall make a decree of civil imprisonment against any defendant, the process for the execution of the same shall be by warrant under the hands of the R.M., which warrant shall in substance and effect be in the form in that behalf in the schedule to this Act contained." The warrant has now been produced, and it is in every respect formal. It is in the form specified in the Act, and it is duly signed by the R.M. of Wynberg, and appears to be dated 6th October, the date on which it purported to be issued. Therefore, if the defendant (the present appellant) is to be held liable at all, it must be on the ground that the arrest was malicious, and that there was a want of reasonable and probable cause. Now, it appears that the mistake arose in this manner: On the 18th September the respondent against whom the appellant had obtained a decree of civil imprisonment asked for a further stay of execution, and then execution was stayed until the 20th inst.—that is, to the 20th September. Then, on the 21st September, apparently, the matter was again mentioned, but unfortunately the record, which was entered by the Magistrate, says: "21st October, 1906: Applicant Haupt in person, applicant asks for stay of execution to 31st; stayed to 31st." The clerk to the appellant's attorney seems to have understood that the stay was until 30th September and not 31st October, and on the 6th October he applied for a warrant of imprisonment. If he had thought for a moment, he would have seen that it was a mistake, because there are only 30 days in September. But anyhow this was the mistake made. The clerk then obtained a warrant from the Magistrate's clerk, and the Magistrate's clerk then must have got the Magistrate to sign it on the 6th October, so that it was a mistake on behalf of the Magistrate, and also on the part of the clerk of the attorney. Now, it seems to me that such a mistake might very reasonably have been made without any malice on the part of anyone. It was a mistake; it is difficult to say who was the cause of the mistake, whether it is the Magistrate or whether it is the clerk; but it seems to be a very reasonable mistake, a mistake which might very easily have been made. Unfortunately, this man was arrested, and sent to gaol for the night. But the Court cannot forget in this connection that there was really a writ of civil imprisonment against him. He had failed to pay, there had been an execution against his goods, there had not been a sufficient return, there had been a writ against him, but that writ was stayed, and this stay of execution had not been complied with. Under ordinary circumstances, it might have been a very grievous injury to a person to be imprisoned in this manner, but it is not such a grievous injury in the case of a person, against whom there is writ at the time, of which there is a stay of execution. Unfortunately, the parties concerned did not bear in mind that the stay of execution was until the 31st October, instead of the 30th September. Meanwhile, this warrant was obtained, and the man was sent to gaol. As soon as the mistake was discovered, he was released. Now, the question is, is the appellant to be held responsible, the appellant who employed the attorney? In my opinion, there is a total absence of malice; there is not a suggestion of malice, and there is not such an utter want of reasonable and probable cause as to lead to the necessary inference of malice. For these reasons, I am of opinion that it is wholly impossible to support the judgment of the Magistrate, and the appeal must be allowed. I think, as to the costs of appeal, the appellant should have his costs of appeal, but, as to the costs in the Court below, that is another matter. There will be no order as to costs in the Court below; each party will pay his own costs in that Court.

REX V. VAN DER WALT. { 1906.
Apr. 30th.

Ordinance 6 of 1843, Sec. 71—
Act 38 of 1884, Sec. 10—
Culpable insolvency.

A Magistrate has no power to inflict a fine for culpable insolvency.

Maasdorp, J.: "A case came before me as Judge of the week from the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Kynena, in which the accused, Van der Walt, was charged with contravening section 71 of the Ordinance 6 of 1843, as amended by section 10 of the Act 38 of 1884. It is alleged that the accused, whose estate was sequestrated, failed to keep or cause to be kept reasonable and proper books or accounts, and consequently he was guilty of culpable insolvency. He pleaded not guilty. He was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of £10 or one month's imprisonment, with hard labour. In the section under which he is charged, it is provided that in case a person is found guilty of this offence he shall be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for a period not exceeding six months. There is no provision made in this section for the infliction of a fine, consequently the sentence is an illegal sentence, and will be struck out, and the matter referred back to the Magistrate to pass a legal sentence. Under ordinary circumstances perhaps it might have been only necessary to strike out the words inflicting the fine, and leaving the one month, but I think it is better, as the Magistrate may have been influenced by the fact that he was inflicting a fine when he passed the sentence of imprisonment, that he should now deal with it without reference to the fine."

In re PRINCE,

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers applied for an amendment of the order in this matter by discharging the interdict against Attorney T. P. Peters in order that he might hand over the deed for amendment.

Application granted, with leave to Attorney Peters to hand over the deed to Messrs. Michau and De Villiers for the purpose of the proposed amendment.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ORANJEZICHT ESTATES, LTD. { 1986.
 V. CAPE TOWN TOWN { May 1st.
 COUNCIL. { " 16th.
 { June 1st.

Municipality—Town Council—Refusal to sanction plan of sub-division—Improper exercise of powers.

The Town Council of Cape Town refused to give its consent to a plan of sub-division submitted to it by the plaintiff, an owner of land within the Municipality, unless a certain strip of land at a higher level than certain springs belonging to the Council were reserved from such sub-division, the sole ground of refusal being that the result of building on such strip of land would be the pollution of the springs. The Court was satisfied from the evidence that, with the ordinary precautions which would be necessary, even if the strip of land were not built upon, there would be no additional risk of pollution from the land being built upon.

Held, that the further withholding of consent would be illegal, as being an exercise of a power conferred for a wholly different object from that which the Council sought to attain by the exercise of such power, and it was declared that if the Council shall not within a definite time grant its consent, the plaintiff would be entitled to proceed to such sub-division without such consent.

Held further, that the Court will not restrain a person from making an otherwise lawful use of his land, merely because at some future time negligence in such use of the land may result in damage to another.

This was an action brought by the Oranjezicht Estates, Ltd., against the Town Council of Cape Town for a declaration of rights and damages.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a company duly registered in this Colony. The defendant is the Town Council of Cape Town.

2. The plaintiff is the registered owner of the property heretofore and still called "The Oranjezicht Estate," situated on the slopes of Table Mountain, and prior to the year 1882 belonged to the Van Breda family subject to an entail.

3. On the 8th August, 1881, a deed of submission to arbitration was executed between G. van Breda, the then owner of the said estate, and the Town Council of Cape Town, which set out that the said Van Breda should cede to the Town Council all his rights, title, and interest in the water springs, fountains and streams on the said estate, with the right to dig, bore, excavate, open up and carry out such works as might be necessary, under certain conditions, to obtain an adequate supply of water, and to lay down certain pipes, and the right to enter on the ground for the purpose of inspecting, repairing, etc., the filtering beds, pipes, streams, etc., all of which were to be subject to certain conditions to be observed by the said Town Council in regard to the said rights, and the question submitted to arbitration was the amount of compensation to be paid, and the award of the arbitrators upon such deed was duly made a rule of Court.

4. Certain of the said conditions were: "That the Town Council shall not be at liberty to enter upon or take possession for the purpose of constructing filtering beds, cisterns or catch-pits of any portion of the said estate now under cultivation, or which has at any time previous to the 1st January, 1881, been under cultivation as a garden, orchard or vineyard (except the piece of ground situated near the Platteklipp-road, commonly known as Scholtz's Garden) without the consent of the said Gerrit Hendrik van Breda or his successors, for the time being, in the said estate;" and "That in all cases where the said Town Council shall construct or lay down drainage or waterpipes across roads or cultivated lands on the said estate such pipes shall be laid at least two feet below the natural surface of the soil, and the ground at such places shall be restored by the said Town Council at their own expense to its original condition."

5. In order that the rights aforesaid acquired by the Town Council and set out in the said deed should be legalised by reason of the said entail, the Act No. 23 of 1882 enacted, after reciting that the rights so acquired and the compensation to be paid therefor should by reason of the entail be sanctioned and confirmed by legislative enactment, that the entail, so far as it affected the water springs and water sources on the said estate, was annulled, and the said springs and sources were vested in the Town Council, with the right to bore, excavate, etc., to execute filtering and other works necessary for collecting water and to lay down pipes. The rights mentioned in the said Act are the rights agreed upon and set out in the aforesaid deed of submission and none other.

6. The plaintiff company bought the said estate under and by virtue of the Act No. 10 of 1899, which annulled the entail upon the said estate and authorised the said sale, for the purpose of sub-dividing the same and selling in lots.

7. A certain number of lots have been sold under and according to plans passed and approved by the defendant Council.

8. The plaintiff company hereunto annexes a plan marked "A," which shows on the portion coloured yellow certain springs vested in the defendant Council, and in red lines the old homestead of the Van Breda family, immediately above some of these springs. The garden which always adjoined the house is immediately above other of the springs. Part of the ground coloured yellow was always occupied and cultivated by the Van Breda family prior to the sale, and thereafter by the plaintiff company, and its tenants, and other ground behind the said homestead was in like manner occupied, and included paddocks for cattle and piggeries.

9. The plaintiff company being desirous of selling other lots, submitted the said plan annexed for the approval and passing of the defendant Council, and though not legally bound so to do, tendered to the defendant Council to reserve the said portion coloured yellow, and not to sell or alienate the same, and to give the defendant Council the right to enclose the same, subject to certain conditions as to building by the defendant Council and accumulating rubbish thereon, all of which is set out in the draft deed hereunto annexed, marked "B" which was tendered to the defendant Council, and which the plaintiff company tendered to execute and to have registered as a perpetual servitude against the title deeds of the said estate, and the plaintiff company has subsequently further tendered to transfer the said area coloured yellow to the defendant Council without any payment for the value of the ground so to be transferred, and subject only to the conditions set forth in the draft deed marked "B" as regards building and the like, and the plaintiff company has always been ready and willing to submit to the usual and proper terms and conditions as to drainage and road-making in the sub-division of the said lots.

10. Notwithstanding the aforesaid premises the defendant Council refuses to pass the said plans, and claims the right to prevent the plaintiff company, or any person that may buy from them, to build upon any of the said estate adjoining or above the said springs marked on the yellow portion for an indefinite but large extent of area around the said springs, and within such extent as the defendant Council may choose to prescribe, including all the ground and buildings in paragraph 4 set out, and as by the regulations of the said Council, within whose jurisdiction the said estate lies, no one can build except upon plans submitted to and approved of by the said Council, the latter claim the right to refuse to allow any plans for building by future purchasers from the plaintiff company of any of the said land.

11. The said refusal and claims of the said defendant Council are unlawful and wrongful, and by reason thereof the plaintiff company has been unable to sell any of the said land shown on the plan "A." and has lost good opportunities of selling the same, and the same has been lying unprofitable to the plaintiff company for a long time, and altogether the plaintiff company has by reason of the said wrongful and unlawful conduct of the defendant suffered damages to the extent of £1,000.

12. There are upon the said estate bought by the plaintiff company other springs vested in the defendant Council, not included in the said place, and the defendant Council claims to have the same rights as are claimed in respect of the land shown on plan "A" to prevent the plaintiff company or anyone purchasing from it from building upon any of the said ground within a certain area round the said springs of an indefinite extent, and such as the defendant Council may choose to prescribe.

Wherefore the plaintiff company claims:

(a) A declaration as to the rights of the defendant Council to prevent the plaintiff company or purchasers from it from building upon the said estate, known as Oranjekicht, and referred to in Act No. 10 of 1899, and more particularly as to the property described in the said plan marked "A." and as to the rights of the plaintiff company to sub-divide and sell the said portion.

(b) An order compelling the defendant Council, within such time as this Honourable Court may appoint, to pass and approve of the said plan "A" upon the usual and proper terms and conditions as to drainage and road-making, or authorising the plaintiffs without such approval to proceed subject to such terms and conditions to sub-divide and sell the said portion of its property, and restraining the defendant Council from interfering with such sub-division and sale, the plaintiff company tendering to execute the said deed "B," and to have the same registered as a servitude against its title deeds, or to transfer the land shown coloured yellow on the plan "A" to the defendant Council, subject to the conditions as to building, and otherwise set forth in the draft deed marked "B."

(c) The sum of £1,000 as and for damages as aforesaid.

(d) Alternative relief.

(e) Costs of suit.

Defendants' plea, after making certain formal admissions, and putting plaintiffs to proof of certain allegations, went on to say:

6. It (the Council) admits that it has refused to pass the said plan, and says that its refusal is bona fide, and is lawful; and that the reason for its refusal is that it is in the interest of the inhabitants of the city, who are supplied with water from the said estate under the aforesaid award that the streams of water should not be polluted, and it says that building operations and buildings upon the land proposed by plaintiffs to be built upon are likely to cause such pollution; it denies that it has taken up or does take up the position that it may prescribe any area within which buildings may not be erected or building operations conducted, and says that its conduct has at all times been lawful and reasonable; it denies that plaintiffs have suffered any damage as alleged, and, save as above, it denies paragraphs 9, 10, and 11 thereof.

7. As to paragraph 12 thereof, it admits that there are other springs on the land which are vested in the defendant Council, and not shown on the said plan; it admits that it claims the right to prevent such building or other operations in the neighbourhood of the said springs as are calculated or likely to interfere with or pollute the public water supply; it is prepared at all times to pass and approve any sub-divisional plans or building plans which will not interfere with the water of these springs.

8. It annexes hereto marked "C" a plan showing the area which it considers should not be built upon in order that there may be no reasonable probability of pollution of the said water supply, and says it is, and has been, prepared to pass and approve plans for buildings in other respects satisfactory, outside the area marked A. B. C. D. E, upon the said plan; save as above it denies paragraph 12 thereof. Wherefore it prays that plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C., and Mr. Benjamin), was for plaintiffs; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), was for defendants.

Mr. Schreiner, in opening the case, said that this was an action instituted by the Oranjezicht Estates, Ltd., against the Town Council of Cape Town for a declaration of rights and damages, and for an order as set forth in the declaration. The plaintiffs were owners of the Oranjezicht Estate, which on divers occasions had been before the Court in regard to the strict entail which was imposed and the breaking of that entail by Act of Parliament. The entail was imposed under will, and subsequently the Town Council had acquired certain rights. Material to this case, it was necessary to mention the Act of 1882. There had been a previous breaking of the entail to a certain extent. By the Act of 1882 effect was given to an award of arbitrators which was made pursuant to a deed of submission to arbitration, dated August 8, 1881. Pursuant to that deed the Town Council obtained certain rights of water, springs, fountains, and streams on the Oranjezicht Estate, in consideration of a certain payment of money. Subsequently in 1899 the entail was finally broken by the Act of Parliament No. 10 of that year, and power was given to the then owner of the estate to sell and dispose of it, and he sold and disposed of it to the Oranjezicht Estates, Ltd. What that Act did was to authorise and empower the company to become owners of the property, and they were now the registered owners of the property, subject, of course, to whatever rights the Town Council had pursuant to the award of the arbitrators and the Act of Parliament of 1882. The company had, of course, purchased the estate for the purpose of cutting it into lots and selling those lots to various persons for the extension of the town in that direction. From time to time they had submitted plans to the Town Council which showed the streets as was necessary. According to the Town Council regulations no street could be laid out without the sanction of the Town Council, so that all sub-division plans required to be laid before the Town Council for its approval in respect of such streets and ways of communication and, of course, as regarded other matters, such as drainage and sewerage. This case raised apparently a question in relation to what might be called the building lots of the company, and in relation to the rights and powers of the Town Council to refuse its approval and sanction to a certain plan, which the Estate Company had presented for the consideration of the Town Council. Several plans were from time to time approved, and it would be important in the course of the case to note these facts, and to see what had been done under the same conditions in regard to other portions of the estate. In 1903 a plan, No. 5, was submitted, and the Town Council declined to give its consent to that plan as submitted, and declined to recognise the right of the company to sell its plots according to the plan. As the plan was originally submitted, the red lines which were at present on it were not shown. The Town Council objected, and returned one plan with a hatching upon it corresponding to what was shown on the plan in red, and they said that that land was not sold, but must be reserved. The company went into the Council's objection, and went so far as to say that with a view of obviating any litigation or dispute, they would block out the lots shown in yellow on the plan. They offered to execute a deed securing for all time that area from being alienated. By subsequent correspondence the company offered to transfer the area blocked out in yellow to the Town Council, with certain conditions as to erecting certain buildings, and not doing certain things that would make the neighbourhood unsightly. But the Town Council had maintained throughout the correspondence the position that it was entitled to insist that the land within the red lines should not be sold in building plots. The Council had made no proposal whatsoever to expropriate the land; it had made no offer at all of compensation; it simply took up the attitude of not being willing to give its sanction to plan No. 5 at all, unless the plaintiffs consented to allow the Council's contention that the ground within the red lines should not be sold for building purposes. That seemed to be quite an illegal position. Plaintiffs contended that it was an absolutely illegal position, and that nothing either in the deed of submission to arbitration and award thereon or in the Act of Parliament had authorised the Town Council to take up that attitude.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I see that £200 is payable by the Town Council to the Breda family. Is that now paid to the syndicate?]

No; it is specially reserved to the Bredas. This is really what one might call a case of conversion; it is not an out-and-out breaking of the entail, but it is a conversion of land to money.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is the Council's contention that there may be pollution of water from their springs?]

They say, not that it does pollute, but that if we sell this ground then there is danger of pollution to the springs. I would say, incidentally, that it appears to me that in truth the Town Council has the onus cast upon it to show why it should interfere with the rights of an owner who wants to sell his property in the way indicated on the plan.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I see that you have marked a portion of the homestead of the Bredas?]

Some is in the red portion and some is outside. Practically the whole house is within this area now. The facts show that above the red line are the old garden ground and the old kitchen. The drainage and sewage of the house has never at any time been guided away by the Town Council. I do not believe the house is now in actual occupation. Down below, in the patch that we have covered yellow, are the springs, each one of which is built in and the water from the different springs is collected in pipes and carried to a water house. Our contention is this, that in law they have no right, without expropriating our property, to a single inch of land, away from the springs themselves. They have no right whatever to say to us "We will take your land, and make it permanently useless to you, without paying you a penny of compensation," and we say that this risk of pollution, which is referred to, must be a very remote risk. Now, when we want to sell our ground to be built upon, for houses and other buildings, according to the Town Council regulations, we are told that there is a risk of pollution, and that we must not sell our ground. Giving all credit to the Town Council, for zeal and energy—it may not be zeal according to knowledge—but zeal and energy in the interests of a pure system of water, if they take upon themselves—

[De Villiers, C.J.: Very well; you had better postpone the argument until afterwards.]

Well, that is our contention. They would take our ground away from us. Not only this piece of ground, but other ground vested in the estate will become equally valueless practically.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You say there will be no risk of pollution?]

We say that there will not be any pollution that we can see will be reasonably apprehended. If the springs are lined and protected any possible risk of superficial pollution we say can easily be rectified.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that the onus was upon the defendant Council to prove its right to interfere with the land of the plaintiffs.

Mr. Searle said he could not admit that the onus was upon defendants, as they were given very wide powers by their Act.

De Villiers, C.J., said he thought it would be in the interests of all parties if the ordinary course of procedure were followed, and the plaintiffs opened the case.

Theodore de Villiers, of the firm of Marais and De Villiers, surveyors, spoke to certain contour plans of the Oranjezicht estate, which he had prepared, and which had been submitted to the Town Council. One of the plans was returned by Mr. Cook, the Engineer, showing certain portions hatched out. Witness had seen the plan annexed to the evidence given by Mr. Rolfe on commission in England. That plan was entirely erroneous. As to the land within the red lines on plan 5, which the Town Council had marked, there were no natural limits or facts on the ground to indicate why the Council should stop at the red area, except at the left side of the plan, where there was a clay bank. Witness had not seen any ridge, such as Mr. Rolfe mentioned in his evidence, in the neighbourhood of the piggery, duck pond, and the house drainage. The natural fall from the piggery, duck pond, etc., would be to the springs. The whole of the area within the red lines was manifestly an old garden and orchard. There was a large bed of clay that was impervious to water. If the springs rose from below the clay and came up above, they could be protected by making a lining of clay or a ditch. The soil was very porous. Above the red lines there was a very heavy bank of alluvial. A great deal of water would come by percolation to the springs from the watershed above. There were formerly old slave quarters on the ground. The area which the company proposed to reserve round the springs was one and a half acres; the area included in the red line, as shown by the Town Council, was five and a half acres. Good buildings had been erected on the estate on Belvedere-avenue, near to the Molteno Reservoir. The land would have made a good realisation in 1903. The land in question was the pick of the estate, and the company had lost a good deal of money by reason of the plans being hung up. The lines marked out by the Town Council affected a large area of property beyond the limits of the five and a half acre portion.

Mr. Thomas Olive, consulting engineer, Cape Town, and formerly Town Engineer, said that there was no such ridge as Mr. Rolfe referred to in his evidence. The ground above the alluvial patch towards the mountain was very steep, and the nature of the soil was such that the water would run off rapidly in case of heavy rains. If, according to Mr. Rolfe's evidence, the alluvial patch were a great reservoir, which fed the springs, there ought to be after rain a corresponding rise in the springs, but as a matter of fact the rise did not take place until months afterwards. Witness knew the houses built in Belvedere-avenue; those houses were within 40 yards of Molteno Reservoir. If proper precautions were taken, he did not think there should be any more danger of pollution above the main spring in the Oranjezicht estate than there was from the houses above the Molteno Reservoir. If the sewers were properly laid and properly tested in clay soil, there was no need to anticipate trouble from pollution. The sewerage arrangements of the old homestead were of the old-fashioned type. Foul water from the kitchen was brought within a few yards of the nearest spring, but whether it polluted the spring he could not say. He did not see why there should be any difficulty, with proper linings and so on, in obviating any danger of pollution of the springs on the Oranjezicht Estate.

In cross-examination, witness was asked by Mr. Searle what he would suggest to prevent the water travelling through the alluvial from being polluted, and going through into the springs?

Witness: You could meet it by a trench containing a concrete wall, backed with puddle. You would then deflect the water into the stormwater drains.

Witness (in further cross-examination) said that he entirely disagreed with what had been said as to the catchment area of the spring. It was, he maintained, impossible to define a catchment area of a spring. He did not think that the proposed street, Westminster-avenue, came within a few feet of one of the springs; he should say it would be 40 yards away. He was referring to the main spring.

Mr. Searle: Yes, but it is within 20 feet of the Vineyard spring.

Cross-examination continued: With properly modern sewers, it was very rarely indeed that one came upon leakages. He did not think there was any danger of pollution from the sewers to the vineyard spring. Sewers could be made as tight nowadays as water mains. It was not a common experience that leakages were constantly taking place from sewers; if the sewers were properly laid the danger from pollution was practically nil. It was possible to construct a sewer which would not leak, and thus there was no danger to a spring even at a distance of 20 feet from the sewer.

Mr. Searle: It may be possible, but it is not probable?

Witness: Oh dear, yes; you must use safeguards. Further cross-examined, witness said he could not imagine the loamy ground holding water for two or three months. Witness did not think that, from a sanitary point of view, there would be any greater amount of surface sewage by reason of buildings being erected, because when a place was modernised, by laying out proper streets and sewers, with paved yards and so on, it was in a better state than when mere bush.

Frank Molteno, land surveyor, having given evidence,

Edward H. Melville, surveyor, Johannesburg, said that he had been connected with the investigations for water supply on the mines in Johannesburg. He knew the Oranjezicht Estate. Witness described the geological features of the estate. All the springs in question that were now running were, he believed, deep seated; judging from the surface ground, he did not think any sub-surface springs were running at present. Witness found that when the rainfall was at its maximum, the yield from the springs was at its minimum. He did not find any signs of the water percolating across the alluvial to the springs. In reference to Mr. Rolfe's evidence, witness considered it was absolutely absurd to draw conclusions from a geographical watershed, when one was estimating the flow of springs. Any risk of pollution would be obviated by making a watertight trench.

Cross-examined: The water that came down to the spring would fall on the catchment area. The springs followed the rainfall at a period of from 3½ to 4 months. A great deal of the water must come from beyond the geographical catchment area. He did not think there would be as much danger of pollution if the ground were properly sewered, as there would be from the ground as it was at present. The woods above the spring were at present in a filthy condition.

Re-examined: Witness only suggested that a trench should be built as a precaution against any possible contamination.

Edward Ridge Syfret (chairman of the plaintiff company) said that the Town Council first took up their hostile attitude in June, 1903. Since that time the matter had been hung up. He should say that there had been a depreciation of 25 per cent. in the value of land of that kind since 1903.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There has been a very long period intervening before action was brought?]

Mr. Schreiner: A very long correspondence took place.

Witness (in further evidence) said that in the meantime other parts of the estate had been opened up, and many houses had been built. The company had been intending to sell pursuant to the plan, and witness knew of no reason, apart from the Council's objection, why they should not have proceeded to sell. There was a great delay in dealing with these matters on the part of the Town Council. There was an attempt throughout to come to some reasonable settlement, and avoid coming into Court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What would be the value of the land that the Council wish to be reserved?]

Witness: They are reserving what is really the pick of the estate. Perhaps counsel would tell me how many lots there are in the area in question?

Mr. Schreiner said that there were 21 lots, independently of what was offered by the company.

Witness said that the value of the lots in 1903, having regard to the prices raised for other lots, was about £400 per lot. That £400 they would have got by selling off, and auction. They would have sold the lots off by degrees. The company had lost heavy sums of money owing to the delay. He did not say that they could have sold the whole of those lots, but they could have sold a considerable portion.

Cross-examined: The company had developed other parts of the estate. He did not think there was much delay occasioned by communication with the board in London. The company's surveyors thought that another portion of the estate would be absolutely valueless to them under the arrangement proposed by the Council.

Mr. Searle: There was a portion that the Town Council proposed should be given as a recreation ground?

Witness: It was very good of the Town Council to propose to make a recreation ground at our expense.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It might increase the value of the other land.]

Witness: I do not think it would; it might to a certain extent, but it would be very costly to us.

Mr. Searle: The Town Council take up the position that you are doing this at their expense.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Robert Owen Wynne Roberts, City Water Engineer, said it was originally on his recommendation that the Town Council objected to this area being built upon. Notification of the Council's objection was given to the company immediately. Witness objected to the plaintiff's plan owing to the danger of pollution to three springs—two called the Vineyard and the other the Main Spring. The springs had been enjoyed by the town for a period long antecedent to 1882. The danger that he foresaw in this matter was leaky drains, leaks from the pavements about the houses, and generally soakage from the habitations into the ground, and then finding its way into the springs. Speaking as a practical man, he considered that it was quite impossible to guarantee that sewers would not leak. He thought there was more danger from sewers than from surface drainage. In regard to Belvedere-avenue, witness thought there was a certain amount of danger to the Molteno Reservoir, and had he then known what he knew now he thought he should have advised the Council to oppose the construction of the houses so near the reservoir. Witness gave evidence in regard to observations made after pits had been sunk in various parts of the ground. He was satisfied that the water in the springs came through the alluvial in the depression. He presented statistics as to the discharge of the springs which, he said, showed that the springs rose according to the rainy seasons within a period of seven days. Witness did not consider that the springs were deep. The time occupied in affecting the springs after rain was an indication to him that they were surface springs. Witness believed that the main spring had been in use by the town since about 1730. The nearest distance from the springs to the proposed streets was 20 feet. The area proposed by the Council was the least possible for the safety of the springs. The average given by Mr. Roffe was the average of springs arising on the Oranjezicht estate and springs outside. The map upon which Mr. Roffe gave his evidence was purely and simply for military purposes; since then a more elaborate map had been prepared. Witness saw nothing in the nature of pollution in the valley calling for attention.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The springs were fed from the catchment area of 150 acres. Taking the average rainfall at 40 inches, there would be a fall on the area of 134,000,000 gallons per annum. It was quite possible the springs were fed from other valleys, but the springs need not necessarily be deep-seated. Before the springs would respond to the rain, it would require a steady fall of an inch to an inch and a half. While steady inches fell from January to March, allowance would have to be made for the parched state of the ground. A paper by Mr. Wood on the rainfalls between 1863-1882 in the possession of the plaintiff company was not prepared for the edification of the City Corporation, but for the Institute of Civil Engineers, to which Mr. Wood belonged. The water from the springs was very pure, but witness was unaware that the City Corporation had allowed a brickmaking concern to construct a latrine in a deep hollow near the springs. That would have no influence on the water, and at no time were pigeries within the catchment area. He was unaware that as many as 30 pigs were kept there at one time. A duck-pond, when empty, was a dirty thing, but he did not think that it had contaminated the water. He could not say if refuse from a house there had had anything to do with the outbreak of typhoid in the city.

Thomas Wilson Cairncross, at one time City Engineer, said that from work conducted in the area in question he had come to the conclusion that soaking rains affected the springs.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The water from the spring bubbled up from below, and as the hole he sunk increased in depth, so did the water bubble up.

Robert (harter), a civil engineer, with eight years' experience of South Africa, thought the spring was fed by rain falling on the superficial catchment, and by some other source, of which little was known at present. It would be most dangerous if the Corporation passed the plans submitted by the plaintiff company. Underground drainage was more dangerous than surface drainage. The cutting of "benches" for house sites would render the access of underground drainage much more easier than it was at present.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The springs were not largely influenced by the rainfall. Sewage per se would not cause typhoid. If he were to take charge of this area he would allow no piggeries to be on it.

Andrew Young, professor of the Geological Department of the South African College, stated that he had particularly studied the geological aspect of this valley. He produced a diagram, and gave evidence on the composition of the valley. On the general marks of a deep seated spring the water should contain in solution mineral ingredients derived from its long passage through the rocks. It absorbed to some extent the substance in the rocks, and the temperature in a really deep seated spring was higher than that of a spring from the sub-soil. The temperature of the main spring that morning was 63 degrees. If the spring was really a deep seated one the temperature ought to have been higher.

Dr. Marloth stated that on the 18th April he took a sample of the water from the main spring at the request of the Town Council. The water contained some mineral ingredients, but he could not say how far it came from. If sewers were laid within twenty or forty feet of the main spring, they would be a great source of danger; in fact, it would be criminal to do such a thing. The danger from the sewers would be infinitely larger than any pollution on the surface. In his opinion it would be safer to reserve a larger area than that proposed by the Town Council.

By His Lordship: He could not say at what depth the spring began to rise.

Dr. Jasper Anderson, Medical Officer of Health for Cape Town, said to lay sewers within forty feet of the springs would be a most dangerous experiment. With the best of supervision, workmanship, and material it was difficult to prevent leakage. The area proposed by the Council ought to be reserved at any rate. The Town Council already had experience of pollution in a stream through a large number of houses erected above.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The area proposed to be reserved by the Council would minimise the danger. There might be a risk even above the line stipulated. It was too dangerous an experiment to subject it to even weekly tests. He did not like the idea of "piggeries" there.

John Cook, City Engineer, stated at the present time there were no drainage pipes laid to the limit proposed to be reserved. In June, 1903, he reported against the plan because he thought it would prejudice their rights, and he was still of that opinion.

Dr. Gregory, Medical Officer of Health for the Colony, was also of opinion that there would be great danger of pollution to the springs from soakage from yards and leakage from drains. It was possible to make sewers watertight, but it would be a difficult thing to keep them in that condition. The danger would be considerably lessened by the area proposed to be reserved by the Town Council.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Even if the stream was slightly polluted, filter beds would obviate the danger. The River Thames received a tremendous amount of sewage. Yet, the water from there was properly filtered.

J. R. Finch (Town Clerk) stated that in May, 1902, the matter came before committees of the Town Council, and subsequently it was again brought forward, but on the advice of the Engineer and the medical officers, it was decided to oppose it.

Nicholas van Breda, son of the late Dirk van Breda, who was the owner of the Oranjezicht Estate, gave evidence as to the transaction with the Council in respect of the spring. As long as he was on the property there was no drain from the piggery to the springs.

Michael Alexander Wm. Breda, also gave evidence as to the alteration of the sewage system on the estate.

Mr. Searle closed his case, and after some discussion as to the digging of a trial pit adjacent to Westminster Avenue.

Mr. Schreiner: First of all as to the law on this question. The Town Council has misconceived its position. The plaintiffs are proprietors of a certain estate, and they cannot be estopped from subdividing their property save by law or by contract. (See Act 26 of 1893.) If the Town Council objects to the land in question being used for any specific purpose they expropriate it. As to the other part of my argument: the deed of submission is the foundation of whatever rights the Town Council may possess. (See Act 23 of 1882.) This Act is virtually a contract between the parties. Section 1 must be read together with the deed of submission to arbitration.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Your predecessor in title gave the Town Council the right to use this spring. Your client can have no greater rights than those of Breda. If building on this property would lead to the pollution of the spring, surely the Town Council could prohibit it.]

All this should have been provided for by filtering beds. I do not say that we are entitled to commit a nuisance, and admit that we must not pollute the water. Tulbagh Municipality v. Morrees (2, C.T.R. 184). Our point is that there is no servitude over the land, further than that we cannot be allowed to commit a nuisance.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you say that you would be entitled to build around the spring?]

Not in such a way as to interfere with the waterworks. The evidence shows that the Town Council might take any amount of land. That is absurd. It is the duty of corporations to overcome sanitary difficulties, e.g., to make filtering beds and so forth, if required, and not to cast the burden on private people. In Cable Company v. Tramway Company expert evidence was heard at length, and there the Court refused an interdict. Now we contend that unless very strong proof is adduced in this case to justify an interdict the defendants cannot succeed.

[Counsel proceeded to argue on the facts as to the non-pollution of the water.]

As to the land, see Breda v. Town Council. The judgment of Smith, J., bears on this case.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You do not deny that the effect of these buildings would be to pollute the water?]

If so they must either sue us for nuisance or expropriate.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The onus seems to be on the Town Council.]

Exactly, and so I contended in opening the case.

Mr. Searle: I do not admit that the onus is on the Town Council. They might have applied for an interdict, as Act 26 of 1893 gives us a right to object to sub-division.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You might have asked for an interdict to restrain them from selling building lots.]

The Court will not interfere with the discretion of the Town Council, but see Heynes v. Municipality of Rondebosch (11 C.T.R., 792) and Russell v. Municipality of Rondebosch (15 C.T.R., 253).

[De Villiers, C.J.: You must use your discretion in a judicial manner.]

The Court has often left such matters in the hands of Town Councils. See Estate Russell v. Rondebosch Municipality (15 C.T.R., 253), Heynes' case, and Clark v. Cape Town Town Council (4 C.T.R., 42).

[De Villiers, C.J.: I have no idea of compelling the Council to consent to these buildings, but I will grant a declaration of rights.]

The Town Council has supervision of the public health. Even if the water did not belong to the Council the Council could prevent it from being polluted.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Should the Town Council refuse to sanction these buildings, may we not say that they have acted from ulterior motives?]

Very strong evidence would be required to prove that. Short v. Cape Town Town Council (8 C.T.R., 224) and Saacks Bros. v. Rondebosch Municipality (13 C.T.R., 52). These cases show that the Court will not interfere unless a Town Council has acted not only improperly but corruptly. In Town Council v. Shenker (12 C.T.R., 120) the Court did interfere. See also Act 26 of 1893, Section 120, Sub-sections (2) and (10), Town Council Regulations Book, 14 to 22; Act 25 of 1897, Section 1; 41 of 1899, Section 1 (as to the definition of the term "New Street") and 41 of 1899, Section 7.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The regulation you have put in refers to old streets, and not to the making of new ones.]

No, see Sections 14 and 17; we have power to stop the making of any streets. In this matter the highest expert authorities available, all report unfavourably. What more could the Council do? Then again, as to the position the Council has taken up as proprietor. When we acquired this property it was not contemplated that a village would be built there.

[De Villiers, C.J.: On what did you rely?]

On Act 23 of 1882, Section 1.

[Counsel proceeded to argue at length on facts.]

The rights secured by the deed of submission are wider than the terms of the Act. The entail to Breda was very strict. He could not have let the property. As to pollution, the Council is not bound to show that the water has been polluted. Expert evidence has been called to show that some catchment area should be provided, and our case is that the area provided is insufficient. Melville's evidence shows that he anticipated the possibility of pollution. It has been argued for the other side that there is no property in running water. Young, Marloth and other witnesses all agree that the area proposed to be reserved is too small. Should the applicants be allowed to build right up to the stream, what right would the Council have? It could not warn occupiers off the property should it find that the water is being polluted. The Council has chosen the right moment for taking action, and the Court (I submit) will decide in our favour. The Woodstock case cited on the other side differs widely from this case. There Dr. Gregory said that drains would always leak. The case of the Cable Company is also different; see the judgment of De Villiers, C.J., in the case. The right to have water includes the right not to have that water polluted; see Goddard on Easements (n. 96 and 268, and cases there cited).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you abide by your offer?]

Oh yes. I might have taken my argument much further, but the defendants cannot be in a better position than Breda was. As to the underground water, see Ballard v. Tomlinson (26 Ch. D. 194, and 29, Ch. D. 115).

Mr. Schreiner, in reply, said that his learned friend had put forward a new case in part of his argument. It would be extremely prejudicial to the plaintiffs, he submitted, if the new case which his learned friend had endeavoured to press upon the Court's attention were allowed to be raised upon the pleadings that were now before the Court. It was not pleaded that they (defendants) had all rights to subterranean water, that they had rights to streams of water under the soil, and that those streams were the sources of their springs. The defendants had tried to raise the case that all the subterranean water on the estate was their sources of water. If that part of his learned friend's argument were to weigh with the Court, then he (Mr. Schreiner) should be allowed to meet that case.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The effect of Mr. Searle's argument has been very much to shake the opinion that I expressed that the onus lay upon the Council to prove that the necessary result would be to pollute the water. Would the Court interfere with the decision of the Town Council, as the health authority in a matter concerning the public health, unless there were impropriety on the part of the Council? Would not the onus lie upon the plaintiffs to prove that it was an improper decision?]

Mr. Schreiner submitted that the decisions of the Court pointed in the opposite direction to that argued for by his learned friend. In this case there was an attempt to interfere with a man who was making use of his proprietary rights in a perfectly proper fashion. All the cases relied on by Mr. Searle went to show that the Court would not on motion interfere to compel the Town Council to pass plans unless it were shown that there was improper conduct by the Council. But those decisions did not touch a man's legal remedy by action for a declaration of rights. He submitted that the onus could not be thrown upon the plaintiffs to prove a negative, viz., that there would be no apprehension of pollution.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is not a negative. The onus is upon you to prove that the consent of the Council has been wrongfully withheld. It is an important point with me as to where the onus lies.]

Mr. Schreiner contended that the onus rested upon the Town Council from the first to testify an invasion of private rights. Counsel having quoted a number of authorities,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (June 1st).

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff company is the owner of the Oranjezicht Estate, which is situated on the northern slopes of Table Mountain, and which, before the year 1882 belonged to the Van Breda family, subject to an entail. By Act 23 of 1882 a portion of the estate was released from entail, and all the springs and sources of water on the estate were declared to be vested in the defendant Council, with the right to dig, bore, excavate, and otherwise open up and carry out all such works on the estate as may be found necessary for the said purposes, and to construct filtering beds and all other works required to collect the waters of the estate and to lay down pipes in, on, and across the estate, so as to lead out the waters for the use of the city of Cape Town. For the acquisition of such rights and privileges the Act directed that the Council shall, in terms of an award previously made upon a deed of submission executed between the Council and the then proprietor, pay to the then proprietor and all future proprietors of the estate the sum of £700 per annum. Among the conditions agreed to by the parties to the deed of submission were the following: "That the said Town Council shall not be at liberty to enter upon or take possession for the purpose of constructing filtering beds, cisterns, or catchpits of any portion of the estate now under cultivation, or which has at any time previous to the 1st of January, 1881, been under cultivation as a garden, orchard, or vineyard, without the consent of the proprietor." "That in all cases where the Town Council shall construct or lay down drainage or water-pipes across roads or cultivated lands on the estate, such pipes shall be at least two feet below the natural surface of the soil, and the ground at such places shall be restored by the Council at their own expense to its original condition." By Act 10 of 1899 the then proprietor of the estate was authorised to sell the estate, and it was enacted that upon the completion of the sale and the payment of the price the entail of fidei-commisum should be removed. The plaintiff company thereafter bought the estate and duly paid the purchase price. The purchase was made with the view to sub-divide the estate and sell it in lots. From time to time the plaintiff company has sub-divided portions of the estate into lots, which have been sold after the sub-divisions had been duly approved of by the defendant Council under the powers conferred on it by its Act of Incorporation (No. 26 of 1893, section 170, sub-sections 2 and 10). Being desirous of selling some more lots, the company submitted to the Council a plan of subdivision, by which that portion of the estate which immediately surrounds the main spring and a few other minor springs was reserved to the use of the Council, and 57 new lots, situated at a higher level than the springs, were laid out for future sale. The Council refused to approve of the plan, their refusal being based entirely upon the ground that, in the opinion of the Council, the sale of lots above the springs would lead to the pollution of the springs. The Council, however, was prepared to consent to the sub-division if a considerable extent of land above the springs were excluded from the area destined for building lots. The length of the strip of land claimed to be excluded is about 550 feet, and the breadth about 350 feet. It is the most valuable portion of the estate, consisting, as it does, mainly of alluvial soil, which had been utilised by the former proprietors for orchards, vineyards, and gardens. Beneath that alluvial soil, there is an impervious clay, consisting of decomposed clay slate, which is visible at the bottom of a trench which years ago was dug across the strip of land, and which is also visible at the surface on both sides of the strip of land in question. At a higher level than the strip of land, the soil is of the same nature, and if there is risk of pollution from the building of houses upon the strip of land, there would also be a risk of pollution, although in a somewhat lesser degree, from the building of houses above the strip of land, to which no objection is raised by the Council. The main object of the action is to have the respective rights of the parties declared, and the plea is to the effect that buildings upon the strip of land are likely to cause pollution of the springs.

I quite concur in the view that if the pollution of the springs might reasonably be anticipated as a consequence of the erection of buildings on the strip of land, notwithstanding all due precautions that may be taken by the Council, under its wide statutory powers, to ensure a proper system of sewerage, the plaintiff company would not be entitled to relief. The company has no greater rights than its predecessor in title, from whom the estate was purchased, enjoyed. He received ample consideration for the cession of the right to the springs, and he would not have been allowed to do any acts on the estate by which the cession would have been rendered useless and of no avail. The burthen, however, of proving that any legal acts of ownership would constitute a culpa, or would make the cession of no avail, would lie upon the Council. It was clearly intended that he should be allowed to continue the cultivation of the land above the springs, and if the injurious effects of such cultivation could be prevented by means of proper precautions on the part of the Council it would be the duty of the Council to take such precautions, although they might entail some expense. Part of his dwelling house stood within the land in question, and he could not well have been asked to remove that part without, at all events, the clearest possible proof that its continued existence was a source of danger, which no reasonable precautions on the part of the Council could avert. The plaintiff company purchased the estate with the avowed object of selling it in building lots, and, finding no restrictions on the title deeds against building, it might fairly have concluded that the land in question could be utilised for building purposes. The question then arises whether, notwithstanding any reasonable precautions which might be taken, the public health would be endangered by the proposed sale of the lots in question. A great deal of interesting evidence has been produced on both sides from a meteorological, geological, geographical, medical, and engineering point of view, as to the sources and the depth of the springs, as to the risk of pollution from sewers above the springs, and as to the possibility of minimising such risk and neutralising the effect of any pollution. I have given the evidence most careful consideration, but, without entering into details, it is sufficient for me to say that, in my opinion, the springs are deep-seated springs, that with proper precautions there would be no appreciable danger of contamination as a result of buildings being constructed on the strip of land in question, and that any possible contamination would be so slight that it could be rendered harmless by a proper system of filtration. The fallacy which underlies a great deal of the scientific evidence given on behalf of the Council is the supposition that the catchment area for the water flowing over the surface of the plaintiff company's land is the same as the area the rainfall on which feeds the springs. With the information before the Court it is quite impossible to say where the water which rises in the springs really comes from. It is quite certain, however, that the vast bulk of that water is fed by rains which fall at a very much greater distance from the springs than the strip of land in question. There is just a possibility that some of the rain which falls on the strip of land may percolate to the springs, but as these springs are deep-seated and as the land surrounding the springs slopes considerably, such percolation may be prevented by either constructing a concrete wall across the valley above the springs or by lining the sides of the wells, beneath which the springs issue to a sufficient depth. There is a further possibility that sewers laid in the strip of land might leak and pollute the percolating water, but the matter of drainage and sewerage is entirely in the hands of the Council, and with the large powers of control conferred upon it by the legislature it ought surely to be possible for the Council to see that a proper drainage system is adopted that the sewers are well constructed and periodically inspected, and that contamination from this source is rendered impossible. If, notwithstanding these precautions, any noxious matter should reach the springs it would be so infinitesimal that, with proper filtration all possibility of danger would be removed. That these precautions would be required, even if the plaintiff company should be prevented from selling any part of the strip of land for building purposes is clear from the evidence given on behalf of the defendant Council itself. According to some of the defendant Council's witnesses, great part of the water comes down from the mountain to the springs in subterranean streams by means of veins or fissures. If, as contended for by the defendant, these subterranean streams are liable to contamination from soakage through the alluvial soil on the strip of land in question, they would be equally liable to contamination at a higher level. A system of filtration would, in any event, be necessary, and such filtration would be quite sufficient to prevent any danger from any possible pollution that might affect the springs. If the plaintiff company is prevented from building on the strip of land there is a certainty that it will suffer serious loss by being prevented from utilising the most valuable portion of its property for the purpose for which the property was bought. If, on the other hand, buildings are allowed to be erected on the land there exists a remote possibility that notwithstanding a complete system of drainage, and inspection of drains, a leakage may occur, causing an infinitesimally small quantity of polluted matter to reach the springs, but such slight pollution may be rendered innocuous by a system of filtration which would, under any circumstances, become necessary. But supposing that this forecast should hereinafter prove to be incorrect, the Council will still retain the right to prevent anything being done by the purchasers of lots by reason of which polluted matter might reach the springs. It is true that in Struben v. Waterworks Company (9, Juta, 68) this court has decided that a person may dig a well on his own land, even if he thereby diminishes the water supply of his neighbour, but it does not follow that he may allow polluted matter to flow from his own land, either above or below the surface of the ground, on to his neighbour's land. It would be an act of culpa on the part of an upper proprietor to use his land in such a way as to allow injurious matter from his land to contaminate a lower proprietor's springs, and for similar acts of negligence, our law has always held the doer responsible; But the Court would never restrain a person from making an otherwise lawful use of his land merely because there exists a remote possibility that at some future time negligence in such use of the land may result in damage to another.

Although the defence mainly relied upon by the plea is the alleged danger of pollution from the proposed sub-division of the land, the defendant's counsel, in his argument, has relied upon two grounds of defence, which I shall now proceed to consider. Reliance is placed on the 1st section of the Act 23 of 1882, which vests in the Council all the water-springs and other sources of water on the estate, and it is contended that by allowing buildings to be constructed on the strip of land in question the plaintiff company would prevent the Council from tapping the sources of water-supply thereon. If this contention were to prevail, it would be practically impossible for the company to sell any portion of the estate for building purposes, for there might be sources of water-supply upon every portion of the estate. The preamble to the Act says that it had been found necessary that the Council should acquire the right and title to and the ownership of "the several springs of water rising on the said estate," and it states the fact that the amount of compensation to be paid had been referred to arbitrators mutually appointed. The deed of submission—which fully states the terms of the contract between Van Breda and the Council—makes it clear that what was intended to be transferred was all Van Breda's "right, title, or interest in and to all and every the water-springs, fountains, and springs on the estate." Such a transfer would not carry with it the right for all future time to enter upon any portion of the estate for the purpose of opening springs or tapping the sources of water-supply. Springs, fountains, or streams which were known to exist at the date of the contract vest in the Council, which has the right to utilise such streams of water and to dig, bore, or excavate the springs or fountains, and to perform all such other works as may be necessary for conserving and distributing the water. It is true that one of the conditions mentioned in the deed of submission is that the Council shall not be at liberty to take possession of any portion of the estate then under cultivation for the purpose of constructing filtering-beds, cisterns, or catchpits, but I do not infer from this condition that the Council was intended to have the right to open up fresh springs on portions of the estate then under cultivation. It would rather appear that the reason why the opening up of unknown springs was not also prohibited was because it was assumed that only known springs, fountains, and streams had been sold. The main ground of defence, however, relied upon by Mr. Searle is that, in the absence of any allegation of bad faith on the part of the Council, the Court has no power to interfere with the discretion of the Council in the exercise of its statutory power to grant or withhold its approval of plans for laying out streets or constructing buildings. He has cited several cases in which the Court refused to compel municipal bodies to give their consent to such plans, but in none of them was it laid down that the discretion of a public body in the exercise of statutory powers such as are now in question is an unlimited one. On the contrary, the Court has more than once expressed the opinion that powers given to a public body for one purpose cannot be used for ulterior purposes which were not contemplated at the time when the powers were conferred. In the case of Dutch Reformed Church v. Town Council (15 S.C.C., 14) an objection was raised by the Council to an award of arbitrators who had assessed the amount of compensation payable for land which the Council had expropriated. The objection was that the land could not be valued as a building site because the Council possessed the statutory power of withholding its consent to the building of shops and offices on the site. I always feel great reluctance to quote passages from my own judgments, but the remarks made by me in that case are so appropriate to the present case that I cannot do better than repeat them. "The contention," it was said, "is a startling one, and, if supported, will have far-reaching consequences. . . . Where, as in the present case, the plans are approved of, it would be preposterous to hold that the Council may withhold its consent for the purpose of obtaining the land cheaply. It was never intended that powers given for one purpose should be held in terrorem to compel owners of land to come to terms in connection with expropriation, which is a power given for a wholly different purpose." The purposes for which persons intending to lay out new streets are required to deposit plans for the Council's approval may be gathered from the 2nd and 10th subsections of section 170 of Act 26 of 1893. The Council may make regulations "for regulating the level, width, direction, and construction of new streets made by the Council or by owners of private property, and the sewerage or drainage thereof," and "for regulating the giving of notices, and the deposit for the Council's approval of plans and sections by persons intending to lay out streets or to alter or construct buildings." In deciding whether the level, width, direction, construction, sewerage, and drainage of new streets conform to the standards laid down by the Council, that body performs its legitimate functions, and this Court would not, except on clear proof of bad faith, interfere with its decisions. Where, however, a dispute arises between the Council and the proposer of plans, which has no immediate reference to the conformity of the plans to the ordinary requirements of the Council, that dispute cannot be settled merely by the Council withholding its consent to the plans. In the same way as the Council cannot claim to expropriate land cheaply by holding out the threat that it would not allow such land to be built upon, it cannot, by refusing to approve of a plan of sub-division, obtain a settlement in its favour of a dispute as to whether building upon the land would pollute springs belonging to the Council. The other party to the dispute is entitled to have it settled by a court of law, and cannot be deprived of this right by the exercise on the part of the Council of powers conferred upon it for a wholly different purpose. In the case of Clark v. Town Council of Cape Town (4, C.T.R., 42), the Court refused to compel the Council to consent to certain alterations in a building, although it was suggested that consent had been withheld with the object of inducing the applicant to accept the amount of compensation which had been offered by the Council for the removal of the stoep. It is clear, however, from the judgment that if the suggestion had been supported by adequate proof the Court would have granted some relief to the applicant. In the present case the defendant's counsel has candidly admitted that the defendant could not object to the plan except on the ground that the effect of building on the proposed lots would be to pollute the water supply. He did not, of course, admit that the Council acted mala fide or was actuated by improper motives, but the legitimate inference from the admission is that if it should be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the pollution of the springs cannot be reasonably anticipated as a consequence of the approval of the plan of sub-division, the Council would not be justified in withholding such approval. I am satisfied from the evidence that if the ordinary precautions which would be necessary even if the strip of land were not built upon be taken by the Council there will be no additional risk of pollution of the springs from the land being built upon. As such additional risk of pollution is the sole ground upon which the consent to the plan of sub-division has hitherto been withheld, I am of opinion that the further withholding of such consent would be illegal as being an exercise of a power conferred on the Council for a wholly different object from that which it seeks to attain by the exercise of such power. After this expression of opinion I feel sure that it will not be necessary to do more at this stage than to declare that if the Council shall not within one month after the submission of detailed plans approve of plan A attached to the declaration upon the usual and proper terms as to the level, width, direction, construction, sewerage, and drainage of the proposed new streets, the plaintiff company, after again tendering transfer to the Council of the portion marked yellow on the said plan, shall be at liberty to proceed with the sub-division in the same manner as if the requisite consent had been duly obtained. In regard to the claim for damages, there is no conclusive evidence that loss has actually been sustained by reason of the defendant Council's delay in approving of the plans. The defendant Council will bear the costs of this action.

Ex parte CUTLER AND MARSDEN, TRADING AS CUTLER AND MARSDEN.

Mr. Upton moved, as a matter of urgency, for a temporary interdict restraining Messrs Zoutendyk and Co. from paying over to one, Mrs. Jubb the proceeds of certain sale of furniture at Leeds Houses, No. 1, Rieboek-square. Petitioners said that they had let to Eliza Jubb, married to Richard J. Jubb, certain premises in Rieboek-square at a rental of £22 10s. per month, subsequently reduced to £15, and afterwards to £13. The rental included the use of certain furniture belonging to petitioners. There was now due to petitioners the rent for April and May, viz., £26. Petitioners called attention to an advertisement in the "Cape Times" of a sale of furniture at Leeds Houses, No. 1, and said that certain furniture and effects had been disposed of by Messrs. Zoutendyk and Co. for £22 3s.

Rule nisi granted, returnable on Thursday, May 3, calling upon respondent to show cause why an interdict should not be granted as prayed, rule to be served on auctioneers as well as respondent, and to operate as a temporary interdict, Messrs. Zoutendyk and Co. to show cause why they shall not retain the sum of £48 pending an action to be brought by petitioners.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

MOORE V. MOORE. } 1906.
 } May 1st.

This was an action brought by Henry George Moore against his wife, Mary Jane Moore, for divorce, on the ground of her adultery. Mr. Rowson was for the plaintiff, and the defendant had been barred.

Henry George Moore, plaintiff, of Somerset West, stated he was married to the defendant at St. Mark's, Silverton, London, on the 14th June, 1891. A year later he left for South Africa with his wife's consent. Witness sent the defendant half of his earnings. The defendant, against the wishes of the plaintiff, subsequently took a position as a stewardess. In September last he received a letter from his daughter, and on account of it discontinued the payments to his wife. On the last occasion he heard of his wife she was a stewardess on the S.S. Owestry Grange, travelling between Liverpool and Buenos Ayres.

The daughter, a girl of tender years, gave evidence to the effect that in September last for four days a man named Jack Maybrick occupied the same room as her mother at a house in Silverton, London, E. On account of that she wrote a letter to her father, which was produced.

Decree of divorce granted, the plaintiff to have the custody of the child.

SANDERS V. METROPOLITAN TRAMWAY COMPANY.

This was an action brought by William King Sanders, in forma pauperis, to recover from the defendants £400 damages by reason of their negligence in reconstructing certain tram lines in Sir Lowry-road, through which the plaintiff sustained injuries in a trap accident.

From the declaration it appeared that on the 1st August last plaintiff was being driven by a friend from Woodstock to Cape Town along Sir Lowry-road. When they came to a spot in Sir Lowry-road opposite Rosen's corner, where the Tramway Company was repairing the line, there was a lot of loose stones on the road. At this spot the mountain side of the track was laid five to nine inches above the level of the street. When they came to that spot plaintiff saw a tramcar coming towards him on the left-hand side of the track, and he had to turn off to make way. In going off from the rails to the street below, the shaft of the trap broke, and the horse as a consequence ran away for about 300 yards, and then the right-hand wheel of the trap struck the rail, which was lying between the two tracks, and the cart was upset in the excavations. The plaintiff and his friend were thrown out, and suffered injuries.

The defendants' plea set out that the work was done under the supervision of the City Council, and that there was not a disused rail lying between the tracks. There was no negligence on the part of the defendants. The City Council was repairing the road, which action had been rendered necessary, and while the Council was at work the defendants had their rails re-graded. There were no barricades erected, the company not being compelled to erect them. The cart in which plaintiff was travelling was unfit to travel over such ground. The negligence of the driver caused the accident.

Mr. Watermeyer for plaintiff; Mr. Molteno for defendants.

James Wolland, an architect and surveyor, said that he made a plan of the vicinity ten days after the accident.

Cross-examined by Mr. Molteno, witness said that a Mr. Muzlak had got him to draw the plan, and he had had to sue Muzlak for the money. He could not say that three carts could proceed paralld to each other between kerb and track at the scene of the accident. In any case no light trap could travel over such a number of loose heavy stones.

By Maasdorp, J.: He did not see the track ten days before the accident.

William Sanders, a coachbuilder, of Woodstock, said that on August 1 he was driven in an American trap, drawn by a low-spirited bay horse, that used to work with another horse in a pantechnicon, by a Mr. Muzlak, from Woodstock towards Cape Town. Near Rosen's corner only one tram line was open for traffic. Plaintiff's friend drove along the track, and in making way for a Woodstock-bound car, the accident occurred. Plaintiff was removed to the Casualty Ward, where he was stitched and bandaged. For the next fortnight he was confined to his house, and received medical attention. His left knee was denuded of skin, the right was grazed, there was a big out in the thick part of one of his legs, two cuts on the head, and his ribs ached very much. His injuries precluded him from working at his trade. His usual earnings were from £20 to £25 per mensem, but between August and December last year he earned only £5. Soon after the accident he wrote to Mr. Giles, of the defendant company, but to his letter, as also to those of his attorney, no reply was accorded.

Mr. Watermeyer: Have you seen the horse used for any heavy weights?

Witness: I have seen Muzlak taking his wife out in it.

Is she a heavy woman?—Yes; I should say so.

And which side does she get in?—On the left side.

So that would be a good test for the shaft?—Yes.

Cross-examined by Mr. Molteno: The picture plaintiff was carrying in the trap was not as big as the etching of the "Defence of Rorke's Drift" (produced). Plaintiff and Muzlak drove on to the tram track near the Toll Gate, because the road on the mountain side was impassable for a light trap. He did not know that the shaft of the cart had been broken before. Witness knew nothing of a letter written by an attorney of the Supreme Court asking for adequate compensation on account of witness's likelihood to be permanently injured. Witness was acquitted on a charge of stealing a ring and a bracelet, and he was under arrest when Dr. Engelbacht discharged him from the Roeland-street Gaol on the 23rd August as entirely cured.

Re-examined by Mr. Watermeyer: The conveyance of the picture would not interfere with the driving.

Felix Muzlak, furniture remover, said the bogey was quite sound. The shaft never was broken. The plaintiff was asked to accompany witness with a picture, and when opposite Rosen's corner he saw a tram-car approaching, and, getting off the line, one wheel went down first and then the other. There was a bump, and that caused the shaft to break. From his experience as a driver, the picture would not interfere with him in controlling the horse.

Mr. Watermeyer: Have you any idea of what Mrs. Muzlak weighs?—About 160 or 180 lb.

On the Sunday in question, on what side did she get into the trap?—On the left.

Is that a very fair test of the left shaft?—I should say so.

Cross-examined by Mr. Molteno: If the road had been fit to travel on on the left-hand side he would have used it instead of taking the rails. After the present case he might take an action against the Tramway Company himself. He did not tell Mr. MacDonald that in trying to save the picture he was unable to guide the horse. It was untrue that he said if he got a small sum from the company he would give evidence against the plaintiff.

Thomas Edward Piers, a doctor, said that he attended the plaintiff after the accident from August 3 to August 14. The injury to the knee would have caused plaintiff acute pain.

Christopher John Anderson, a blacksmith, who kept Muzlak's vehicles in repair, said that as Sanders had described the accident to him, it was quite possible for the shaft to have been broken in the manner stated.

Francis Malleen, a carriage-builder, said that he had seen Mr. and Mrs. Muzlak and one whom he believed to be their daughter-in-law drive from Kenilworth to Mowbray, crossing in almost record time.

Cross-examined by Mr. Molteno: About 24 years ago he was in partnership with plaintiff. He did not purchase his works from the trustees in the insolvent estate of plaintiff. When Sanders withdrew from the partnership witness paid him about £5,000.

P.C. 154 James Smith, who was on duty at the corner of Stuckers-street and Sir Lowry-road on the afternoon of the accident, said that the men working in the excavation had to run "for their lives" when the horse bolted. The off-side wheel caught against a tram-rail and threw Sanders over the splash-board and Muzlak on to some debris. After rendering assistance, witness examined the rails, and found them to be above the level of the road.

Cross-examined by Mr. Molteno: He saw nothing of the accident until the horse had bolted. Muzlak was endeavouring to check the horse's flight, and only through throwing his body well back was he prevented from following plaintiff over the splashboard. Witness was not on regular duty at the time, but was proceeding to draw his monthly pay in uniform. The "beat" extended from the Sir Lowry Hotel to Barron-street, the Cape Town and Woodstock boundary. The excavated rails were laid alongside.

Re-examined: There was nothing to prevent a vehicle coming into contact with the exhumed rails.

Fred Abrahamse, an eye-witness of the accident, said that the picture carried by the plaintiff was not as big as the one produced in Court (about 5 ft. by 2 ft.). The road was in a bad condition, and he examined it on August 2.

Cross-examined by Mr. Molteno: He examined it because he knew Mr. Muzlak and thought that Muzlak might want him as a witness.

Mr. Watermeyer closed his case.

For the defence John Parry, engineer's assistant in the City Engineer's Department, who was in charge of the work at the time, said the work was done with the entire approval of the Council. The Tramway Company was supplied with levels by witness, to which their rails should be lifted. The road party of the Town Council was working from the Castle end. At that time the bulk of the traffic was being confined to the Mountain side. Four sets of carts could move along abreast between the tram-line, and the kerb on the Mountain side.

Cross-examined by Mr. Watermeyer: Although the rails were above the level of the street, the thoroughfare was quite safe for traffic.

Wm. H. Turner, Superintendent of Roads for the City Council, said the work was done with the sanction and approval of the Council. The work was to improve the crown of the road. The traffic was never interfered with where the plaintiff alleged he went off the line. Both the plaintiff and Muzlak admitted that the cart was an old one.

Alex. Gordon Balfour, permanent way engineer of the Tramway Company, who was engaged in the reconstruction of the line, said that at the point from where the plaintiff left the lines back to the toll was fit for traffic.

W. B. Shaw, who acted for the defendant company, stated that he was approached by Muzlak, who stated that he had been to Mr. MacDonald in connection with a claim in connection with a claim pending. Muzlak said if the company settled his claim he would give evidence so that Sanders would lose his case.

Donald MacDonald, superintendent of the Cape Town Tramways, said that young Muzlak told him of the accident. Witness visited Muzlak, who said that in trying to save the picture he could not guide the horse. Witness examined the trap and found that the shaft had snapped at a portion that was in a rotten condition. Muzlak on three or four occasions offered in consideration of money to give evidence so that Sanders would not win his case.

Mathias Munro, foreman platelayer, who saw the accident, said that owing to the picture being in front of the cart the driver first pulled the horse one way and then the other. It looked at one time as if the cart was going to collide with the tram. There was about thirty-three feet of room on the mountain side.

Martin Overberg, a cab proprietor, of Woodstock, who has driven along Sir Lowry-road for many years, said that he did not experience any difficulty when the road was "up," either by day or night.

Robert Henry Wilson, a contractor, of Woodstock, said that at the time Sir Lowry-road was "up" he drove along that thoroughfare daily. He never experienced any difficulty, although he drove a blind fast pony.

Michael Muzlak, son of Felix Muzlak, said he was present when Mr. MacDonald examined the cart. Where the shaft broke the part was faulty. Sanders on several occasions offered witness £25 to contradict Mr. MacDonald's evidence.

Mr. Molteno closed his case.

Mr. Watermeyer having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J.: If the plaintiff had succeeded in proving the facts as alleged in the declaration, then undoubtedly there would have been a great deal of weight in the legal argument used by Mr. Watermeyer, but in my opinion it is on the question of fact that the plaintiff must fail. Upon the conclusion of the evidence for the plaintiff, it appears to me that the question of the condition of the road at the time of the accident was left in great doubt. There was some evidence which might have led to suspicion that there were some obstructions in the road, which ought not to have existed, but there is no clear proof that the road was in a condition from the negligence of the defendants or of the Town Council, which rendered it dangerous to the public, and after hearing the evidence for defendant, all doubt has been removed in favour of the defendant. Judgment will be entered for the defendants.

BERLYN V. BERLYN.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default. The action was brought by Abraham Berlyn against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Abraham Berlyn, plaintiff, stated he was a dentist practising in Cape Town, and that he was married in Bristol on March 14, 1893. In October, 1898, he came to South Africa. In August, 1904, his wife went to Somerset West for a change, and as a matter of economy. Plaintiff visited her each week end. He had to complain to the defendant on account of her drinking too much, and he suggested that she should go home to both his and her parents in England, in order that they might exercise some influence over her. This she refused to do, and subsequently she sent her daughter to witness, and then went off to Johannesburg, from whence she had written a letter that she could no longer be a wife to him.

Decree of restitution of conjugal rights granted, the defendant ordered to return or receive the plaintiff by June 1, failing which to show cause in terms of the interdict by June 14 why a decree of divorce should not be granted, and the plaintiff have custody of the child.

to be of Observatory-road, against her husband, James Woodall O'Connell for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Benjamin was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Mr. Benjamin said that when the matter was last before the Court, it was found that the service was not in order, and the Court extended the return day and allowed the evidence of plaintiff, who had come down from Bulawayo, to be taken on commission.

The evidence of plaintiff, read by counsel, showed that the parties were married in Glasgow, Scotland, on March 5, 1895, and that there had been no issue. In December, 1900, they came to this country with the intention of founding their home here. They established a home at Claremont. While they were living here defendant joined Roberts's Horse and proceeded to the front. He returned after an absence of a year. He was addicted to drink. In December, 1902, defendant proceeded to England for the benefit of his health. Plaintiff casually met him in 1905 in Cape Town; but defendant did not make any provision for her, and he had not contributed towards her maintenance since 1902. Defendant was of intemperate habits.

Mr. Benjamin said that defendant was last heard of at 51, Addison Gardens, West Kensington, London.

Order of restitution granted; defendant to return to, or receive the plaintiff, on or before August 1, failing which, to show cause on August 16 why a decree of divorce should not be granted, personal service, failing which, publication, as before.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS.

Ex parte DAVIES. { 1906.
May 3rd.

Advocate of Supreme Court—
Admission.

Those who wish to be admitted as Advocates of the Supreme Court should appear in person to take the oath of allegiance before the Court. In special cases they may obtain permission to dispense with personal appearance and to take the oath before one of the superior Courts.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of John Evan Davies as an advocate, and for leave to applicant to take the oath before the Registrar of the Witwatersrand High Court.

Buchanan, J.: It has frequently been intimated that in courtesy it is the least to be expected from gentlemen who wish to be admitted to the privileges of advocates of this Court that they should appear when they apply for admission. The Court sometimes, for special reasons, dispenses with such appearance and allows the oath to be taken before one or other of the Higher Courts.

Mr. Sutton said he thought that the practice only applied to attorneys.

Buchanan, J., granted an order for admission of the applicant, oaths to be taken before the Registrar of this Court.

Dr. Greer moved for the admission of Petrus Abraham le Roux as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the admission of John William Francis Hartnady as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Dr. Greer moved for the admission of Charles Friedlander as a sworn translator in German.

Application granted and oaths administered.

LIBERMAN AND BUIESKI V. HERMAN.

Mr. Inchbold moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

STEYTLER AND CO. V. CAMP.

Mr. Long moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

PRITCHARD V. MALAN.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for £302 on a promissory note, payable at the Standard Bank, Prince Albert.

Order granted.

TRILL V. ANWYL.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,720, with interest, less £34 7s. 6d., paid on account, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and for rents due and about to become due to be attached.

Order granted.

HUGO V. PENDERIS.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

LIEBERMANN AND CO. V. SHUTTE.

Mr. Roux moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

MOLEWELD V. VAN ROOYEN.

Mr. Bailey moved for provisional sentence for £500, less £182 10s. 8d., paid on account, on a promissory note, with interest.

Order granted.

SPIRO V. PENDERIS.

Mr. Bailey moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £75, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

S.A. MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY
V. MARAIS AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £6,000, with interest, less £90 paid on account, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

S.A. MUTUAL V. MELMAN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,200, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Defendant said that he had been promised a postponement until May 10.

Judgment as prayed, execution to be stayed for a week.

WICHT V. EIDELBERG.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,600, due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ZACHON V. ARP.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £82 10s.

Order granted.

HERMAN AND CANARD V. BARROW.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

LITTMANN AND CO. V. KUSSEL.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £35, being part of indebtedness to plaintiff of one Philip Goldberg, for whom defendant was surety.

Order granted.

WOLHUTER V. RUSSELL.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £25, five months' rent of certain stables in Roomead-avenue, Kenilworth, and for order of cancellation of lease. Counsel also applied for the applicant for damages in the sum of £500 to stand over.

Order granted in terms of application.

WOODHEAD V. LOCHNER.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 319, for £1,132 6s. 5d., money advanced, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Mr. Searle (for defendant) moved upon notice for removal of bar, and for leave to file plea on or before the 31st May.

Affidavits having been produced on both sides,

Mr. Searle submitted that this was a case where there should be an investigation. The action was for money lent between the end of 1903, and beginning of 1904, when plaintiff and defendant were in England. It was important that there should be an investigation as to defendant's estate in England, which, it was said, had been assigned, and to which assignment the firm in which plaintiff was a partner had assented.

Dr. Greer pointed out that there was absolutely no affidavit of merits in this case. Defendant's attorney had been in communication with defendant, and yet there was no statement that there was a genuine defence to the claim.

Buchanan, J.: The bar will be removed on condition that defendant pleads before the 31st May. If the plea is filed in time, costs to be costs in the cause; if no plea is filed, applicant is to pay costs of this application today, and the application for judgment will stand until the 1st June.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

VAN ZYL V. PRITCHARD { 1906,
May 3rd.

This was an application calling upon respondent to show cause why provisional judgment given in this court, under Rule 319, on the 17th April, at the suit of the plaintiff, by reason of the defendant's default to file his plea, should not be set aside, and why applicant should not be allowed to purge his default and defend the action.

The affidavit of Mr. Hartnady, of the firm of Dold and Van Breda, attorneys, said that, owing to the difficulty of communicating with defendant, it was impossible to file his plea before he was barred. Defendant had a bona fide defence to the claim, and certain of the items brought up in plaintiff's claim were repudiated. Defendant also had a claim in reconvention.

The answering affidavit of Mr. S. S. Jacobsohn, of the firm of Walker and Jacobsohn, attorneys, stated that before being barred defendant had had ample time to prepare his defence, if any. He had on more than one occasion admitted the correctness of the claim. Respondent had always been ready to hand over the shares in question to the applicant. As a matter of fact, the shares were worthless. If the case were re-opened, defendant should pay all the costs which had been incurred.

The replying affidavit of Mr. Hartnady having been read, Mr. Benjamin (for applicant) submitted that in this matter there had really been no unnecessary delay in preparing the defence. The whole matter was very complicated, and related to a considerable number of share transactions. Defendant was out of postal contact with Port Elizabeth, and it took eight days for a letter to reach him from Cape Town.

Mr. Van Zyl, for respondent, submitted that there had been no undue haste by respondent, and that applicant had been guilty of great and unnecessary delay. Applicant had no bona fide defence to the claim.

Buchanan, J.: I think practitioners should have a little more consideration for each other in these matters, instead of snapping at the strict rules of Court and taking judgment, and thus entailing extra expense upon their clients. Under all the circumstances, I think this should be re-opened. The bar will be removed, and defendant allowed ten days in which to file his plea, defendant to pay costs of bar, other costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte RALANI.

Mr. Benjamin moved on behalf of petitioner as executor dative in the estate of Thomas Ralani for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain property in the district of Glen Grey. Counsel said that testator had left his property to certain of his children, and the question now arose whether the surviving son, Stephen, was not absolutely entitled to the farm. He added that he thought it was desirable that the minor should be before the Court.

The matter was ordered to stand over, to enable the minor to be represented, and Mr. Douglas Buchanan was appointed curator ad litem of the minor, and Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl, and Fuller as attorneys.

GUNTER V. LIQUIDATORS SOUTH AFRICAN NITRATE SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved, on the petition of Pieter Albertus Gunter, for an order calling upon Messrs. D. C. Andrew and Edward Gibbon, of Cape Town, as liquidators of the respondent syndicate, to show cause why a certain notarial servitude giving the syndicate the right to work, extract, and sell nitrates found on the petitioner's farm in the division of Prieska should not be cancelled. Counsel said that all he could do at present was to ask for a rule.

Rule nisi granted, returnable on the 1st June, calling upon all persons interested to show cause why the prayer of the petition should not be granted, rule to be published once in the "Government Gazette" and "Cape Times," and to be served on the liquidators and trustees (if any).

Ex parte VOS AND WIFE.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for an order authorising the registration of a certain notarial contract excluding community of property.

Order granted giving leave to petitioners to register an ante-nuptial contract in terms of the ante-nuptial agreement, the rights of all creditors accruing prior to registration reserved.

Ex parte CAMPBELL AND OTHERS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on the petition of the executors testamentary in the estate of Peter S. Campbell, for leave to mortgage certain property for £600.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SONNENBERG.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on the petition of Mr. Sonnenberg, attorney, Cape Town, for an order authorising registration of a certain ante-nuptial contract of clients. Petitioner stated that by an oversight the contract was omitted to be lodged in the office of the Registrar of Deeds within the time specified by the Act, petitioner having been absent at Simon's town in connection with the Volunteer manoeuvres during Easter.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte FLUCKIGER.

Mr. Rowson moved for leave to sue by edictal citation in forma pauperis. Respondent, it was stated, was resident in Switzerland.

Rule nisi granted, respondent to show cause on the 1st August, service to be effected upon respondent by registered letter.

NEUCHÂTEL ASPHALT CO., LTD. V. ALLEN.

This was an application for an order calling on the respondent, Andrew Allen, to hand over the books, papers, etc., of the company in his possession, and restraining him from representing himself as the agent of the company in South Africa.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the applicants and Mr. Alexander (in the absence of his leader, Mr. Burton) appeared for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J., said the applicant was an agent of an English company, and he also held a power of attorney from them. An agreement was entered into between the applicant and the company for a period of three years, but it was possible for either party to terminate the contract on a breach of the agreement. The respondent stood in the position of a servant to the plaintiff company, and the applicants, thinking they had good grounds for doing so, terminated the agreement. He was no longer their servant, and they were entitled to cancel the power of attorney and demand delivery of any property in his possession. He ceased to be a servant, and he must hand over to the company any property in his possession. If the respondent was wrongfully dismissed from the company he had a right to bring proceedings for wrongful dismissal, but he could not claim to continue in the service of the company against their will. Here was a company, carrying on business in South Africa; they dismissed their servant and appointed another, and they were entitled to have any assets forthwith handed over. The respondent's rights would be protected in view of any action he might take. The respondent stated that he did not intend representing himself as agent of the company, or holding himself out as such. It would be ordered that the respondent forthwith hand over the books, papers, documents, and assets of the company, the respondent to have access to them at all reasonable times, the respondent to pay the costs of the application, with leave to claim repayment of the costs in any proceedings against the applicant company.

Ex parte ESTATE MOSTERT.

Mr. Alexander moved to make absolute a rule calling on all concerned to show cause why a meeting should not be called for the appointment of an executor dative in the estate.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte NEWMAN.

Dr. Greer moved to have a rule nisi to show cause why leave should not be granted the applicant to sue in forma pauperis made absolute.

SHERWOOD V. HOWARD AND SCOTT.

Mr. McGregor moved to have this matter set down for final trial by jury. Case set down for trial by jury on May 30, costs to be costs in the cause.

JEAREY V. MULLER.

Mr. McGregor, for the defendant (applicant), moved to have this case postponed until next term, on the ground that the defendant was detained in German South Africa to give evidence in a criminal case.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan opposed on behalf of the respondent on information that the defendant could come to Cape Town before the criminal case would be called on.

It was ordered that the case be postponed until June 20.

Ex parte ESTATE LUCK.

Dr. Greer moved on behalf of the petitioner, the surviving spouse, for an order authorising the transfer of certain property.

Order granted.

Ex parte OLIVIER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to Margaretha C. Olivier, whose sanity was in doubt.

Application granted. Mr. Vincent Cloete appointed curator ad litem, the lunacy to be proved by affidavit, summons returnable 7th June.

Ex parte JOHNS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on behalf of the petitioner, the wife, for leave to sue her husband, Benjamin Evans Johns, by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, by reason of his malicious desertion.

Leave granted to sue by edictal citation, personal service if possible, returnable 21st June. Failing personal service, one publication in the "Star,"

Johannesburg, and "News," Pretoria, with leave to serve the intendit, and notice of trial at the same time.

Ex parte JOOSTE.

Mr. Inghold moved for an order authorising the Master of the Supreme Court to pay out an allowance of £5 per month for the maintenance and education of the minor, J. M. M. du Toit.

Order in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte WOLFAARDT.

Mr. Pohl moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to amend a certain transfer.

Order granted.

Ex parte EDDIE.

Mr. Palmer moved for an order authorising the amendment of a certain entry in the Debt Registry.

The matter was ordered to be referred to the Registrar of Deeds for report.

Ex parte BUSBRIDGE.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to the petitioner to mortgage certain property registered in the name of his minor daughter. The property was a gift from the petitioner to his daughter. The petitioner undertook to repay the loan in quarterly instalments.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report, and subject to the Master's approval.

Ex parte MARTIN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for leave to sue one Harry Morser in forma pauperis for seduction. Petitioner was a minor, of 16 years, and was assisted by her mother in the application.

A rule nisi was granted, returnable May 10.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE HOFFMAN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved to make absolute a rule nisi calling upon all concerned to show cause why a certain diagram should not be passed by the Registrar of Deeds, with certain roads deleted.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte ESTATE CAROLUS.

Mr. Lewis moved for an order authorising the cancellation of a certain bond.

A 1

A rule nisi was granted, returnable on 7th June, calling on all concerned to show cause why the application should not be granted, one publication in the "Gazette" and one in the "Cape Times."

MAY V. GOLDSTEIN.

This was an application brought by George May, of Plein-street, Cape Town, upon notice to George Goldstein, to show cause why respondent should not be interdicted from issuing a writ under a judgment obtained against applicant under Rule 329d, and why applicant should not be allowed to re-open the proceedings, with a view of entering appearance and contesting the claim.

Mr. Close was for applicant; Mr. Benjamin was for respondent.

The affidavit of applicant was to the effect that a summons had been served upon him for payment of £30 10s. for professional services rendered by Goldstein. Deponent had not previously been summoned, and at the time he thought it was merely a letter of demand, and therefore he did not enter appearance. He did not know that judgment had been taken against him until he saw a paragraph in the "Cape Times." He repudiated liability for the claim of Goldstein.

Mr. Benjamin read replying affidavit.

Judgment set aside, defendant (May) to pay costs of judgment, defendant allowed to enter appearance, costs to be costs in cause.

In re KRAAIFONTEIN HOTEL COMPANY (IN LIQUIDATION).

This was the return day of a rule nisi calling upon certain persons to show cause why they should not be included in the list of contributories. Mr. Van der Byl was for the liquidators. Mr. Molteno appeared for two respondents (Carl Otto Bauman and Vincent A. van der Byl).

Mr. Van der Byl said that the liquidators had gone thoroughly into the matter since the case was last before the Court, and he had now to ask that all the names should be withdrawn from the provisional list, except those of J. L. Irvine, E. F. Lance, and A. J. Bethell. In regard to two of the parties named, he was informed that they were insolvent, and leave should, therefore, be reserved to the trustees to move within a certain date for their removal from the list, if need be.

Mr. Molteno said that, on behalf of his clients, he had to ask for costs of appearing that day.

Buchanan, J., said that the list of contributories would be settled by omitting all names from the provisional list, except those of Messrs. Irvine, Lance, and Bethell, and costs incurred by Messrs. Bauman and V. A. van der Byl would be allowed to them.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY V.
A. AND M. COHEN.

Law agent—Contempt of Court.

This was an application, upon notice, calling upon respondents to show cause why they should not be attached for contempt of Court by reason of having issued letters of demand to one Louis, sealed and bearing the Imperial arms, thereby intending the public to believe that this was a process issued out of a Court of Justice.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for applicants; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for respondents. [Buchanan, J.: Who are the respondents?]

Mr. Searle: They are merchants in Cape Town.

An affidavit by the Secretary of the Law Society (Mr. R. B. Sanderson) was in support of the application.

The affidavit of Morris Cohen, one of the partners in respondent firm, stated that there was no intention to convey to the addressee the impression that the demand had been issued out of a court of law. If the firm's conduct was improper in this matter, he (deponent) humbly apologised to the Court. He undertook that no demands would be made by his firm on such forms in future. He submitted to the judgment of the Court. An affidavit was also put in from an employee of respondents, stating that he had purchased the letter forms from W. A. Richards and Sons, and that they informed him that the forms were used by merchants in town.

[Buchanan, J.: If the firm have been circulating these, I wonder that we have not had other cases before the Court.]

Mr. Searle: I question whether we should not take proceedings against the printers also.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, J.: This seems to be a similar form to the one used in the case of Doner, when my brother Maasdorp used strong remarks as to the highly improper conduct of persons using these forms. I endorse those remarks. Mr. Jones has said that he might have something to say, but for the fact that respondents have submitted to the judgment of the Court, I think it is a piece of good fortune for respondents that they did submit to the judgment of the Court. As this conduct is highly reprehensible and decidedly wrong, and as they say they have stopped and do not intend to continue this practice, they will be let off this time, but they must pay costs.

If a similar matter comes before the Court again, no doubt it will take a more serious view of it. Respondent must pay the costs of this application.

BRIDGMAN V. PRICE.

Dental surgeon—Discovery order
—Interdict.

This was an application upon notice for an order upon respondent to make discovery of certain documents.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), was for applicant; there was no appearance on the other side.

Buchanan, J., pointed out that there had been no service of notice of motion.

Sir H. Juta said that he had an affidavit of service. He had expected that his learned friend Mr. Bisset would have appeared for respondent. Counsel went on to say that an action was instituted by Mr. Price against Mr. Bridgman for an interdict restraining the defendant from practising as a dentist in Cape Town. Defendant filed a plea, and there was a claim in reconvention, and in the meantime the Court granted an interim interdict, to be suspended pending an action, defendant to keep an account of his earnings in the interval. The defendant called upon the plaintiff to make a proper discovery on affidavit of certain books, etc., and asked for permission to see certain accounts in the Standard Bank. Upon a motion being served to this end, defendant received notice from plaintiff's attorneys that he (Price) withdrew the action and asked for defendant's bill of costs. Thereupon the defendant's attorneys pointed out that that did not settle the matter, because they had the claim in reconvention, which was for a declaration that defendant was entitled to practise in Cape Town or that Price should pay £1,700, which they said was due. Correspondence followed between the parties' attorneys, and finally the defendant's attorneys submitted to plaintiff's attorneys for signature a consent to all proceedings being withdrawn on the following terms: (1) The interdict granted on the 22nd February, 1906, restraining defendant from practising as a dentist or dental surgeon in Cape Town or elsewhere in the Cape Division without first obtaining the written consent of plaintiff is discharged; (2) the defendant is declared entitled to practise as a dentist or dental surgeon in Cape Town and elsewhere in the Cape Division, without requiring the consent of the plaintiff; (3) plaintiff is to pay all costs. That consent was not signed on behalf of plaintiff. Counsel added that unless the Court would grant judgment in terms of consent he had to move for the discovery order, Buchanan, J., said that all the Court could do at present was to discharge the interdict.

Sir H. Juta: That won't help us; it will not prevent them from beginning an action de novo against us to-morrow. Counsel then proceeded to move for disclosure of certain documents, etc., in accordance with the notice of motion. He read an affidavit by Henry Bridgman (the applicant), who said that the moneys of the firm, of which he was a partner, were deposited in the private account of the respondent, and that he had relied entirely on the statements made by respondent from time to time as to the condition of the firm's finances. Deponent had reason to believe that during the partnership respondent did not pay to him his full half-share of the earnings after expenses had been paid. Respondent had refused access to the books of the partnership, and to his banking account. From the correspondence, it appeared that the respondent's position was that the books of the partnership had been destroyed, and that his (Price's) private banking account contained other transactions quite apart from the partnership.

Buchanan, J.: I had grave doubts whether the applicant should come before the Court with this application, and but for the fact that there is an interdict still pending I should have refused the application altogether. Respondent may now have a technical right to come into court and apply for the interdict to be discharged. The applicant, who obtained that interdict, does not now support it, and he has withdrawn the action which he had commenced, and costs of that action he offers to pay. I think, as the matter has now been brought into Court, to make a final settlement of the case, it may as well be recorded that judgment will be given for the defendant in the action withdrawn, with costs, and the interdict of 22nd February last will be discharged, with costs. This will dispose of the matter between the parties. As to the application for an order of discovery upon plaintiff, I shall not make an order. Defendant having come into court, he can take an order for costs of the action, and, further, an order that the interdict be discharged, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ROUS V. ROUS.

{ 1906.
{ May 4th.

This was an action brought by Augusta Alice S. Rous, of Ponterville-road, against Arthur William Scaly Rous, now believed to be in the Transvaal, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, and custody of the child of the marriage.

Plaintiff, in her declaration, said that prior to and since December, 1904, defendant had failed to contribute to her support.

Mr. Benjamin was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

William Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Records, Colonial Office, produced certificate of the marriage.

Augusta Alice S. Rous said she was married in community of property to defendant on the 21st February, 1900, at Cape Town. Her husband, who was a plumber, then lived at Rosebank, where they remained about three years. Then they went to Ponterville-road, where defendant commenced a brickmaking business on her father's property. After he had been there about twelve months, he gave up that business and went to the Transvaal, where he got work. Witness also went to the Transvaal, but defendant could not afford to support her, because he was always gambling and racing his money away. She afterwards worked for her livelihood, and kept house for her father.

Mr. Benjamin read a number of letters written by defendant to his wife, in which he said: "I ask you, for God Almighty's sake, and our boy's, not to take action against me. If you are going into the Divorce Court to rip myself from you, I would sooner leave you a widow than that there should be a separation between you and I. Before God, I promise I will do right to you and Cecil. I admit I have been a cad, and am quite ashamed of my actions."

[De Villiers, C.J. (to witness): If the defendant wishes to take you back, you will be prepared to go?]

Witness: Yes, if he will provide a home for me.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before the 15th July, failing which a rule to issue calling upon defendant to show cause on the 1st August why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with costs, with custody to plaintiff of the child of the marriage and maintenance at the rate of £2 10s. per month, until such child attains the age of 16 years.

BIRCH V. BIRCH.

This was an action brought by William Alfred Birch, a railway employee, of Woodstock, against his wife, who was stated to be residing at Dock Cottages, Cape Town, for a decree of divorce by reason of her adultery with some person or persons to plaintiff unknown.

Plaintiff claimed a decree of divorce dissolving the bonds of marriage, and an order declaring the defendant to have forfeited all benefits of the marriage in community.

Dr. Greer was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Wm. Thos. Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, Colonial Office, produced the certificate of the marriage.

Stephen Hy. Elliott, an ex-sergeant of police, at present employed by Osberg's Inquiry Agency, said that he received instructions to watch 30, Porter-street, Woodstock, occupied by Mrs. Birch. On the night of March 3 he saw a man walking on the platform of Woodstock Station, adjacent to which was the cottage. The man had some carpenter's tools. Witness saw him enter the defendant's house. The man remained there some time. Mrs. Birch was the only occupier of the house. The man afterwards left by the 11.30 train for Maitland. Witness had not seen him since.

William Alfred Birch, a travelling ticket examiner, said he was married to defendant in St. Mark's Church, Cape Town, in 1897. His duties about once a month took him away from home for about 16 or 17 days. About the end of last year he returned home a day before he was expected. In the early hours next morning a railway man in uniform knocked at the window, and witness put up the blind. The railway man then said, "Are you Mr. Birch?" Witness replied, "Yes," and the man then said, "Mr. Joubert wants to see you in the morning." Witness did not know a Mr. Joubert. Witness was suspicious, but he took no steps until he was about to go away again on the 25th January. Defendant was now staying with her mother in Cape Town.

Decree of divorce granted, and defendant declared to have forfeited benefits of the marriage.

DAVIDS V. ESTATE DAVIDS. { 1906.
May 4th.

Griqualand — Marriage — Community of property.

Under Griqua law, as it existed among the Griquas before the annexation of their territory, the survivor of two spouses was entitled to one half of the immovable property of the deceased spouse.

Fortuin's executor v. Abrahams (7 C.T.R., 30) commented on.

This was an action brought by Magdalena Carolina Davids, of Kokstad, against Marthinus Jacobus Davids and Frederick Davids, as executors testamentary in the estate Davids, for a declaration of rights.

The declaration set out that plaintiff was a widow of the tribe known as Griquas, and resided at Kokstad, East Griqualand. She was married to Marthinus Davids at Emfundisweni, Eastern Pondoland, by the Rev. Thos. Jenkins, according to Christian rites, and in accordance with the rites of the Griqua tribe. In 1895 she and her husband executed a mutual last will and testament, disposing of their joint property. At the time of his death the late Marthinus Davids, who was married to plaintiff in community of property, owned a certain piece of ground, Lot B, in Kokstad, in extent ten morgen, 522 sq. rods, which piece of ground was still registered in the name of the late Marthinus Davids. Plaintiff had not alienated and had not intended to alienate her share in the said piece of ground, and she had repudiated the said last will and testament, and she had claimed and still claimed her half-share of the said estate free and unencumbered. The executors had refused and failed to file an administration account or to pass transfer of one-half of the ground belonging to the joint estate. Plaintiff prayed for an order declaring that she was entitled to one-half of the joint estate, for transfer to her of the aforesaid ground, alternative relief and costs of suit.

Mr. Roux was for plaintiff, who sued in forma pauperis; defendants were in default.

Mr. Roux proceeded to read the record of evidence taken on commission before the Assistant R.M. of Kokstad.

The first witness examined was William Murray, who said that he had been preacher and assistant pastor of the Griqua Church since 1879. In 1891 he became chief pastor. He drew up the joint will of Marthinus Davids and his wife, and attested the same as a witness. Before there was a minister at Kokstad, Griquas used to go to the nearest missionary to be married. He knew of his own knowledge that Mr. and Mrs. Davids were married by the Rev. Thomas Jenkins at Emfundisweni, Pondoland East. This was looked upon as a valid marriage by the Griquas. Griquas always married in community in the fullest sense of the term.

Cornelius George de Bruin, headman of the Griqua people, said that they were descended from Europeans and Hottentots. Their law of succession was the same as that of the Colony. For the last sixty years marriage, to be considered legal, must be before a minister of religion. Marriages were always in community of property, and as a consequence the surviving spouse was always entitled to half of the estate, and could claim it.

Plaintiff gave evidence as to her marriage, and stated that she became engaged to her husband on the road when Adam Kok trekked to East Griqualand. As soon as the people decided to settle there she and Davids decided to get married, and went and got married at Emfundisweni, there being no minister at Kokstad. Kok gave land to all the families, and the land apportioned to witness and her husband was apportioned to them after their marriage. Frederick Davids was one of the deceased's children by his first marriage. She was married to Martinus Davids in community of property, and at the time neither had any immovable property. Before they went to Pondoland they had chosen this country (Griqualand) as their domicile with their tribe. All the property they got after their marriage they looked upon as their joint property. Her husband and herself made a will in 1893. Some time ago she wished to find out what had been done under the will, and what her rights were in regard to the property. After it had been explained to her that she had a right to repudiate the will, she signed a deed of repudiation. She had never received any benefits under her late husband's will. She never bound herself to carry out her husband's wishes in his will. She was told by her stepchildren, including defendant Frederick, that as her name was not mentioned in the will she had no rights under it. The three sons mentioned in the will lived with her after her husband's death, and she supported them instead of their supporting her. She lived on a small piece of Lot B with her two sons. She had never received any benefit from the rest of the ground, which was being ploughed and sown by white people.

Frederick Werner, another Griqua, who went to Kokstad with the original trekkers, said that community of property had always been the custom in Griqua marriages. During Adam Kok's time witness was a Circuit Judge and Readsman. Adam Kok's cousin, Jan Kok, died before they went to Kokstad. His estate was divided and his wife got half and the children got half. Witness always regarded Jan Kok's estate as being correctly administered. The surviving spouse had a right to claim half of the estate, even though there was a will.

Louis Pretorius, a former member of the Raad during Adam Kok's time, said that marriages amongst Griquas were always in community of property unless a contract was made to the contrary, and generally the law of succession was the same as it was now, but executors did not get letters of administration.

Frederick Simon Berning, attorney, Kokstad, said that during the last five years he had had considerable experience in administering Griqua estates. Without exception, these estates had always been administered according to Roman Dutch law. Searches in the Chief Magistrate's Office, where these estates were formerly administered, showed that the same principles governed them.

Other evidence was also given on commission.

Mr. Roux said that he had certain witnesses whom he proposed to call, including Mr. L. Zietsman, M.L.A.

De Villiers, C.J., however, intimated that he did not think it was necessary to lead additional evidence.

Mr. Roux (in reply to the Court) said that he did not think there was any movable property in the estate.

De Villiers, C.J.: An order will be granted as prayed, except on the first prayer, which is general. The order of the Court will be confined to a declaration that plaintiff is entitled to one-half of the immovable property in the estate of herself and her husband, and a direction that half of that property be transferred to plaintiff, costs of this action to be paid by defendants, in their capacities as executors of the late Martinus Davids. The plaintiff does not claim the right to remain in possession of the whole of the property, and the question as to the right during her lifetime of her children by her deceased husband to one-half of the property does not arise. The plaintiff's case is that under Griqua custom before annexation she was entitled, on the death of her husband, to one-half of the farm, and the evidence given in this case entirely supports the existence of such a custom. In the case of Fortuin's executor v. Abrahams (7, C.T.R., 30) a child of a deceased spouse claimed his maternal portion of a farm during the lifetime of his father, and the Court held that his right had not been proved. The Court, however, intimated that a modified community seems to have existed among the tribe, and this modified community is quite consistent with the claim now made by the plaintiffs.

AREND V. RIX.

{ 1906.
May 4th.Trespass—Cutting down trees—
Measure of damages.

Where, in an action for trespass, it is proved that trees which enhance the value of the property have been cut down, the measure of damages is not the actual value of the trees, but the damage done to the property by deteriorating its value.

This was an action brought by Hadje Omar Arend, farmer and produce dealer, Claremont Flats, against August Hendrik Frederick Rix, also a farmer, of Claremont Flats, for a declaration of rights, damages, and an interdict.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he was the owner of a certain piece of redeemed quitrent land situate at Claremont Flats, and that defendant was the owner of certain adjoining property. On the 15th June, 1905, certain natives wrongfully and unlawfully trespassed on plaintiff's land, and did cut and carry away two trees, the property of plaintiff, and of the value of £5. The natives were afterwards summoned before the Assistant Resident Magistrate, of Claremont. At the hearing the defendant gave evidence, and claimed that the ground upon which the two trees had been standing was his property. The Magistrate dismissed the charge, on the ground that there was a bona fide dispute between the plaintiff and defendant as to the ownership of the land. Plaintiff prayed for damages in the sum of £20, a declaration that the ground in question was his property, and an interdict restraining the defendant from further trespassing on his land.

Dr. Greer was for plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Hadje Omar Arend (the plaintiff) said that he was a farmer, produce dealer, and speculator, residing at Claremont Flats. The river formed the boundary between his estate and defendants. He saw the poplar trees in question cut down on his estate; the trees had been growing on his side of the river banks. The trees were removed across the river. He estimated that his loss was £20. He had instituted proceedings in the Magistrate's Court against one Brown, who was discharged on the ground Rix gave him permission, and that Rix said he was owner. Witness brought a surveyor to the Court, and then the Magistrate told him it was a waste of time, and that he had better take the case to the Supreme Court. He was put to some expense in consequence.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, but that cannot be claimed in this Court as damages.]

B. G. Bisset, land surveyor, Cape Town, said that he had inspected the plaintiff's ground, and he found from the diagrams and transfers that the portion on which these trees had been cut down belonged to plaintiff.

De Villiers, C.J.: Judgment will be given for plaintiff for £10, with costs. That amount is given, not on the basis of the value of the trees, but I have no doubt that the property itself has been deteriorated in consequence of the trees being cut down. The Court will, therefore, give judgment for £10, with costs, and declare that the land upon which the trees had been standing is the property of the plaintiff. There is no threat to further trespass, and there is no necessity for an interdict, and no order will, therefore, be given on that part of the claim.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: C. Brady. Defendant in default.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

VAN ZYL V. ESTATE SLUITER. { 1906.
May 4th.

This was an action brought by Saul Francis van Zyl, a farmer, residing in the division of Colesberg, against the executors of the estate of the late Dirk Sluiter, represented by Mr. Roos, as secretary of the Board of Executors, to recover certain amounts stated to be due under certain agreements between the late Mr. Sluiter, and Mr. Van Zyl, in connection with the taking charge of certain stock on his farm. An arrangement was entered into to share certain kids. As an alternative to an amount claimed under one of the agreements, remuneration was claimed for services rendered by taking charge of the cattle, in case it should appear to the Court under the circumstances that the amount for commission could not be strictly due. The late Mr. Sluiter had an amount of stock, and Mr. Van Zyl owned an adjacent farm. For years past plaintiff and Mr. Sluiter had different agreements under which the plaintiff took charge of certain stock on the farm, and there were considerable transactions. The plaintiff sold from time to time large amounts of stock for Mr. Sluiter, and received certain amounts for commission. In December, 1899, after the war broke out, Mr. Sluiter was anxious to quit the neighbourhood. Mr. Sluiter asked the plaintiff to take particular charge of his stock during his absence, when he went to Europe, and did not return until 1902. In June, 1904, Mr. Sluiter again went to Europe, and died there in August, 1904, at the age of 86. Certain of these amounts were outstanding, and the plaintiff sent in a claim. Mr. Roos went up to the farm, and plaintiff said, a certain basis was arrived at in regard to all the agreements but one. Herman Sluiter, the deceased's nephew, was present when this agreement was arrived at. The items agreed upon amounted to £50. In addition there was an amount of £40, claimed for commission in connection with the sales of cattle. The plaintiff stated if the defendant did not wish to pay the commission he would alternatively claim £300 for simply taking charge of the cattle.

The plea admitted the formal allegations, and put the plaintiff to the proof of the agreements, which the defendant denied were entered into. The defendant tendered the plaintiff £25, which was refused.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Swift), was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Lewis) was for the defendant.

Sarel van Zyl said that agreements were entered into between him and the deceased in April and June, 1899. When the Boers were in Colesberg, December, 1899, Sluiter repeatedly asked him to take charge of his stock, as he was anxious to leave the vicinity. Witness declined asking if the belligerents raided the stock how he would stand. Sluiter replied that he would sell the cattle to witness, and wrote in a rough diary that he had sold his stock to Van Zyl, although no exchange was made between the parties. Witness had never claimed the cattle on the strength of the document, as he could have easily done. On his return from his trip Sluiter paid witness £30 by cheque as a gratuity, and went so far as to insert a sort of proclamation in the Colesberg paper to the effect that he was greatly indebted to Van Zyl for all he had done, that in times of trouble one learned who was who, and which concluded as follows: "Long live Sarel van Zyl. Would that the sheep had remained under his care." Witness took charge of Tygersfontein, one of Sluiter's farms, and in March, 1903, he took charge of a number of sheep. Witness proceeded to give evidence on the different sales of stock, the prices realised and the commission due from Sluiter. In June, 1904, when he sent the last account to Sluiter, it had nothing to do with the commission on cattle. As soon as he heard of Sluiter's death witness put in his claim. Mr. Roos agreed to the plan suggested by Mr. Herman Sluiter with regard to plaintiff's share in the sale of the sheep, mohair, and kids. Mr. Roos did not promise anything on the commission; he merely said he would consider the matter.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He had never lived on the farm of the deceased. Witness gave orders as to the shearing, and the work was performed by Sluiter's own men. He had told Mr. Roos that Sluiter had promised him 2½ per cent. on the cattle on Tygersfontein.

You did not do badly in the matter? —I did not do the best.

Continuing, witness said that a man named De Villiers, who was on Tygersfontein on the "halves" principle, looked after the cattle, and another named Steyn, in the employ of Sluiter, cared for the sheep and goats. Witness supervised.

Herman Jacobus Sluiter, of Tsaiboschfontein, manager for many years of the deceased's farms, supported plaintiff's claim. During the war all the work had fallen upon plaintiff.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: His uncle usually sheared once a year, but witness recently had sheared thrice in two years, because the price of wool had gone up. Mr. Roos agreed to the arrangement as set out by the plaintiff.

F. P. Potgieter, of Colesberg, who was well acquainted with the parties, stated he took the cattle the plaintiff had charge of to Springfontein for sale. The 109 cattle realised £616.

Tobias de Villiers stated that when Sluiter left the farm the plaintiff looked after the whole stock.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Johannes Neethling Roos, secretary of the Board of Executors and as executor to the estate defendant in the case, stated he had nothing to go on except the documents. The claim of the plaintiff was carefully considered by witness. When he visited the farm witness distinctly refused to have the sheep shorn. The question of the value of the wool was merely discussed, but there was nothing definite fixed upon. Witness suggested that the plaintiff should accept half a crown each for the kids. It was virtually to settle the case that he made an offer of £25 to the plaintiff.

Mr. Burton closed his case; and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: The late Mr. Sluiter and the plaintiff, Mr. Van Zyl, were very great friends. Mr. Sluiter was a man of considerable wealth, and he owned property and stock, and he wished Mr. Van Zyl to take charge of his stock and supervise his farm arrangements, for which he promised certain remuneration. Accounts were settled from time to time up to June, 1904, when Mr. Sluiter left the Colony for Europe, and shortly afterwards died, and the defendant in the case is the executor in the estate. The claim in this case was really for remuneration which came under the previous agreements for work done by the plaintiff between the time of the last settlement and the time the property of the estate was handed over to the executor. The first paragraph of plaintiff's prayer referred to a claim connected with sheep and goats running on the farm. The plaintiff undertook to supervise this stock, and Mr. Sluiter promised him one bale of wool out of every twenty-five, and also 2½ per cent. on all wethers sold, half the wool from the goats, and twenty in every hundred lambs. The plaintiff said he was about to shear the sheep, but the executor preferred that the sheep be sold with the wool on. The defendant denied that he came to any positive agreement, but certainly an impression to that effect was conveyed to the minds of the plaintiff and Herman Sluiter. It was clear that the actual amount could not be fixed at that interview, because it had to be ascertained what were the previous transactions between the parties. It was clear also that something must be allowed to the plaintiff for his share of the wool, and his proportion of the goats. It was clear that the tender of £25 was insufficient on the whole of the claim. His Lordship, using his judgment as a juror, as to what was a fair amount in a rough and ready estimate, and putting the two claims together as he preferred to do, gave judgment for the plaintiff for £65, that was £40 on the first and £25 on the second count, with costs. The executor, His Lordship added, was in a difficult position, as he could not have definite proof as to whether he was justified in paying this liability. The costs would come out of the estate.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

BRADY V. S.A. TURF CLUB. } 1906.
May 7th.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Molteno) was for the applicant, and Dr. Greer was for the respondent.

The application was to have the case postponed from to-morrow to a later date.

Sir H. Juta said the parties had agreed by letter that the case should not be heard sooner than the 11th, and now, in the distribution of the work, the case was put down for the 8th. At the time when the trial was fixed the applicants were unable to inform the Court of this arrangement, and it was impossible for them to go to trial to-morrow, so that counsel would ask that the case be put down for trial at a later date.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you oppose, Mr. Greer?]

Dr. Greer: We oppose to this extent—we say they ought to have taken action sooner. The statement of your lordship appeared in the press on Monday and Tuesday last, and my client will be caused considerable inconvenience if the case is not heard to-morrow. I am instructed to oppose, but, of course, it is a matter that must be left in the hands of the Court.

Sir H. Juta: I would draw your lordship's attention to your statement that you thought the case of such importance that it should be tried before a full court. Counsel then read the letter from Mr. Brady to Mr. Fairbridge.

De Villiers, C.J., ordered the case to be set down for trial on the 18th inst., costs to be costs in the cause.

INSOLVENT ESTATE STEVENS V. GILCHRIST AND POWELL.

This was an application on notice of motion, calling on the respondents to show cause why they should not be ordered to hand over to the applicant 45,000 shares in Sacco, Ltd., belonging to the insolvent estate, and at present in the possession of Mr. Gus. Trollip.

From the affidavits it appeared that Stevens was the promoter and holder of a very large number of shares, practically the whole of the holding of the company called Sacco, Ltd. Mr. MacCallum had a claim against Stevens for professional services, and an application was made to the Court on January 20 last to interdict the alienation of 55,000 shares which belonged to Stevens. It was subsequently found that 45,000 shares were in the hands of Mr. Gus. Trollip, and held by him on behalf of the present respondents. Stevens went insolvent, and now the trustee asked that these 45,000 shares should be delivered to him as belonging to the estate.

The answering affidavit of Mr. H. A. Payne, an attorney of the Supreme Court, set out that the only director of the respondents at present in South Africa was at Johannesburg, and time would not allow of an affidavit being prepared. Deponent knew that respondents undertook, in consideration of the shares, to pay the liabilities of the Sacco Company. At the time of the sale the company was on the verge of compulsory sequestration, and respondents were ready to carry out the terms of their contract.

Mr. Burton was for the applicant, and Mr. W. P. Buchanan appeared for the respondents.

De Villiers, C.J., said it appeared to him this case could not be disposed of on motion. He did not see why the trustee should not bring his action against Gilchrist. The shares were quite safe in the hands of Mr. Trollip. In giving judgment, his lordship said: The shares are at present under attachment in the hands of Mr. Trollip. That stands pending a further order of Court. That order of Court will remain. Now, it is quite clear that the plaintiff will have to proceed by action in order to obtain the remedy sought for. It seems to me to make no difference who brings the action. At present the applicant is quite secure by the fact of the attachment. There will be no order in this application, the applicant to proceed by action, costs to be costs in the cause.

LAW SOCIETY V. KRIGE.

This was an application by the Law Society against one Evelyn Wm. Krige, an attorney, of Ceres, calling on him to show cause why he should not be struck off the roll of attorneys and notaries by reason of his knowledge that his client, Mrs. Hough, had already put in a claim for compensation when he forwarded the same claim on a second occasion to the War Losses Compensation, and by adding the words "or any other persons," and "either against the Colonial Government or the military" without the claimant's knowledge. Certain items which had previously been disallowed were reclaimed. The commission made no award on the claim, as the statement was false, and no previous claim had been made, and the evidence on the other matters was unsatisfactory. The respondent, who appeared before the commission, admitted that in 1903 he was suspended for six months, but said that in this matter he was told by the Magistrate's Clerk to fill in the words complained of. In an affidavit, in reply to those of the applicants, the respondent stated that when he sent the forms to Mrs. Hough he requested her to insert all her losses which she had not previously claimed. He could remember generally that her previous claim was for jewellery. Had he known she was claiming the same items, he could easily have forwarded her a form for review. The words be inserted must have been on the paper before the claimant signed.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the applicant, and Mr. Burton was for the respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: Upon the evidence which was given before the Compensation Commission, that Commission was perfectly justified in taking a very serious view of this case, and in sending the papers to the Law Society to deal with. The charges are three-fold; but the gravamen of the charges is contained in the third: that in the printed declaration he inserted the following words in ink: "or any other persons," and further: "either against the Colonial Government or the military," and that he did so after the declaration was signed by the claimant and without her knowledge, and to make it appear that these additions were made by her after she signed it. Upon the evidence given by the respondent himself before the Commission this charge was supported. He said it was customary to do so, and that he did this at the request of Mr. Cloete, the Magistrate's Clerk. It turns out now that nothing of the kind was done, that in point of fact this document was submitted after it had been signed by Mrs. Hough, and whatever interlineations appeared on that document were there before Mrs. Hough signed the document. That, of course, takes away the whole sting of the charge, but there still remains the fact that the Commission was led to believe, when the claim was signed that no part of the claim had been previously dealt with. In point of fact, part of the claim had been dealt with by a previous commission. It is important therefore to consider whether, although this appeared on the face of the claim, that a representative of that Commission, Mr. Horne, was duly informed of the fact that part of the claim had been previously dealt with. On the evidence given on behalf of the respondent, Mr. Horne, the representative of the Commission, was informed of this previous claim. That was so stated by Mr. Krige in his letter of the 6th December, 1905. He said that during the course of her evidence before the Magistrate the claimant distinctly stated she had already given evidence on the question of the jewellery before Mr. Innes, and received no compensation. Then the Commission referred the matter for report to Mr. Horne, who indignantly denied the statement. He said, "As to the statement made, that I had not recorded her evidence in regard to the claim for jewellery, it is incorrect." Mrs. Hough and Miss Hough and all the witnesses for the respondent support the statement. When Mr. Horne is asked to make a statement on oath he tacitly admits the correctness of the statements of these witnesses. Under all the circumstances, I think that the Court could not now impose any punishment upon Mr. Krige for what at the utmost was very great carelessness, but there was certainly no professional impropriety to justify the Court in imposing any punishment upon him. But whatever has been done, the applicant is greatly to blame himself for his explanation before the Commission condemned him. He made an admission there that he made these interlineations after his client had signed the document, and without obtaining her consent. That was an impropriety for which the Court would have been justified in giving some punishment. Under all the circumstances, as it now appears that his admissions made before the Commission had been made under an erroneous impression and have been entirely disproved by the facts subsequently deposed to, I am of opinion that there should be no order; and as to costs, I also consider that there should be no order.

ST. JOHN'S LODGE BENEFIT SOCIETY V. COATES.

This was an application for an order compelling the respondent, one of the trustees of the society, to sign an order to pay the costs of a previous application.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the applicants, and Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the respondent.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan said his client did not refuse now. He would not pay until he was satisfied that the moneys required were for the proper and legitimate business of the society. There had been letters between the parties, and now the respondent objected to pay the costs of the application, which the applicants intended bringing.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (May 8th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The object of this application was to have an order declaring respondent liable to pay costs of an application which was brought before this Court some time ago. (16 C.T. R., 37) Notice of the applicant was given, but was ultimately withdrawn on the respondent consenting to comply with the order asked for. It is quite clear to me that the respondent took up a wholly untenable position. He had originally made an application against the present applicant for the purpose of having a declaration in regard to certain resolution passed by the St. John's Benefit Society. The order made in that case was: "That the resolution that the St. John's Benefit Society should in future work under the Charter of England, and that the sum of £10 be paid out of the funds of the said society for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the initiation of twelve of the members into the British order of Free Gardeners passed at a meeting of the said St. John's Benefit Society duly convened for that purpose, and held on the 20th September, 1905, at Wynberg, be cancelled; and further ordered that the resolution be expunged from the minutes and an interdict restraining the secretary or any other member from paying out of the funds of the said society any money for the purpose contemplated by the said resolution pending an action to be forthwith instituted by the applicants to have the matter properly decided." So that, according to this order, it was not a final decision. The respondent, instead of bringing the action which it was intended that he should bring for the purpose of the final decision, took up a wholly untenable position, and claimed that he had the right to insist upon the return of the charter of Scotland being procured. It is stated that the society holds that it is not incumbent, nor can it be compelled to return the charter of Scotland. That was what was demanded. The first reason given by the present respondent for not complying with the application was that that would be inconsistent with the order of the Court granting an interdict, but it is quite clear that the interdict granted by the Court had no reference to the then application. The then application was to have the means of satisfying the judgment of the Court. The judgment of the Court previously had been that the society was to pay the costs, and, without the assistance of the respondent, it was wholly unable to pay those costs. Respondent was one of the trustees, and he held this in terrorem over the society, seeing that he refused to comply with his duty as one of the trustees for the payment of costs, until certain things were done which he had no right to claim from the other side. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that the applicant had no other course but to come into court for the purpose of obtaining redress. Respondent ultimately consented to it, but it was too late, it was after the costs had been incurred, and it is only fair, therefore, that those costs should be paid by the respondent. Of course, the costs of the present application must also be paid by the respondent. An order will, therefore, be granted as prayed.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REX V. SCHUR. { 1906.
May 7th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of Namaqualand, who had found appellant guilty of contravening section 22 of the Stock Theft Act, No. 35, 1893, by receiving certain stolen goats without having reasonable belief that they were the property of the seller. Appellant was fined £10, or in default three months' imprisonment.

From the record it appeared that the goats in question had been stolen by one Gert Coetzee, who had been arrested on a charge of theft, and who was called as the principal witness against appellant. Coetzee, it was stated, was a son and member of the Concordia Community. The goats were sold on two dates to accused at O'okiep. Defendant, in his evidence, said that he lived at O'okiep, and was a partner in the firm of Schur and Son, retailers and butchers. Coetzee looked a respectable man, and there was nothing to arouse suspicion that the goats might have been stolen.

Mr. Benjamin was for appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Benjamin said that he admitted that the onus probandi under the section was upon the accused. But in such a case as this the quantum of proof required (in view of the fact that the Magistrate had found that accused had paid a fair price, that he had entered the transaction in his book, except the name of the party from whom he bought, and that, in addition, the accused had not for one moment the slightest idea that the stock was stolen) was much smaller than ordinarily. He submitted that the evidence before the Court below was sufficient to find that accused had reasonable cause for believing that this stock belonged to Coetzee. The stock was such as was ordinarily possessed by people of the class of Coetzee, who was one of the miners at Concordia.

Without calling upon Mr. Howel Jones,

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the accused is charged with having received stolen stock from a thief without having reasonable cause for believing that the stock was the property of the person from whom he received it or that such person was duly authorised by the rightful owner to deal with and dispose of it. The Magistrate had to ascertain in this case whether the accused had such bona fide belief. That is a question of fact which he had to determine, and the burden of proving that fact lay upon the accused. The Magistrate came to the conclusion that the accused had not satisfied him that he had such bona fide belief that the seller had the right to sell this property. Now, the circumstances under which the Magistrate came to that conclusion are the following: It seems that a young coloured man of the age of 20 years came to the accused with these goats, and the accused, without making any inquiries as to the manner in which these goats had been acquired by the seller, to ascertain whether he carried a pass with him, which would to some extent establish his ownership, bought the goats from this "boy." It seems that the "boy" was wholly unknown to the accused. Now, on the whole, one would say the circumstances were suspicious; that a young "boy" of this class should be the owner of those goats persons knowing that district would not readily believe; and it is quite reasonable, therefore, to expect that the accused should have made inquiries to satisfy himself that there was no ground for these suspicions, and that this coloured boy had the right to sell this property. He made no attempt to remove the suspicions which ought to have existed in his own mind. He purchases the six goats from the accused, and then he makes this extraordinary observation to him, he says himself: "After purchasing the first lot of goats, I told him to look round amongst his friends to see if they had any." That was a very dangerous suggestion to make. This boy does look round amongst his friends, and, for a second time without making inquiries, the accused bought four goats from this boy. On the second occasion again, the circumstances were suspicious, and any person who had used his common-sense would have had grave doubts whether this young lad could be owner of the goats, and have the right to sell them. Under the circumstances, I think the Magistrate was right in coming to the conclusion that the accused had no bona fide belief that the seller of the stock had a right to sell the stock, and that, consequently, the accused had not discharged the burden of proof which lay upon him when he had such belief, and the Magistrate was right in coming to the conclusion that there was a contravention of the section. The appeal will be dismissed.

Mr. Benjamin called the attention of the Court to the fact that the record said appellant was charged under the provisions of section 22, Act 35, 1893, with the crime of theft. That was not correct, and he applied for an amendment of the record.

Mr. Howel Jones acquiesced in the application.

[Maasdorp, J.: The record will be amended, and instead of the word "theft" the following words will be substituted: "Contravention of the provisions of section 22 of the Act."]

REX V. DHARMADAS.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of the Cape, who had convicted appellant of perjury, and sentenced him to six months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

From the records it appeared that the Assistant Resident Magistrate of the Cape in March last convicted the appellant of perjury. The case had been sent to the Attorney-General, who had remitted it to the Magistrate for decision, and the Magistrate sent appellant to gaol for six months without the option of a fine. Three records were brought before the Court in this matter. On the 31st March, 1906, the appellant, who was an Indian trader, alleged that he had been assaulted by one Fatichand, another Indian trader, and he swore an affidavit to that effect. On that affidavit a warrant for the arrest of the other man was issued, but the police did not execute that warrant, certain facts, as they said, having come to their notice. In consequence, a charge of perjury was laid against the present appellant on the ground that he had sworn a false affidavit, and evidence was taken, and the appellant produced the evidence of two European witnesses, viz., Stockberg and Van Dyk. A preliminary investigation was held, and the papers were sent to the Attorney-General, who declined to prosecute on the charge of perjury. After that the appellant, Dharmadag, brought an action against Fatichand for malicious arrest and false imprisonment, claiming £20 damages in the R.M.'s Court. The appellant, during the course of the case, repeated on oath what he had previously stated in his affidavit. The Magistrate heard the case, and found in favour of the defendant. Proceedings were then instituted afresh against the present appellant on a charge of perjury, based on the statement that he had made during the hearing of the civil case. Appellant was at the remitted hearing unable to produce the evidence of Stockberg and Van Dyk, which he had produced at the first trial.

Dr. Greer was for the appellant; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Nightingale: That is not on the record, I think.

Dr. Greer: The record says that appellant did not produce the evidence of these men at the trial, but I am instructed that they were subpoenaed.

Mr. Nightingale: I don't know whether subpoenas were issued. There may have been a good reason why they were not issued.

Dr. Greer (proceeding) said that the appeal was brought on four grounds, as follows: (1) That the judgment and convictions were not supported by the evidence; (2) that evidence was admitted which was illegal and incompetent; (3) that the A.R.M. of the Cape, who tried the case, before recording such conviction or sentence was incompetent to deal with it on the ground of interest, or on the ground that he was a witness duly summoned for the defence in the civil case, and that the Taxing Officer had allowed him one guinea for attendance as witness in such case; (4) that, if the evidence warranted the conviction, and there was no other ground for exception, having regard to the circumstances, the sentence of the Court was unwarranted. He (counsel) did not propose to support the fourth ground.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: It seems that in this case a civil action was brought by the accused against Fatichand for malicious prosecution. This was in respect of a charge of perjury made by Fatichand against the accused. It appeared that the accused had laid a charge of assault and robbery against Fatichand, and after some inquiry by the police the charge was allowed to drop. Thereupon Fatichand laid a charge of perjury against the accused for having alleged in his affidavit that he (Fatichand) had assaulted and robbed him. In that case also, after the proceedings had been laid before the Attorney-General, he refused to prosecute. Thereupon, a civil action is brought by the accused against Fatichand in respect of a malicious charge, in alleging this perjury against the accused. The Magistrate in that case gave judgment for the defendant, with costs, and it seems that it was in that civil case that the accused virtually repeated the charge which he had made in the first instance against Fatichand. He gave evidence in substance amounting to a statement that Fatichand had assaulted and robbed him. That statement is now alleged in the present prosecution to have been false, and constitutes the perjury upon which the present proceedings are based. The Magistrate in the civil proceeding had to ascertain whether the offence of assault and robbery committed by Fatichand had not existed. He came to the conclusion that it had not been satisfactorily proved that any such assault had been committed, and that any assault had been committed, and he found the accused guilty of perjury. It is said that his finding is based on insufficient evidence. The evidence given in this case consists of that of Fatichand himself, against whom the charge was made, and he gives the clearest evidence and makes the most positive statement that he had never at any time committed an assault upon the accused, and never deprived him of his property. This direct and positive statement is not met by any contradiction on the part of the accused himself or any witnesses on his behalf. It is said that it is not contradicted by witnesses for the accused, because there was some difficulty in obtaining the evidence of two persons who had on a former occasion given evidence in favour of the accused, and it is also said that the accused himself did not give evidence because it was considered sufficient on his part merely to put in the civil record. Now, it is impossible for the Court to go outside the record in order to discover what might have been the result if certain evidence had been produced which might have been produced. The Court can only take the record as it stands, and decide whether the Magistrate on the evidence he had before him was right in coming to the conclusion that he arrived at. We may take it for granted that the defendant had, in his plea, denied the charge, but he was not put into the witness-box to deny the charge upon oath. It is said that that might be attributed to some oversight. The accused was represented by an agent in this case, who seems to have conducted the matter with proper skill, and I do not for a moment suppose that he would have committed such a grave error as to close the case without producing evidence on behalf of the accused, even if that evidence was only that of the accused himself, if such evidence was forthcoming. The Court must, therefore, only treat the evidence on the record now as it stands. It is contended that it was not this direct statement of Fatchand, that he had not committed the assault, which influenced the Magistrate, but some opinion that he must have formed upon the rest of the evidence. Now, it is impossible for the Court to dive into the mind of the Magistrate as to his finding upon details, when he has evidence of such weight and directness as was given before him. The evidence referred to as misleading the Magistrate is said to consist of a statement that the goods that were alleged to have been stolen from him were taken out of boxes which had been shortly before opened, and that, consequently, the goods could not have been in the possession of the accused, because they had only just been taken out of the newly-opened boxes. Counsel for the appellant contends that the conclusion that the goods had been taken out of the newly-opened boxes is not justified by the evidence, because there is no evidence which goes in so many words to show that the boxes had been opened before the goods had been taken out. Upon the whole of the evidence, it appears that when search was made in Fatchand's shop certain bundles were examined, and none of the contents were identified by the accused when search was made and it does not appear that there were newly-opened boxes, and that there were parcels which were wrapped in tissue paper, which there is reasonable ground for concluding upon the evidence had just been taken out of these boxes. I come to the conclusion, therefore, that, even if the Magistrate was influenced by this evidence, he was influenced upon reasonable grounds, and upon the whole of the case it seems to me that there is clear and uncontradicted proof that the evidence which had been given on oath by the accused was false, and that the crime of perjury was committed. There is another ground upon which this appeal is brought, and that is that the Magistrate was really interested in the case: If that were proved it might be that the Court would grant some redress; but there is no positive proof of any such interest beyond the mere statement that the Magistrate was subpoenaed to give evidence upon some point or other in the civil case, and that he was called as a witness in favour of Fatchand against the accused. As a matter of fact, he gave no evidence, there is no proof upon what point his evidence was required, and it might have been wholly immaterial, and it may not have been in respect of knowledge which affected his decision in the present case. Upon that ground also the Court must hold that the appellant has failed in his appeal. The appeal will be dismissed, and the sentence confirmed.

ADAMS V. MOWBRAY MUNICIPAL COUNCIL.

Municipal rates — Owner and tenant — Notice — Act 45 of 1882, Sec. 134.

Sec. 134 of Act 45 of 1882 provides that if an occupier's rates remain unpaid for three months, the Council may within twelve months after the making of the rate serve notice on the owner of the property and recover from him. A's tenant being in default, the Town Council of M. delivered a notice to their messenger, to be served on A. This was done within the prescribed twelve months. A. denied having received this notice, but admitted having received a demand for the rates within the said period.

Held on appeal, that although the mere fact of a letter having been handed to a messenger is not presumptive evidence of its delivery to the addressee; the subsequent demand made upon A. was due notice in itself.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Wynberg, who had found for the Mowbray Council in an action which they had brought, under section 134 of Act 45, 1882, against appellant.

The ground of appeal was that the notice of the rate was not duly published, and that, therefore, appellant, who was owner of the property assessed, was not liable to pay the tenant's rate.

From the record it appeared that the rate had been assessed against one Abrahams, as tenant of a house, No. 15, Vine-street, Mowbray, of which the appellant was owner. Abrahams had not paid the rates, and the owner was sued.

The Magistrate, in his reasons, said that in giving judgment for the plaintiff Council as prayed, he held that timely notice was given to the owner.

Dr. Greer (for the appellant) said that if it were clear that a rate was struck on the 13th January, 1906, and if there were a letter, as was admitted, sent on the 11th January of the following year, demanding the rate from the landlord, it would still be within the twelve months stipulated by the Act. One might argue, however, that there was a certain amount of neglect on the part of the municipality, and that the landlord had been prejudiced by notice not having been sent to him until within two days of the utmost time allowed by the Act. But, then, arose the question of whether due notice had been given of the striking of the rate. The Act provided that notice must be given within 30 days that such a rate had been struck by advertisement in a newspaper (if any) circulating in such municipality, and any such other mode as the Council may by resolution direct. There was, he submitted, absolutely no proof given in the Court below that publication had been made in a newspaper.

Mr. Upton (for the respondent Council) said that the rate book was produced, and that that was sufficient prima facie evidence as provided by section 132. Furthermore, at a later stage, owing to an oversight as to the provisions of section 132, the advertisement was put in.

Dr. Greer having been heard in reply,

Massdorp, J.: It seems that under section 134 of Act 45, 1882, where the rate for which a tenant or occupier is liable remains unpaid for three months, then the Council's collector may, by notice, demand from the owner of the property within a period of twelve months the rate which remains unpaid, and, if such sum is not then paid by the owner for a period of one month after the demand is made, the Council can take proceedings to enforce payment. In this case the question arose whether the proper notice had been served upon the owner within twelve months. It seems that it was considered necessary by the Council to serve notice within twelve months, and then, in addition to the notice, to make a demand later on. The question arose whether the first notice had been served within the twelve months. The Magistrate found upon all the evidence that the notice had been handed to the messenger by the secretary of the Council, and he came to the conclusion that, under ordinary circumstances, it had been delivered in the same manner as it appeared other notices had been delivered about the same time. I am rather doubtful whether the Magistrate had sufficient evidence before him to find that the first notice was actually served. The mere fact of a letter having been given to a messenger does not make it, by itself, presumptive evidence of the subsequent delivery of the letter to the person to whom it is so addressed. But then it seems to me that, failing that notice, the defect has been rectified by the actual demand which was made, within the twelve months, upon the owner. It is admitted that he received the demand for this account within the twelve months. That demand, in my opinion, was sufficient notice within the meaning of this section to render the owner liable. The appeal must therefore be dismissed, with costs.

VAN ZYL V. TRUTER.

Insufficient tender—Costs—Magistrate's decision over-ruled.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Calvinia, who had found for appellant for £16 9s. in an action for £28 7s., produce sold to defendant, but had ordered appellant to pay all costs.

From the record it appeared that appellant had summoned respondent in the Magistrate's Court for £28 7s., for certain sweet potatoes, oats, oranges, and tobacco sold and delivered to defendant. Defendant pleaded tender of £16 4s. The principal question between the parties was the rate at which the tobacco and oranges should be paid for. Plaintiff claimed 4s. a roll for the tobacco, and 6s. per 100 for the oranges; defendant tendered 3s. 3d. for the tobacco, and 4s. for the oranges. Defendant also deducted from the plaintiff's claim 5s. in respect of sweet potatoes, which, he said, were rotten. The Magistrate gave judgment for plaintiff for £16 9s., but directed that he should pay all costs.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for appellant (Paul Hendrik Stephanus van Zyl); there was no appearance for respondent.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that he had come to the conclusion that the defendant's version of the transaction was correct, and also very probable under the circumstances. He gave judgment for £16 9s., taking the prices tendered by defendant, but making no allowance for the damaged oranges. He considered that the tender was a fair and reasonable one, and such a tender as might well have formed the basis of settlement between the parties. For this reason, he (the Magistrate) thought it only fair and equitable that the plaintiff should bear costs.

Mr. De Villiers said that there were two grounds of appeal—(1) that, on the merits of the case, the Magistrate should have awarded more to plaintiff, and (2) that, having been awarded an amount in excess of the tender, plaintiff should not have been condemned to pay costs.

Maasdorp, J.: It appears that in this case there was a direct conflict between the evidence for the plaintiff and the defendant. The Magistrate, after going carefully through the evidence, is satisfied that he can rely on the evidence of the witnesses for the defence, and I see no reason why this Court should differ from the magistrate upon his finding in that respect. The question was as to whether all the articles had been purchased by the defendant at the prices stipulated for by the plaintiff, and the Magistrate came to the conclusion that only a portion of the stuff was bought at those prices, and that some of it was bought from a person whom he regards as the plaintiff's agent at a less sum than is stated by the witnesses for the plaintiff. I do not think the Court can interfere with the finding of the Magistrate upon this point. The Magistrate has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to receive £16 9s. It appears that the defendant only tendered £16 4s. The Magistrate gave judgment for £16 9s., but ordered the plaintiff to pay the costs of the case. Under ordinary circumstances, where a tender is insufficient, then the plaintiff who obtains more than was tendered is entitled to his costs and sufficient ground must be shown why that rule should be varied in this case. Costs are, generally speaking, in the discretion of the Magistrate, but that must be a judicial discretion, and it is quite within the province of the Court to consider whether the discretion has been properly exercised by the Magistrate. The Magistrate gives as his reason for making the plaintiff pay costs that this tender was of such a character that it should have formed the basis of a settlement between the parties. Under these circumstances, considering that it should have led to a different result from that contended for by defendant, as well as that contended for by plaintiff, the consequence of his reasoning would be that both parties were to blame and each should pay his own costs. but I do not think the reason given by the Magistrate—the fact of the tender forming a good basis of settlement—should have weighed with him so as to make the successful party pay the costs. Such reasoning could be used in very many cases where tenders are made which would become the basis of some settlement between the parties, but on the whole I do not think that the Magistrate has properly exercised his discretion. The tender was found insufficient, judgment was given for the plaintiff for more than the amount of the tender, and the plaintiff was entitled to his costs. The appeal must be allowed with costs, and the judgment of the Court below altered to the extent that the defendant is ordered to pay costs in the Court below.

PALMER V. MORRIS. { 1906.
{ May 7th.

Act 40 of 1905—Review—Gross irregularity — Exclusion of evidence.

M. was employed by P. as a barman, and having during such employ sustained certain injuries, applied to a Magistrate to assess compensation under Act 40 of 1905. The Magistrate made an order for a weekly sum of more than 50 per cent. of M.'s regular wages. Thereafter P. applied under Sec. 14 to have the order set aside, and tendered evidence to show that his injury was due to his own misconduct and gross negligence, that his misconduct had further retarded his recovery, and that he had sufficiently recovered to be fit for work.

Held, that in refusing to admit evidence on these points, the Magistrate had been guilty of gross irregularity, and the case was referred back to him to take the evidence in question and decide on the merits.

This matter came before the Court upon review of certain proceedings in the Resident Magistrate's Court, Cape Town, under the Workman's Compensation Act (No. 40 of 1906), on the ground of gross irregularity. This was the first case under the Act brought into the Supreme Court.

The application was brought upon notice to the Magistrate to produce the record of proceedings in an application made by Palmer for a provisional order granted by the Magistrate, upon the application of Morris under the Workman's Compensation Act, on March 6, 1906, for payment of £2 a week to be set aside on the ground that the Magistrate exceeded his jurisdiction in allowing £2 a week instead of £1, that he rejected competent evidence to the effect that the said Morris had recovered sufficiently to resume work, and that subsequently while under the influence of liquor he had again injured himself and retarded his recovery from the effects of his first accident. The notice also called upon Morris to show cause why the judgment of the R.M. should not be reviewed and set aside.

It appeared that the respondent Morris, who was employed by Palmer as a barman, fell and fractured his leg. He was awarded £2 a week as compensation during the period that he was incapacitated, but this was afterwards reduced to 30s. a week, and, as a matter of fact, it transpired that the employer had not paid Morris anything, but had undertaken to provide him with board and lodging during his period of incapacity. The allegation now made by Palmer was that Morris had actually worked on three or four days, that he had sufficiently recovered to resume work, but that, owing to his intemperate habits, he had met with another accident, in consequence of which he had had to be treated at the hospital, and had thus retarded his recovery. The applicant took proceedings in the Magistrate's Court to have the provisional order set aside, and tendered certain evidence as to Morris's conduct in retarding his own recovery, and the Magistrate, in refusing to take the evidence tendered by Palmer, said: No evidence can be admitted as to whether, since the original accident, the injured party has been under the influence of liquor, and while in that condition has re-injured himself, and so retarded his recovery. The Magistrate also expressed the opinion that if the man was addicted to drink, as alleged, then his employer was himself imprudent for keeping him on his premises, and also inducing him to work when not in a fit condition.

Mr. Burton for appellant. Dr. Greer for respondent.

Mr. Burton submitted that the Magistrate acted quite irregularly in refusing to admit the evidence tendered by the applicant when he applied to set aside the provisional order.

Dr. Greer submitted that the Magistrate found that the accident was not due to neglect on the part of claimant, and that he could not be required to go back on his own decision.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the applicant moved in the Magistrate's Court to have a provisional order granted to the respondent under the 11th section of the Workman's Compensation Act for a payment of 50 per cent. of his wages set aside, on the ground that the injury in question did not rise out of or in the course of employment, that the injury was caused by the plaintiff's gross carelessness, in that he was intoxicated, and that the plaintiff was sufficiently recovered to resume work. The first question that arose in this case was whether the employer could move under section 14 to have an order set aside in a case in which he had himself had notice to appear at the first inquiry, and whether he had so appeared in order to put his case before the Magistrate. Now, it seems to me to be quite clear, even referring merely to section 14 itself, that it must be within the power of the employer to make this application even if he had appeared before the Magistrate in the first instance, because one of the grounds there given for having an order set aside or varied is that the claimant has sufficiently recovered to resume work. It is quite possible, after an order was given, whether it was after notice to the employer or not, if it is shown that the claimant has sufficiently recovered, the employer could move, and in the majority of cases that question would really arise after the order had been given, and, as I say, it certainly may arise even in a case where the master had in the first instance appeared to represent his case to the Magistrate. But I think that the matter is made perfectly clear under the 15th section, where it is provided that any person adjudged to pay wages to an injured workman under such judgment or order, may, at any time, upon obtaining further evidence, take further proceedings to terminate the said judgment or order. It might reasonably be said that in giving that power to the employer, the workman might from time to time be harassed by these proceedings on the part of the employer; but in order to prevent that the legislature has provided in the same section that the Magistrate shall impose double costs in case such court is of opinion that the proceeding is frivolous or veracious. It is, consequently, provided that the employer can at any time he secures fresh evidence bring the matter before the Court again, and this section specially points, among other sections, to section 14 as one of those under which the proceedings may be taken. The employer could therefore, at any time, upon receiving fresh evidence, proceed under section 14, and establish the grounds for setting aside the order, which are those actually set forth in the application by the applicant in the case before the Magistrate. Upon the applicant obtaining evidence under the first ground, that is that the injury sustained by the workman did not arise out of or in the course of his employment, the Magistrate rejected the evidence tendered, upon the ground that that point had already been settled by his previous decision. The question could be reopened before him, and the evidence could properly be led to establish the applicant's case. Evidence was also tendered to show that the injury had been caused by the workman's own gross neglect. This also was refused by the Magistrate. He further rejected evidence to prove that the workman was sufficiently recovered. Except in so far as, upon that ground, he himself took the evidence of the district surgeon, and upon the district surgeon certifying that the man was not sufficiently recovered, he regarded that he had sufficient evidence before him. Now, in my opinion, it was his duty to hear all such evidence as the applicant might tender, in order to establish his case under any one of these grounds set forth in his application. The Magistrate was, therefore, in dealing with this case, guilty of gross irregularity in refusing this evidence, and it is upon that ground that the Court is now asked to set aside the order of the Magistrate. The effect of the finding will be that the matter must now be referred back to the Magistrate for him to take the evidence tendered by the applicant, and then decide the case upon its merits. This is, as I stated, a question upon review under the 190th rule, in which the Court is asked to review the proceedings of the Magistrate's Court. It is not an appeal. It seems to be provided by the Act that if the Magistrate had acted regularly, and had made a finding in dealing regularly with the case no appeal would lie to this court. The matter will be referred back to the Magistrate to admit the evidence tendered, and decide the matter upon its merits.

Mr. Burton applied for costs of the application.

Dr. Greer said that the respondent in this case was the Magistrate. No notice had been given that costs would be asked for.

B 1

Mr. Burton: Both the Magistrate and Morris are called upon. The Magistrate is only called upon to produce the record, and the real respondent is Morris.

[Maasdorp, J.: Is there anything in the Act that protects workmen in matters of this kind?]

Mr. Burton: There are sections dealing with costs, but nothing that would affect this question.

Maasdorp, J.: It would appear upon the record that in the first instance it was not the respondent's agent that raised the question which has raised this difficulty, but the respondent has appeared in this case to support the finding of the Magistrate, and his opposition has caused these costs. Respondent will be ordered to pay costs.

[Applicant's Attorney. A. J. Mc. Callum: Respondent's Attorney: E. J. Sidney].

Ex parte ZEEDERBERG.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, as a matter of urgency, for a temporary interdict restraining one Joseph Gibson from removing goods at certain premises, No. 66, Bree-street, Cape Town, pending an action to be brought by petitioner for arrears of rent, amounting to £45. Petitioner stated that he had let the premises to respondent at £15 a month rent, to be paid in advance; that the rent for March, April, and May was still unpaid; and that he apprehended that, unless interdicted, the respondent would remove the goods, which petitioner believed were the only assets that he had.

Interdict granted, pending action, with leave to respondent to move to set aside if so advised.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT v. (1906.
HOULDER BROS. (May 8th.

This was an application brought by the Colonial Government upon notice calling upon the respondents, Houlder Bros., to show cause why an order should not be granted authorising an extension of time until the August term wherein the applicants should prosecute an appeal from a decision of a Divisional Court in an action brought by the present respondents against the applicants for demurrage.

The affidavit of the Commissioner of Public Works stated that the petitioner had noted an appeal from the decision of the Hon. Sir John Buchanan, sitting as a Divisional Court of the Supreme Court, given on the 1st March in the action of Houlder Bros. v. Colonial Government. (16. C.T.R., 103) A case was now pending between the same parties in the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division, in England, which would probably be heard in June. Considerable expense might be saved if the decision were given in the case in England before the appeal here was heard. Petitioner applied for an extension of time for the prosecution of the appeal until the August term.

The answering affidavit of Mr. W. G. Fairbridge, one of the attorneys for plaintiff in the action, stated that the applicants had paid the amount of the judgment and interest in the case, viz., £11,170 odd. The said amount was paid without any reservation or condition of any kind, and was accepted by plaintiffs as a settlement of the claim. Applicants, he said, had shown no good and sufficient cause for not proceeding with this matter in due course. There would be no saving of expense unless applicants were prepared to agree that if the decision in the other case was adverse to them they would abandon the appeal in this court.

The replying affidavit of Mr. Reid, one of the attorneys for the applicants explained that the amount of the judgment and interest was paid over as soon as possible in order to save further interest from accruing.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton and Mr. Howell Jones) for applicants; Mr. Close (with him Mr. Struben) for respondents.

Mr. Searle said that, as regarded the prosecution of the appeal, it was quite clear under the Charter of Justice that they had the Jones v. Cape Town Council (12 Supreme Court Reports, 144) the Court decided that if an appeal were brought within 21 days, they could proceed in the appeal at any time within twelve months. The applicants thought that it would save costs, not only to themselves, but also to respondents, if the appeal were not proceeded with until the case in England, in which similar questions were raised, had been decided. If the Court in England decided in the same way as the Divisional Court in this colony had decided, then the applicants in all probability would not go further.

Mr. Close submitted that the case had really nothing to do with Jones v. Town Council of Cape Town, inasmuch as in that case the point was as to noting an appeal, while here the question was as to prosecuting an appeal. He contended that applicants had not shown a "good and sufficient cause" for an extension such as was asked for. Even if the issues raised in the case in England were identical with those raised in the case in this court, what effect, he asked, would it have on postponing the appeal here? Respondents were entitled to some finality in these proceedings, and that could only be obtained if the applicants were confined to their strict rights in law. If the applicants had agreed to bind themselves not to proceed further with the appeal if the decision of the case in England were against them on similar points to those raised in the case in the Divisional Court, then there might be something to be said for the argument that this application was in the interests of a saving of expense. But they had made no such undertaking.

Mr. Searle said that there was just as much reason, indeed, perhaps more, why the action should have been brought altogether in England, than for bringing the case in this court. A great deal turned upon the actual construction of a contract entered into between the Agent-General in London and Houlder Bros., as to the supply of Welsh coal to be delivered at Cape Town and Port Elizabeth.

De Villiers, C.J.: One of the grounds upon which this application is opposed is that there could be no right of appeal after the Government had voluntarily paid over the whole amount of the judgment. That appears to me a wholly untenable position. It may well be that the Government could not claim security after paying money voluntarily in the manner in which they have paid it, but they are not prevented from appealing in terms of the 24th section of Act 35, 1896. If within 21 days after judgment, notice of appeal is given to the respondent and the Registrar of the Court, the applicant would have the right to appeal. But then applicant now asks the Court to go further, and act under the last proviso of the 24th section, where it is provided that it shall be lawful for the Court, if good and sufficient cause be shown, to extend the time within which the applicant shall prosecute his appeal. The "good and sufficient cause" alleged in this case is that there is an action pending in the High Court in England, in which questions similar to those raised in the present case will be raised. Now, if that court by which this case was to be tried, were, say, the Privy Council, which is a Court of Appeal from the Court here, no doubt that would be "good and sufficient cause," because that would be an authoritative decision which would be decisive of the rights of the parties. But the decision of the High Court is no authority in this court. It would probably be before a jury, or if there is no jury, it would probably be before a single judge, and the decision of the High Court would be no authority in this court. Therefore, I am unable to see that the fact that there is such an action pending is "a good and sufficient cause." It may be a matter of convenience, but it is not, in my opinion, such a "good and sufficient cause" as would justify the Court on appeal now in further extending the right of appeal. The application must, therefore, be refused, and with costs.

KEMLO V. KEMLO.

This was an application brought by Alexander Kemlo upon notice to his brother John Kemlo, calling upon him to show cause why an order should not be granted authorising Sidney St. John Henley, of Butterworth, auctioneer, to dispose of certain perpetual quit-rent land situate at Kei Mouth, district of Kentani, Transkei, and why respondent should not forthwith deliver possession of the said land.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the parties had carried on business in partnership as Kemlo Bros., but that the partnership had been dissolved, and that, in the course of the winding-up, certain disputes arose which were eventually referred to arbitrators, whose award was on the 17th October last made a rule of Court. In that award a certain sum was directed to be paid to the applicant; it was ordered that respondent should continue to occupy the land to the end of 1905 on payment of a certain rental, and that the land should then be sold, and, if any surplus should remain after payment of the awards and the debts on the farm, it was to be divided between the two brothers.

Applicant said that before the sum of £1,600 which was found by the arbitrators to be due to him could be paid the mortgages on the farm now in dispute must first be paid off, and applicant was responsible for these mortgages.

Respondent said that he had no objection to the farm being sold, but he did not think that the present was an opportune time, and he thought that if the sale could be deferred for four or five years the farm might then be sold to advantage.

In support of respondent's affidavit an affidavit by John Crosbie, sworn appraiser, Butterworth, was read. Mr. Crosbie said that the present was a most inopportune time in which to sell properties in Butterworth and Willowvale districts. It was said that the railway to Butterworth would be completed in about two years, and it was anticipated that this railway would open up the districts round about, and that properties would increase in value. At the present time there was no market for stock, farming produce, or land in those districts, but he believed that in two or three years there would be a good market.

Applicant, in a replying affidavit, said that he was prepared to grant a lease of the farm or take a lease of it for three years on and from the 1st July, 1906, at a rental to be fixed by arbitration, and postpone the sale until the expiry of that lease.

Mr. Van Zyl was for applicant; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for respondent.

Counsel stated that the parties had been trying to arrive at a compromise, and that this was as near as they had been able to go.

De Villiers, C.J.: It appears to me that if the applicant had insisted upon this application the Court would have had to grant it. The terms of the award are such that it seems clear that the sale should take place at the expiration of the lease. The lease expired on the 31st December, 1905. Therefore, there must be an order as prayed, with costs, but the Court will direct that the sale be postponed for a period of three years, and that in the meantime the respondent would be entitled to a lease of the land in question until the expiration of such period, at a rental to be fixed by two arbitrators, one of them to be appointed by applicant and the other by respondent, and that if the respondent should refuse to take such land on the terms agreed upon by the arbitrators applicant will take the lease on such terms.

CUTLER AND MARSDEN V. JUBB.

This was an application to make absolute a rule nisi calling upon the respondents to show cause why an interdict should not be granted restraining certain auctioneers from paying over proceeds of a sale of goods at Leeds Houses, Riebeeck-square, or at least £48, pending an action to be brought by applicants.

A rule nisi had been granted on an ex parte application last week, the applicants alleging that their landlord's lien was in danger, and that Messrs. Zoutendyk had been selling by auction certain furniture which was on the premises, and which belonged to applicants. They said that respondent, Eliza Jubb, wife of Richard James Jubb, was in arrear with rent for April and May at £13 a month, payable in advance.

The answering affidavit of the respondent denied that the rent was payable in advance. She said that the rent for April was not demanded, and that it would have been paid in due course. No rent was due for May at present. Notice to vacate the premises had been duly given to applicants and accepted. On the 1st May the key of the premises was handed to Mr. Marsden, who accepted the same, saying that he was glad to get it. The whole of the furniture belonged to deponent; none of the furniture mentioned in the schedule to the petition had been sold, and petitioner was prepared to defend any action the applicants might be advised to bring in connection with the sale. She was at present the lessee of two large boarding-houses in Cape Town, and also of a large boarding-house at Sea Point. The furniture sold by Messrs. Zoutendyk was the surplus furniture that she did not require for her businesses. Supporting affidavits by the respondent's husband, who acted as manager for her, and also by Mr. Sidney, attorney, who testified to having tendered £13 rent for April to applicants' attorney, were also put in.

Mr. Upington was for applicants; Dr. Greer appeared on behalf of Mrs. Jubb to show cause.

[De Villiers, C.J.: They tendered the rent after the rule had been granted.]

Dr. Greer: The application for the rule was made ex parte. Counsel went on to read a further affidavit by R. J. Jubb, to the effect that none of the goods belonging to the applicants had been disposed of by the auctioneers.

Mr. Upington read a replying affidavit by Alexander Grieg, cabinet-maker, who said that he had taken a portion of Leeds Houses from R. J. Jubb at a rental of £1 10s. per month, which rental was payable and had been paid in advance. Jubb afterwards told him that he was giving up Leeds Houses, and that he must leave, but deponent said that he must have one month's notice. An affidavit by Thomas Marsden, of Cutler and Marsden, was to the effect that it was arranged that the rent should be paid in advance when the rent was reduced. He admitted that it was not customary for respondent to pay the rent in advance; but, nevertheless, it was agreed that respondent should so pay the rent, and it had been paid in advance at times. He admitted that, on further inquiry, he found that his firm's furniture had not been disposed of by Messrs. Zoutendyk and Co., but he said that all the furniture in question had been removed out of the said house, and he, therefore, had no direct knowledge as to the sale of the said furniture. He also said that he only received notice from the respondent on the 28th April that she intended to vacate the premises at the end of that month. An affidavit by a partner in Zoutendyk and Co. was also read.

Dr. Greer submitted that if the facts now before the Court had been before the Court when the application was made by the landlords, the temporary interdict would not have been granted.

De Villiers, C.J., informed counsel that he proposed to continue the interdict pending the action.

Dr. Greer submitted that there was evidence of bona fides on the part of respondent, and that she had given notice to the landlord of what she was going to do. The rent for April was admitted, but the rent for May and the ownership of the furniture were both clearly matters of dispute.

Without calling upon Mr. Upington,

De Villiers C.J.: There are two questions in dispute between the parties, and they are as to whether the second month's rent is payable, and whether certain furniture still belongs to the applicant or not. Those questions cannot be decided upon this motion; they can only be decided by action. But one thing is perfectly clear—that the applicants were entitled to apply for their interdict. They are the landlords of these premises; on the 1st May there was rent, at all events, admittedly one month's rent, due to them; and they saw a notice to the effect that all the furniture and effects contained in the houses belonging to the applicants were to be sold. They were bound to protect themselves by preventing the loss of the landlord's lien, and they, therefore, applied for an interdict to restrain the auctioneer from paying over the whole of the money to the respondent. The Court confined the amount in respect of which the interdict was given to the amount of the rent for two months, and to the value of the furniture. No doubt, one month's rent is tendered, but I do not think that that should affect the question as to whether the interdict should continue. The amount is not large, it is only £48, and an action must be brought forthwith, and the interdict will be continued, pending action to be forthwith brought, costs of application for interdict to be paid by respondent, but the question of further costs to be costs in the cause, i.e., costs beyond the mere application for the interdict on the 1st May to be costs in the cause.

Dr. Greer asked whether the Court would not be prepared to order alternative security being given in place of the interdict.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The interdict to be discharged upon security to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Supreme Court being given. Although I make this order, I do hope the parties will come to terms now, and prevent the further waste of money by this petty squabble.]

Contract of sale of mining rights —Warranty of title—Redhibitory action—Measure of damages.

The defendants sold to the plaintiffs all their right and title to the concession of certain mining rights in Portuguese Africa, guaranteeing the existence of such rights, and that there would be no obstacle to the passing of legal transfer to the plaintiffs. The defendants, however, possessed only prospecting rights for a short period and were unable to pass legal transfer of title authorizing the purchasers to exercise the full mining rights purchased. The purchase price was not paid, but before the plaintiffs discovered that the defendants would not be able to give full title, they had incurred certain expenditure in Portuguese Africa for the protection of their interests in connection with the purchase, including the expenses of a drill which, under the contract, the plaintiffs had to buy and maintain.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled by means of the redhibitory action to be placed in the same position as if the sale had not been effected and were consequently entitled to have the sale cancelled and to claim as damages the expenditure reasonably incurred in connection with the purchase.

This was an action brought by the Inhambane Oil and Mineral Development Syndicate, Limited, against Walter Mears and Herbert James Ford, described as speculators, residing in the Transvaal, to recover £50,000 damages for alleged breach of contract.

The plaintiffs' declaration was in the following terms:

1. The plaintiff is a company duly registered in this colony as a limited liability company. The defendants are speculators residing in the Transvaal. By order of this Honourable Court, dated the 16th February last, jurisdiction in this suit was duly confirmed by the attachment of certain shares in this colony.

2. On the 30th October, 1903, and at Cape Town, an agreement was entered into between the defendants and Carl Jeppe, the chairman of, and acting for and on behalf of a certain syndicate, known as the Inhambane Oil and Mineral Development Syndicate, Limited, and which was to be registered under the Companies' Act of 1892. Copy of the contract is hereunto annexed.

3. On the 21st November, 1903, the plaintiff company was duly incorporated and registered under the said Act of 1892, one of its objects being to take over the said agreement of October, 1903, and to work and develop the property rights therein mentioned and the said company, with the knowledge and consent of all parties to the said agreement, and are entitled to all the rights and privileges, and are subject to the obligations thereunder, and the defendants became entitled to one thousand shares in the plaintiff company, subject to the matters hereinafter set forth.

4. The plaintiff has duly performed all the obligations undertaken by the said syndicate, by the said agreement, but the defendants wrongfully and unlawfully; and in breach of their said agreement, have wholly failed to perform their obligations thereunder, and have wholly failed to obtain the complete and entire proof that their titles to the rights in the said agreement mentioned have been fully verified, which verification and the details thereof, are fully set out at the end of the said agreement in sub-sections 1, 2, and 3, and although more than a proper time therefor has elapsed, the defendants have, as aforesaid failed to complete their contract, and though called upon so to do neglect and refuse so to do.

5. By reason of the aforesaid breach of contract, the plaintiff company has suffered great loss and damage, and was put to expense in the purchase and conveyance of the drill in the said contract referred to, and incurred other expense, and advanced moneys in the carrying out of their obligations, all of which have been lost to the plaintiff, and in all has sustained damage to the extent of £50,000, wherefore the plaintiff company claims: (a) The sum of £50,000 as and for damages aforesaid; (b) alternate relief; (c) costs of suit.

Defendants' plea was as follows: For a plea to the plaintiff company's declaration, the defendants say:

1. They admit paragraph 1 thereof, save that they crave leave to refer to the order of the Honourable Court dated February 16, whence it will appear that only the right of defendants to receive the said shares was attached.

2. They admit paragraph 2 thereof.

3. As to paragraph 3 thereof, they admit that the plaintiff company took over the said agreement of October, 1903, with its rights, privileges, and obligations, and that they (the defendants) became entitled to receive 1,000 shares in the said company.

4. At the date of the said agreement the titles to the rights of the defendants had still to be verified, as was well known to the syndicate, purchasers under the said agreement; and they crave leave to refer specially to the clause at the end of the said agreement providing for the manner of verification.

5. Subsequently to the signing of the said agreement, and in accordance with the last clause thereof, the first-named defendant proceeded with one E. B. Watermeyer, a land surveyor, who represented the purchasers, to Inhambane, and in or about December, 1903, the defendants' titles and rights to the concession were verified by the said representative, who was satisfied with the defendants' rights and their titles there-to.

6. They deny paragraph 4 thereof, and especially that they failed to carry out their portion of the said agreement in any respect, or to have their rights and titles verified.

7. They deny paragraph 5 thereof, and especially that they have committed a breach of contract, or that plaintiff company has sustained damages in the sum of £50,000, or any damage at all, or any damage for which they (the defendants) are responsible.

8. They admit that the purchasers or the plaintiff's company have expended certain sums of money in carrying out obligations under the said agreement. They say that the said moneys were expended subsequent to the verification of titles as aforesaid, and as provided in the said agreement. Wherefore they pray that the plaintiff company's claim may be dismissed, with costs. And for a claim in reconvention, the defendants (now plaintiffs in reconvention) say:

9. They crave leave to refer to paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 above pleaded, and to the said agreement, and especially to clause 1 thereof, whereunder their right, title, and interest in and to thirty mining titles were sold by them to the purchasers, who thereafter formed the defendant company now sued in reconvention.

10. It became and was the duty of the defendant company to have the said titles made final by the survey of the areas covered by the same, and the taking out of final title, according to the law of Portugal, in force in the territory where the said areas were situate.

11. In breach of their obligations, the defendant company allowed the said titles to lapse, in consequence whereof the said areas have been pegged off by others, and the plaintiffs in reconvention have lost all their rights in and to the said areas, and mining thereon.

12. The damages thus sustained by the plaintiffs in reconvention amount to the sum of £30,000.

13. The plaintiffs in reconvention have further expended the sum of £1,500 in prospecting on the ground covered by the said mining titles, pegging it out, purchasing, conveying, and putting down a drill, and other expenses advanced and incurred on the said areas; the said sum has been wholly lost to the plaintiffs in reconvention through the defendant company allowing the said titles to lapse, and the plaintiffs in reconvention are entitled to recover the said sum as damages. The plaintiffs in reconvention claim (a) The sum of £31,500 as damages; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

Mr. Schreiner K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C.) for plaintiffs. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Joubert) for defendants.

Mr. Schreiner, in opening the case, stated that the matter came in point of jurisdiction upon an order of the Court granted on February 15, 1905, attaching the rights of the defendants to certain shares not yet issued, but which were to be issued to them as vendors. (See 15 C.T.R., 113.) The contract sued upon was an agreement, dated 30th October, 1903, which was attached to the declaration. Counsel proceeded to call the Court's attention to the principal features of the agreement, under which the vendors and co-vendors agreed to sell to Carl Jeppé, as representing the plaintiff syndicate, all the right, title, and interest of Mears and Ford in (1) certain mining titles obtained by the said W. Mears and H. J. Ford from the Portuguese Government over certain 30 areas, comprising approximately 14 square miles, situate in Inhambane, north of Lourenço Marques, as shown in the map attached, and conferring on the holders the right to work for combustibles, bituminous substances, and mineral oils, subject to a payment of one-half per cent. on the profit of the output payable to the Portuguese Government. (2) The right obtained by the vendors from the Portuguese Government on the conditions hereinafter mentioned to a concession for all mineral rights on an area comprising approximately 240 by 280 miles in the said district of Inhambane, as shown in the sketch map attached. This concession carries with it the right to surface ground for machinery and other purposes connected with mining, as also the first right for railways, pipes, and trams from any part of the mines to the coast. It is subject to a charge of 5 per cent. on the profits of the output. The area embraces the above fourteen square miles, as also another area of six square miles, on which the rights to mineral oils are held by the Inhambane Oil Syndicate of Johannesburg. The concession to this 240 by 280 miles area will only be handed over by the Portuguese Government on proof that a drill is being worked on the ground by the 28th December, 1903. Four prospectors will also have to be employed on the ground during the healthy seasons. The area of about 20 square miles referred to in the annexed report of Mr. J. Dampier Green given as a "known area containing oil," comprises the fourteen square miles above referred to and the six square miles held by the Inhambane Syndicate. The vendors Mears and Ford guarantee the existence of the hereinbefore mentioned and described rights. The vendors, Mears and Ford, further guarantee that copper ore is to be found on the property, containing about 70 per cent. of copper. The agreement went on to say: "The party of the first part undertakes to purchase the above rights from the parties of the second part for a sum of £25,000 (twenty-five thousand pounds) in a company of £50,000 (fifty thousand pounds) to be appropriated as follows: Concessionaires in shares, 1,000, £25,000; co-vendors, 250, £6,250; working capital, present issue, 160, £4,000; reserve shares (of which the vendors will be entitled to 20 shares of £25 each at par), 580, £14,750; 2,000, £50,000. The syndicate agrees to issue in payment of the purchase price, to the vendors, one thousand (1,000) fully paid up shares in the said syndicate, and to the co-vendors for the valuable services rendered in promoting the syndicate and for finding all expenditure in connection with the flotation, two hundred and fifty (250) fully paid up shares in the said syndicate. The vendors, Mears and Ford, guarantee that there will be no obstacles to the passing of legal transfer to the parties of the first part, of the said rights, provided however that the Portuguese Government shall be allowed to retain the right to appoint two directors on the Board of the said syndicate. The purchase herein referred to is subject to complete and entire proof by the vendors, Mears and Ford, that their titles to the rights hereinbefore mentioned have been fully verified." Counsel stated that the fundamental clauses of the agreement were: "It is hereby agreed by the parties to the agreement, that the verification of titles, which will be required by the purchasers from the vendors, will be as follows: 1st: Official confirmation will have to be obtained, showing that the area marked "30 areas" in the map attached to the said agreement, is about fourteen square miles, and that it is covered by the thirty mining rights attached to the agreement. 2nd: The confirmation of the Governor of Inhambane or other proper authority will have to be obtained in due and sufficient form, showing that the vendors, Mears and Ford, have obtained the right to a concession of all mineral rights on an area of about 240 by 280 square miles, as shown in the sketch map attached to the said agreement, in terms and on the conditions set forth in the said agreement. 3rd: It is further agreed on the part of the Vendors that Mr. Mears will, on their behalf, proceed to Inhambane to obtain said verification within fourteen days from the signing of these presents, and the purchasers on their part undertake to send a representative to meet Mr. Mears at Inhambane for the purpose of receiving the above verifications."

[De Villiers, C.J.: You have spoken of the thing that was sold. But do you say there was a sale?]

There was a sale of their rights. They represented that they had rights. They had to perform that condition to verify their rights.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You have spoken of the thing that was sold. But do you say there was a sale?]

There was a sale of their rights. They represented that they had rights. They had to perform that condition to verify their rights.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was there a sale which could be put an end to in case there was no verification of titles, or was there no sale at all?]

There was a sale, but not a sale which would be put an end to in case there was no verification of the vendors.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I mean a right on the part of the purchasers to put an end to it?]

Yes, I submit that.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You don't seem to be quite clear what your position is? Was there a sale or not?]

Certainly there was a sale.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then there was a sale which could be put an end to by the purchasers in case there was no verification of title?]

That was the condition on which they could put an end to it. Your lordship means was the whole purchase by that clause a nullity?—Oh, no.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Subject to an action for damages, of course.]

Mr. Schreiner: I have not really considered that construction of the word "purchase."

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you proceed upon the guarantee or upon the sale?]

Mr. Schreiner: We proceed upon the sale. We say they sold certain things to us.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The only point I want to make clear upon is, what is the effect of this clause? Have the purchasers the right to say there is no sale at all because there is no verification? Is it a mere right on the part of the purchasers to rescind the sale upon non-verification?]

That is the way we put it. It is a right to rescind if there is a breach of the guarantee. I would not like finally to say that until I have considered the matter with my learned friend (Sir H. Juta). I have not considered the actual point as to whether it was a resolute or suspensive condition Counsel, in answer to further questions by the Court, added: We have given them time in reason to verify the title, they never verified it, and they have not verified it till to-day. Then we came to the conclusion that we could no longer give them time, and we sued. We set forth a total failure of consideration. We ask to be put in the same position as we stood in before. We have spent a great deal of money, and the syndicate is such that if these concessions had gone through the shares would have been very valuable indeed, and the result has been to leave this syndicate stranded in regard to means.

Evidence was called on behalf of the plaintiffs.

Carl Jeppe said that he resided at Wynberg, and was chairman at the outset of the plaintiff syndicate, and signed the contract dated 30th October, 1903. The syndicate was duly constituted afterwards. The negotiations for the contract went through Mr. Mears. A drill was afterwards purchased through Mr. Mears, the drill being at the time in Johannesburg. Mr. Watermeyer was in November, 1903, sent to Inhambane with complete instructions. Mr. Watermeyer returned somewhat stricken with fever, and his report was delayed until January. Mr. Watermeyer had not verified the titles. Mr. Mears came down early in February, 1904, and met the directors of the syndicate, and submitted a report, of which the original was put in. In March witness arranged for Mr. Ford to come down. Ford attended two meetings of the Board. Witness in May went to England, but before he went away the syndicate resolved to send up to Inhambane Mr. Windley, whose report came in after witness had gone to England. Witness was absent from May to October; on his return he again took up the matter. He then saw correspondence calling upon the vendors to fulfil their obligations, and in which £9,600 was demanded to be paid by the syndicate to secure the granting of what was called the big concession. Witness learnt that the syndicate refused to pay £9,600. Witness went to Johannesburg with Mr. Chiappini, who had then become and was at present chairman of the syndicate. Certain negotiations took place with Mears and Ford. Then for the first time he saw a copy of the document which the Portuguese Government had given in regard to the big concession. In this document the Portuguese authority required payment of 50,000 million reis. Mr. Mears indicated the expense to which they were put in getting the concession. They were told that they would still get the concession. At that time they did not know the Portuguese law. The vendors led them to believe that there would be no obstacles in the way of transfer to them of all these rights. Certain negotiations took place with regard to the possibility of a settlement, but these broke down. After witness's return he sent Mr. Gordon le Sueur, as the third representative of the company, to Inhambane to try and put things straight. The thirty mining titles had never been verified. The syndicate found that the vendors had no mining rights whatever. They were simply manifests which ran for three months. Then if the prospector found anything of value he applied for demarcation and survey, he could mine, but only for a year, and he must then apply for a proper mining concession. When these manifests were given to the syndicate they received no right to mine at all. If they had commenced to mine under those titles they would have been fined. Mears had undertaken to pay for the survey. A most expensive and laborious process would have had to be gone through to get mining rights. Within his knowledge, no demand was ever made by Mears and Ford that the syndicate should provide those sums of money.

Mr. Schreiner asked witness whether the concession was looked upon as of great value.

Witness: It was so valuable, and looked upon as so certain, that a Johannesburg company have put down £20,000 in working capital to develop this area falling within the concession, which we could have had under that agreement.

Witness, in further evidence, said that when the syndicate did not get rights promised by Mears and Ford, they obtained 10 acres which the syndicate was putting into the company that was being formed in Johannesburg. They had received no ground whatever from the vendors under the big or little concession.

Mr. Schreiner: Can you give the Court any indication of the value of the big concession?

Witness: The indication is that a mere rumour that the vendors would be able to carry out their agreement came, and the shares rose from £25 to £50 and £75, and sold at that price. That was what happened on a mere rumour. Witness (continuing his evidence) said that in order to complete the manifests into mining rights, such as were contemplated by the concession, would cost at least £100 an area. It was very difficult to know where the oil regions were. The present areas were only likely places, but the less likely places sometimes contained very large quantities of oil. They had a deposit analysed in London, and they found it to be worth a great deal of money. The syndicate had been put to an expense of over £3,000 in connection with this contract. As indicating the value of the concession, witness stated that the areas alone—which had recently been sold—were worth £30,000, and they only found a small portion of the oil regions, so that, not taking into consideration the copper rights and the railway rights, he thought their claim of £50,000 was a very moderate one. The vendors valued their so-called prospecting right at £100,000. If damages were awarded by the Court, and the vendors got their shares, then they would be getting back two-thirds of the judgment. As far as witness knew, the syndicate would be satisfied if they got back the money they had paid, provided the vendors did not get the shares. The Syndicate had no vindictive feelings against the vendors but they wanted to get their own back. If the syndicate got the value of the 30 areas by the judgment of the Court, then the vendors would get their shares. His position was that if the syndicate just got back the money they had expended, then the vendors would get no shares.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: No shares had been issued to Mears and Ford. The value of the shares had fluctuated a good deal, according to whether there was news that Mears and Ford would get the mining rights. A number of reserve shares had been issued last year. They had had 10 claims—which they got in September or October, 1904. They had been dealing in the shares in the sure and certain hope that Mears and Ford would get the concessions through. Mears had been very enthusiastic about these matters, and had said that he had had to pay £3,000 in Lisbon, having had to deposit £2,000. Mears and Ford never represented that a good deal of money would have to be spent by the syndicate before the concession would go through. They would have to make a deposit and pay other charges before the concession went through. The vendors did not represent that they were selling a right of concession to the syndicate; they sold what they said was a mining right. Mears had said that he would go straight to the Cortes and get a title for 99 years, because he had friends among both parties.

Mr. Searle informed witness that he could not understand his legal position at all. "Do you," he asked, "say that these gentlemen never carried out their contract at all?"

Witness: I do say that.

Mr. Searle: Then, I say, if they did not carry out their contract at all, there never was any purchase.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Surely, Mr. Seale, that is a matter that you might argue afterwards. Really, it seems to me that the question is largely one as to the construction of this contract.]

G. B. Watermeyer, Government land surveyor, spoke to a visit which he paid to Inhambane on behalf of the plaintiff company, in November, 1903. He saw Mears. Witness did not get any verification of the big concession. Mears said that he had not got it, but was getting it. With regard to the 30 areas, he had to get certain official confirmation, but he received nothing from Mears. Witness took with him the manifesto. At Lourenco Marques, he found that unless certain conditions were fulfilled, the concessions would lapse. He denied that he had been satisfied with the defendants' titles, as alleged in their plea. Witness was not satisfied that there was any big concession. He found that there were very many obstacles to the passing of legal transfer to the syndicate. Mears, later on, told him that he had made an application for new manifests, and that it would be all right. When they got to the ground, Mears showed him, approximately, what were the areas, but he did not even know where the centre of demarcation was. Mears seemed to be building all the time on the big concession.

Cross-examined: Witness dismissed from his mind the thirty areas of which Mears had obtained manifests, because they had not been demarcated.

Re-examined: Certain distances were shown on the manifests, but, of course, it was impossible to measure those distances without knowing where to commence, and Mears could not show him where to commence. Witness saw so many difficulties in the Portuguese law, that he told Mears it was important that someone should go to Lisbon.

By the Court: Witness was not satisfied with the verification. He was satisfied that the area marked "30 areas" on the map attached to the agreement was about 14 square miles. He was not satisfied that the mining manifests which Mears had were of any value, and, even if they were of any value, he knew there were great legal obstacles in the way of transfer. He did not get the confirmation of the Governor of Inhambane, as stipulated in the agreement.

Gordon le Sueur also gave evidence as to a visit that he paid to Inhambane, in November, 1904, when he met Mears. Mears he told them that he had come there to peg off 60 areas. Witness went to ascertain whether Mears and Ford were in any better position with regard to negging off than anybody else. He told Mears that he was not in any better position, and Mears acquiesced. Mears said that if he got his big concession, he would be in a better position than anybody else. Witness called upon the Governor. He found that there were 216 claims pegged by other people in the area around the Jake. Witness was given applications for manifests and two cheques by Mears. He pointed out to Ford that the applications had been sent in, and that Mears' cheques, of £141 each, had been dishonoured. Ford said that that was like Mears. Witness told Ford that the syndicate, therefore, had nothing at all, and Ford agreed. Witness saw the ten areas of the Johannesburg company. He saw the drill at work on those areas.

Cross-examined: Witness did not go up with the idea of making arrangements with Ford with a view of pegging 60 new areas. Ford was willing to peg off the areas, but witness took up the position that he could peg the areas off on behalf of the syndicate as well as anybody else could, and that it was not necessary for Ford to peg off. Witness sold his shares in the syndicate at par, except one, for which he obtained £50. He sold about 12 or 14 shares for £25.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out to counsel that these details were of no importance so far as the construction of the agreement was concerned.

Cross-examination continued: Witness did not know whether Mears and Ford had applied for their shares. He knew that no scrip had been issued to Mears and Ford. This syndicate, of which he was a director, had now been amalgamated with another company. The syndicate had not gone into voluntary liquidation preparatory to amalgamating. Witness and his brokers, Le Sueur and Co., got about 40 of the co-vendors' or promoters' shares.

Re-examined: Witness did not see a scrap of work that had been done by a drill on any ground outside the areas of the Johannesburg Company.

Sir H. Juta: You have been asked if this company has been amalgamated?

Witness: The Oil Union is a new company, which has been formed, and it embraces the others. It is not exactly an amalgamation.

Alexander John Chiappini, chairman of the plaintiff syndicate, corroborated the evidence of Mr. Jeppe. Witness produced an account of the expenses to which the syndicate had been put in connection with the working of the contract, the total amount shown being £3,269. There had been no profitable results of any kind from that expenditure. The syndicate subsequently gave authority to Mr. Horsfall to peg 10 areas. Those 10 areas had gone to the new company in Johannesburg, and in return the new company had given certain shares. It was not an amalgamation, none of the members of the syndicate had any knowledge of the Portuguese law when they went into the contract with Mears and Ford. Mr. Watermeyer afterwards got a copy of the law and translation at a cost of about £40.

Cross-examined: Witness would not swear that they were not mining rights that were attached to the agreement, but he was very confident that they were not mining rights. No survey fees had been paid upon those rights. Horsfall had now got charge of the syndicate's interests at Inhambane. Witness thought that the drill was worthless. Horsfall had informed them officially that the drill was of no use. The drill, he believed, never went deeper than 90 ft., and it took something like six months to go that depth.

This concluded the evidence for plaintiffs.

Walter Mears (one of the defendants) said that he lived in Johannesburg. For some years past he had been interested in Inhambane. In 1902 he went to Inhambane, obtained 60 titles, 30 of which he afterwards sold to the Johannesburg Oil Syndicate. He gave an option to Moodie and Van Rensburg for a month, and he afterwards came down to Cape Town, where the agreement was come to. Witness had had no benefit from this matter, and had not made a penny for himself. He did his best for the company until Mr. Windley took the business out of his hands, and put in Mr. Horsfall. He had not since been to the ground. Witness spoke of his visit to the ground with Mr. Watermeyer, and the conveyance of the drill. He said he knew the manifests had lapsed, and he proposed to take out new manifests. He spoke of his negotiations on the oil-bearing grounds with Mr. Watermeyer, and said that he pointed out the bearings of the syndicate's ground. It was a very unhealthy region. Mr. Watermeyer and witness decided to fix the drill within the thirty areas. The drill was never on the Johannesburg Syndicate's ground. Witness did not say at that time that they had got the big concession; they said that certain conditions must be fulfilled before they got the concession. They had an agent working for them in Lisbon. He explained to Mr. Watermeyer that he did not know the exact terms of the big concession. All they sold was what they had been told they had got. He gave everything that he had in the option to Mr. Moodie. Mr. Watermeyer interviewed the Governor of Inhambane, who said that it was purely a Lisbon transaction. Witness spoke as to certain expenditure that he and Ford had incurred in connection with the concessions. Watermeyer, he said, told him that he was satisfied that they had a valuable asset, and said that he would have to remain behind to have the company made into a Portuguese company.

Witness spoke to his second visit to the oil-fields, in company with Mr. Windley, the second representative sent up to Inhambane by the syndicate. Mr. Windley, in his evidence on commission, had said that Mears, in conversation, told him that the titles had lapsed, and witness told Windley that the first titles had lapsed, but that the syndicate had got new titles, and that the new titles had not lapsed. He denied having said that Ford had got a certain sum of money to survey the ground. Ford had, as a matter of fact, been given money to go and survey ground for the Johannesburg syndicate. That was the only ground that had been surveyed. If the second titles had been surveyed, the time would have been extended. Witness was willing to have the titles surveyed, provided the syndicate would furnish the money. An application was lodged with the Portuguese authorities for a third series of fifty manifests, but these were never taken out. Cheques were actually lodged with Mr. Cottar, the Government Secretary, the account being on behalf of the syndicate, but in witness's name. Witness did not, at that time, hold a power from the syndicate. He had had some serious attacks of fever in the country, and he had to stay at the hospital at Delagoa Bay when Windley returned to Cape Town. He denied that he had ever made a promise to pay the survey fees, as alleged in Windley's evidence. Witness told Windley that there had been some delay on account of the stipulation of the authorities that Ford must become a Portuguese subject. He told Windley that Ford's birth certificate had to be lodged before Ford could get his naturalisation papers issued, and that that had caused some delay. Witness was also examined at considerable length in reference to the items of expenditure claimed by the syndicate.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: When witness left here in 1903 he went to Inhambane for the purpose of the verification of the titles, and to obtain information of his titles, and a representative had to meet him for that purpose.

Sir H. Juta: Your plea says that you fulfilled your conditions. Did you give Mr. Watermeyer verification, and obtain confirmation?

Witness: As far as I could.

Counsel called witness's attention to a letter which he had written to the Syndicate, saying that he had agreed to give to a Portuguese official or lawyer—whom he described as the "Portuguese K.C."—£1,000 in cash or shares in the Syndicate, no shares or cash to be paid to the K.C. before the papers had been handed over to him (witness).

Witness assented to the letter.

Sir H. Juta: You calmly say "Yes." Here, as late as April 26, 1904, neither titles or papers were in order on your own showing, and you come here and say that Mr. Watermeyer agreed to that?—That was only in regard to the big concessions.

I don't know. He refers to all the titles?—No; only the big concession.

Cross-examination continued: When witness entered into the contract with the plaintiff syndicate, the Johannesburg syndicate had only 10 claims. They had allowed 20 to lapse. Witness had got the rights to the big concession, and these he sold to the syndicate.

Sir H. Juta: These letters show that there was absolutely nothing that you had obtained.

Witness: We had obtained the sanction to get that concession. Our application had been accepted.

Sir H. Juta: Well, you are a sanguine person, when you consider that a sanction is a concession. On January 27 you wrote from Lisbon that you had heard that the concession in Inhambane had been granted, and asked for £120 to pay fees, which you say: "I have cabled?"

Witness: Yes.

According to that, you were to get this concession that you had sold to the syndicate, if you paid these fees?—Yes.

That was money due by you?—Yes.

At that time a large number of areas had been pegged off by other people within the big area of the big concession?—Yes.

You write that a hitch had taken place, which prevented the big concession from being granted?—Yes.

What was the hitch, the obstacle?—It was the birth certificate of Ford.

You swear that?—That was what I was informed from Lisbon.

That was the only thing?—Yes.

Now we will turn to what you wrote. You said you had heard from your Lisbon agent, Mr. Becker, and that there seemed to be no obstacle, with the exception of ground pegged by Ford and his party, which you (Mears) were thoroughly convinced that, had it not been that Ford had used his influence with the Governor, he would not have issued the licence?—Yes. The ground pegged there was certainly an obstacle to my agreement with the Cape Town Syndicate, in so far as that ground was within the concession.

In answer to a further question, witness said that he only sold the rights that he had in his possession.

Sir H. Juta: Oh, no; you did nothing of the sort. You not only sold the concession, but you guaranteed transfer of mineral rights, subject to 5 per cent. of the profit, Mr. Mears. It is no use trying to evade that. Who was it that caused these areas to be pegged which prevented the concession being granted to you?—Harlington, Watts, and others, and Mr. Ford.

That's the defendant Ford. Ford then went at the time you were trying to get the papers for this concession, and got a large number of areas pegged out on the very ground you said you had got for us?—Yes.

On the 26th February you wrote: "I am absolutely certain that Ford has interested himself in the ground pegged round your syndicate's areas, as he told me so himself, and then offered me an interest, which I naturally refused"?—Yes.

"I am not at all surprised at his action." Why weren't you surprised at his action?—Well, I can easily explain that. I found out that Ford always opened my wires. I had wires from Mr. Le Sueur asking me officially to sell shares for him at tremendous figures. Mr. Ford had received no shares, and he was under the impression that I had received my shares, and he had not received his. He was trying to secure his right.

By pegging out on the ground that you said belonged to us?—Yes.

Ford thought you had got a lot of money, and he had got none?—Yes.

Cross-examination continued: In January, 1904, he had heard that Ford had begun to peg the ground. On the 7th he asked the syndicate to bring an action against Ford for pegging. This was at a meeting in Cape Town at the secretary's office, at which Mr. Chiapini and Mr. Le Sueur were present.

He wanted the Board to take steps immediately to bring that point of the pegging of the ground to a head.

Sir H. Juta: It was only by protesting, and getting the protest confirmed against these areas that had been pegged off, that you could exercise the rights under the big concession. That is quite clear, is it not?—Yes.

Then those areas which had been pegged out hold good?—All those that were pegged at that time were allowed to lapse and others were pegged a long time after that.

Do I understand that there are a large number of areas that have been pegged out in the big concession?—So I believe.

And they hold good?—Not until the deposit is made.

You know that people are acting on them, and are on the ground?—Yes.

You say if a deposit is made?—Yes, a deposit of £9,600.

If £9,600 is now deposited with the Portuguese Government, you will get the big concession?—Unless it has lapsed. They gave notice that unless the money was paid by January or February it would lapse.

Surely the Lisbon Government did not grant a concession over the heads of these people that had pegged in the meanwhile?—That is what they gave me.

Replying to further questions, witness said that he had a document from the Portuguese Government. That was the document put in under article 220 of the Portuguese Mining Law.

He had been in negotiation with Lisbon in order to have the concession extended over 99 years. It would be necessary that the concession should pass through the Cortes.

Sir H. Juta: Clearly, then, this was to be a concession for 99 years?—I sold them what rights I had got.

How much money had you deposited in Lisbon for that purpose?—No answer.

Three thousand pounds, was it not?—I would like to see the letter.

Three thousand pounds was deposited in Lisbon to get the concession?—It was money I spent in obtaining the concession.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You mean distributing it amongst the members of Parliament?]

Witness: No, your worship. We had to spend so much money before we could get the concession and show that we had been so many years in the country working up to that stage.

You say you did not deposit £3,000. Where did you spend it?—We spent it according to the account there.

Sir H. Juta: £3,000 is what you spent in Lisbon?

Witness: It was not spent in Lisbon. Your letter says, "Have spent £3,000 in cash payments to the Portuguese Government." Where was that money paid to the Portuguese Government?—I had to pay certain moneys away which they distributed. Where it was distributed I am not going to say.

[De Villiers, C.J: Have you got a receipt?

Witness: No. We had to pay Becker, who was in Lisbon.

That is not the Governor?—No, Becker distributes it.

That is in Lisbon. Did you send it by cheque?—Some of the amounts have not been paid yet.

Then you have not spent £3,000?—We are responsible for it.

Cross-examination continued: Witness denied that he had told Mr. Jeppe that he had deposited £2,000 in Lisbon. According to the law of Portugal, he could have mined and taken the yield of the area without surveying. Witness valued the 30 titles at £30,000, and his position was that they had lapsed because they had not been surveyed by the syndicate. He had asked Mr. Windley for money for the survey; he had not written to the plaintiff syndicate asking them for money for the survey. He did not know that the claims had to be surveyed until Mr. Watermeyer and he (witness) read the law together. The drill went down about 40 feet.

By the Court: They had not found any oil yet. There was oil on the ground, but not in the bore-hole.

De Villiers, C.J, said that the question of whether there was oil, it seemed to him, would greatly affect the question of damages. If there was no oil, it seemed to him that there could be no damages.

Mr. Schreiner pointed out that they had the opinion of a great chemist that the deposit shown to him was very valuable.

[De Villiers, C.J: I am afraid the best chemists have told us that Cape Town contains gold in immeasurable quantities. The best chemists in Cape Town have told us that there was more gold in the Lion's Head even than there was in Johannesburg.]

Further cross-examined: Witness still thought there was oil in the ground. He valued his 30 areas at £30,000, and the big concession at £100,000. Had he not thought that oil was there he would not have risked his life two or three times in going to the spot. He was sure that the drill was at work on the syndicate's ground.

[De Villiers, C.J: Has anyone else found oil in payable quantities?]

Witness: Not as far as I know.

Cross-examination continued: Witness was not interested in the Johannesburg Oil Wells or in any of the companies that had combined.

Re-examined: The Cape Town Syndicate were clearly informed about the areas of the Johannesburg Syndicate.

Herbert James Ford (the other defendant) said that in 1898 he formed a small syndicate in connection with the piece of ground constituting the 30 areas. The place was very unhealthy, and often caused fever. In 1902 Mears became connected with him in the 30 areas. Mears took out the 30 manifests in November, 1902. Moodie and Rensbury had an option, and in October, 1903, they came to Cape Town, witness being in Johannesburg. Witness went to Inhambane about the end of December or beginning of January. Certain ground was pegged off. Witness came down to Cape Town in March, 1904, and met the directors of the plaintiff syndicate. At the Board meetings he gave full information as to the position of affairs. He had assisted one Watt in the matter of pegging, his reason being that he could get no satisfaction from the Cape Town people, who would grant him no shares or interest. All the claims pegged at that time had lapsed. Pegging had been going on on the ground since 1898. The large concession was to be obtained in witness's name. There was a delay of two or three months owing to his birth certificate. He finally obtained his naturalisation, and got the concession in August, 1904. Witness received notice that £9,600 had to be paid to get the concession. The first amount mentioned was £2,000, but it was afterwards increased to £9,600. The drill was fixed on the ground pegged for the plaintiff syndicate, and not on the ground of the Johannesburg Syndicate. He considered that the big concession was most valuable, and that it gave a prospecting right over the whole of the ground. They would have a prior right against anyone else to beacon off any oil bearing ground within the whole area.

Mr. Schreiner: You had not got the shade of a shadow of right over this ground at the time when the other persons pegged off claims?

No answer.

Had you a shadow of right over this ground?—Which right?

The big concession.—Most decidedly.

I am speaking of the persons whom you aided to peg on this ground. When those persons pegged you had a right to that ground, the big concession; had you a right in respect of the big concession to the ground that was pegged?—I had not any title.

Have you any right?—Will you give me the date?

You have provided the date. I cannot give you the date. When you aided in the pegging you had no right to the big concession?—Yes, we had. Mr. Becker was then applying for it.

Had you a right?—We had not received our right.

Before the 2nd August, 1904, you had no right. Had you obtained certain rights as to railways, tramways and pipes from the mines to the coast?—Yes.

Where is the document showing that?—It is there.

Show it to us.—The granting of the concession is here, but £9,600 is to be paid.

Now, Mr. Ford, don't shuffle. Where is this right?—It is in the mining law of Portuguese territory.

You refer his Lordship then, as conferring those rights, to article 220 of the mining law?—Yes.

Where is the document that shows that this concession obtained already by you in October was subject to a charge of 5 per cent. on the profits of the output? Is his Lordship going to find that in the mining law of Portugal?—No, I do not think that is stated in the mining law.

Replying to further questions, witness admitted that he had received no document except that dated the 2nd August, 1904.

Mr. Schreiner: Upon which document being signed you demanded that the syndicate should pay the deposit of £9,600? You have no other?—No.

Cross-examination continued: Witness formed a small syndicate to work the ground in 1898. That came to nothing, because all the men died there. He claimed against the plaintiff syndicate expenses dating back to 1897 and 1898. He regarded those items as part of the development work.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Surely that had nothing to do with the present contract.]

Further cross-examined: Witness was interested in five oil companies. He had bought and sold shares in the Transvaal Inhambane Oil Wells, which was formed to exploit ground near the lake in the area of the big concession. He had bought shares in the Transvaal company at 2s. 6d., and sold them at 10s. 6d. to 12s. 6d. He could not give the date of his naturalisation as a Portuguese subject. He could not get his papers until the £9,600 was paid. He did not remember when he sent in his birth certificate, which he had had to cable to Huntingdon for.

By the Court: Witness had paid £30 for his naturalisation papers. He could not get his letters of naturalisation without paying the £9,600.

Cross-examination continued: Mears had deposited some hundreds with Pattison and Becker, the agents in Lisbon. He received a wire from Becker in June, 1903, inquiring if he was a Portuguese subject. He answered "No" to the inquiry; he felt confident that he cabled "No." He valued the big concession at £100,000.

Mr. Schreiner: In the correspondence Mr. Mears says that the fault at the back of the concession was that you had represented yourself as a Portuguese subject?

Witness: No, because Mr. Becker took the papers to get me naturalised in Lisbon.

Re-examined: Witness's name had appeared in the "Gazette" as a naturalised Portuguese subject.

Jan Hendrik R. Moodie (one of the co-vendors), Ernest Albert Rhodes, driller; and Malcolm Moritz Moodie, farmer, also gave evidence.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Counsel were heard in argument, and in the course of the hearing His Lordship allowed the plaintiff company to amend their declaration by adding after the first prayer the words, "declaring the said agreement cancelled, and forfeiting the right of the defendants to the said 1,000 shares."

Postea (May 15th.)

De Villiers, C.J.: The case has occupied a considerable portion of the time of the Court, but the points to be decided lie within a very narrow compass. It is common cause that on June 30, 1903, a contract was entered into between the defendants and a representative of the plaintiff syndicate. The recital of the agreement is as follows: "Whereas the vendors have obtained from the Portuguese Government certain rights herein-after described, and whereas the said vendors have given to the above-named co-vendors the right of floating a syndicate, and whereas a syndicate has been formed represented by the said Carl Jeppe for the purpose of purchasing the said rights, now, therefore, these presents witness that the parties of the second part sell to the parties of the first part the following rights, that is to say, all the right, title, and interest of the said W. Mears and H. J. Ford." Then come the stating exactly what rights were sold. The first is as follows: "Certain mining titles obtained by the said W. Mears and H. J. Ford from the Portuguese Government over certain 30 acres, comprising approximately 14 square miles, situate in Inhambane, north of Lourenco Marques, as shown in the map attached, and conferring on the holders the right to work for combustibles, bituminous substances, and mineral oils, subject to a payment of one-half per cent. on the profit of the output to the Portuguese Government." This contract was entered into not in Inhambane, or in Portuguese territory, but in Cape Town. The parties were here at the time, and it was signed in Cape Town. This clause which I have just read clearly represents to the purchasers that mining titles giving the right to work for, that is, to mine for combustibles, bituminous substances, etc., would be conferred upon the purchasers, and the only condition was that about payment of one-half per cent. on the profit, payable to the Portuguese Government. The second right granted is still a wider one, and it is as follows: "The right obtained by the vendors from the Portuguese Government on the conditions hereinafter mentioned to a concession for all mineral rights on an area comprising approximately 240 by 280 miles in the said district of Inhambane, as shown in the sketch map attached. This concession carries with it the right to surface ground for machinery and other purposes connected with mining, as also the first right for railways, pipes, and trams from any part of the mines to the coast. It is subject to a charge of 5 per cent. on the profits of the output. The area embraces the above fourteen square miles, as also another area of six square miles, on which the rights to mineral oils are held by the Inhambane Oil Syndicate of Johannesburg. The concession to this 240 by 280 miles area will only be handed over by the Portuguese Government on proof that a drill is being worked on the ground by the 28th December, 1903. Four prospectors will also have to be employed on the ground during the healthy seasons. The area of about 20 square miles referred to in the annexed report of Mr. J. Dampier Green given as a 'known area containing oil,' comprising the fourteen square miles above referred to and the six square miles held by the Inhambane Syndicate." Now, a great deal has been said in regard to the Portuguese law, upon which however, I shall say very little—for the simple reason that the conditions, which are mentioned here, do not form part of any conditions imposed by the Portuguese Ordinance. I see nothing in the Portuguese Ordinance about the "first right for railways, pipes, and trams for any part of the mines to the coast," and in regard to other matters mentioned here, and I gather, therefore, that the vendors intended to represent to the purchasers that a special right had already been acquired quite independently of the ordinance, which the vendors had the power to transfer to the purchasers. This is clear from what follows. The words are: "The vendors, Mears and Ford, guarantee the existence of the hereinbefore mentioned and described rights." There is, therefore, a full guarantee that these rights already exist, that the mining rights exist, and that the right to this concession already exists, and there is a guarantee that it shall be transferred. Then there is, moreover, a guarantee that copper ore is to be found on the property containing about 70 per cent. of copper, but I lay very little stress upon that, because nothing is made of that concession by the plaintiffs. Then the contract goes on to speak as to the price, which was to be £25,000, but the money was to be paid by shares—1,000 of £25 each. Then we find that "the purchase herein referred to is subject to complete and entire proof by the vendors, Mears and Ford, that their titles to the rights hereinbefore mentioned have been fully verified." Then comes the following clause: "The vendors, Mears and Ford, guarantee that there will be no obstacles to the passing of legal transfer to the parties of the first part of the said rights, provided, however, that the Portuguese Government shall be allowed to retain the right to appoint two directors on the Board of the said syndicate." Now action is brought for rescission of the contract and for damages. The main defence to the action is that the plaintiffs had sent Mr. Watermeyer, a land surveyor, to represent them at Inhambane, and that in or about December, 1903, the defendants' titles and rights to the concession were verified by him as the syndicate's representative, and that he was satisfied with the defendants' rights and their titles. Now, in my opinion, that plea wholly fails. The evidence satisfies me that Mr. Watermeyer never was satisfied that the defendants had complied with their contract. It is true that he did not insist upon a demarcation of the areas comprised in the smaller concession, but the reason why he did not insist upon that demarcation at the expense of the defendants was because it was represented to him by Mears that, inasmuch as these areas fell within the larger concession, it would be a waste of expenditure to go to the expense of demarcation. This is the report of Mr. Watermeyer, which he confirmed by his evidence before the Court: "I inquired from Mr. Mears whether he had obtained the grant of the claims of the thirty titles or declarations referred to; he said 'No'; but he assured me that everything was in order, that all deposits had been made, but as this ground would fall into the larger concession, he considered it a waste of money to have the claims surveyed." Now, in point of fact, all the deposits that they required for the purpose of protecting this concession had not been made. It is clear that the survey expenses had not yet been paid, that no demarcation ever took place, and therefore the defendants at no time were in a position to transfer to the plaintiffs what they were entitled to in regard to the first part of the concession. But whatever doubts there might have been upon the minor concession, there can be no doubt whatever that in regard to the so-called "big concession," there was a total inability and a total failure on the part of the defendants to observe their part of the contract. It had been represented to the plaintiffs that the concession had already been obtained from the Portuguese Government. In point of fact no such concession was ever obtained until some time afterwards, and even that concession, which was obtained, does not appear to my mind to have been such a concession as the plaintiffs were entitled to under the contract, and, strangely enough, the defendants were not prepared to transfer that wholly inadequate concession, unless there were paid to them a sum of £9,600, a sum which clearly it was their duty to have paid, in order to enable themselves to acquire the title which they promised to confer upon the plaintiffs. If we look at the representations made by Mears himself, it would appear that a 99 years' concession was anticipated, but I prefer in this matter to rely entirely upon the terms of the contract, and not upon any side issues. It is clear to me at no time have the defendants been in a position to transfer any portion of this larger concession to the plaintiffs, and, after all, the minor concession was to a great extent merged in the larger concession. But, then, it is said that there has been this considerable delay on the part of the plaintiffs, and that if there was a breach at all it was immediately upon Mr. Watermeyer arriving upon the scene of action. But it does not appear to me that this is an argument that can well be used by the defendants. It was at their desire that the matter was postponed; they made every effort, no doubt, to obtain the major concession, and they represented to the plaintiffs that the major concession would, in course of time, be forthcoming, and, therefore, I consider that it was quite reasonable on the part of the plaintiff company not to have proceeded to extremities at once, but to use every reasonable effort to come to terms before they brought an action. It is upon these simple grounds that I am of opinion that there has been a breach of warranty of a good title to the mining concessions, and that the plaintiff company is now entitled to rescind the contract. It is not as if there had been a partial failure on the part of the vendors to fulfil their contract, but there seems to me a total failure to fulfil their contract, but, even if the failure did not relate to the minor concession, to my mind, the most important part of the contract is the major concession, and inasmuch as there is a failure in respect to that, there seems to me to have been such a failure as would entitle the plaintiffs to claim that the sale be cancelled. Then comes the further question as to what damages should now be awarded to the plaintiff company for this undoubted breach of contract on the part of the defendants. Unfortunately, in this case, probably from the very nature of the case, it was impossible to give definite evidence as to what the value of this concession would have been if it had been completed in terms of the contract. There has not been sufficient development of the ground to know whether it was a valuable concession or whether it was not. There is no evidence that any oil in appreciable quantities has been found, or that any of the other minerals, with the object of procuring which the contract had been entered into, had ever been found on this property, and, in the absence of any evidence, any trustworthy evidence, as to damages, I am of opinion that the Court should not award damages upon the ordinary basis where there is a breach of a contract of sale. The ordinary measure would be the difference between the value of the property as sold, and the value of what was tendered. But there would be extreme difficulty upon the evidence before the Court to estimate that damage. It is, however, clear to me that the plaintiff company is entitled to be placed in the same position in which it would have been if it had never been led, or misled, by the defendants into entering into a contract of this nature. All expenses, therefore, that the plaintiff company has incurred, all reasonable expenses, all such expenses as might reasonably have been anticipated by the parties at the time when the contract was made, as expenses which would be incurred—all such expenses, I say, which have become valueless, the plaintiff company should now be entitled to recover by this action from the defendants. This would be allowed in the case of redhibitory action, and this action, to my mind, partakes very much of the redhibitory action of the Roman-Dutch law. There was a warranty; it was said and promised that certain things exist, that certain rights exist, and these rights do not exist. Plaintiffs, therefore, are entitled to put an end to this contract. If they had paid any part of the purchase price they would be entitled to recover the purchase price thus paid. They are entitled now to say that the contract be rescinded, but "let us be placed in the same position in which we would have been if no such contract had been entered into." It is impossible in such a case as this to award all the expenses that the plaintiff company has incurred, but all costs and expenses incurred by the plaintiffs in connection with this property, in connection with the drill which was required for the purpose of keeping the thing going, and in regard to sending men like Mr. Watermeyer, Mr. Windley, and Mr. Le Sueur to the spot to protect the interests of the company, for the purposes of maintenance on the site of the drilling—very clearly such expenditure the plaintiff company is now, in my opinion, entitled to recover from the defendants. The account put in of £3,269 is not seriously criticised. It is said that some of these items were incurred after August, when it was known that the whole transaction would fall through. But it seems that up to the very last the plaintiff company was anxious, if possible, to proceed with this transaction. It still hoped against hope that in the end the defendants would be able to give what they had contracted to give, and it was therefore, in my opinion, quite justified in going to this expense for the protection of their interests connected with their purchase, and it is right that this expense should now be refunded to the plaintiffs by the defendants, who had been the cause of the expenditure. If there had been a charge of fraud in the case, no doubt the measure of damages would have been very much greater, but there is no allegation of fraud, nor do I say that if fraud had been alleged it could have been proved. But it is clear, from the correspondence and from the evidence, that the two defendants at no time trusted each other. Ford seemed to distrust Mears, and Mears seemed to distrust Ford, and not only did he distrust Ford, but he made continual complaints against Ford to the plaintiff company, representing that Ford had been guilty of—well, I won't say fraudulent conduct, but conduct that was not straightforward, in pegging off claims for his own benefit upon the areas which, under their contract, they ought to have handed over to the plaintiff company, so that, although there is some evidence of dealings which the Court cannot approve of, at all events on the part of Ford, that has not been the basis of this action. The damages, therefore, must proceed upon the ordinary basis of the redhibitory action, where the expenses of the thing purchased are recoverable from the vendors, who have wholly failed in an important warranty. The judgment of the Court will, therefore, be for the plaintiffs for the sum of £3,269, with costs. The Court will order that the contract of sale be rescinded, and that the defendants pay to the plaintiffs, as damages for breach, the sum of £3,269, with costs, on condition that on payment of such amount, the plaintiff company deliver to the defendants the drill mentioned in the declaration.

Mr. Schreiner: That is, at Inhambane.

His Lordship: Oh, at Inhambane, of course.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS.

{ 1906.
{ May 10th.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for the admission of Johannes N. de V. Stegman as an attorney.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Aliwal North.

Mr. Lewis moved for the admission of Johannes A. D. Serfontein as an attorney.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Registrar of the High Court, Kimberley.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the admission of Walter Edwin Barron as an attorney.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

Mr. De Waal moved for the admission of Francis Wm. Reitz, as a translator in the Dutch and English languages. Applicant, it was stated, was too ill to appear to take the oath.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the R.M., or Assistant R.M. of Cape Town.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ESTATE FRASER V. MARCUS.

Mr. Inchbold moved for a certain provisional order to be superseded.
Provisional order superseded.

COLE, LTD. V. BOLLA AND ANOTHER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence for £26 8s. 6d., on a confession of debt, and promise to pay, under which the defendants acknowledged their liability jointly and severally. The confession provided for the payment of the sum due by instalments, and in case of failure the whole of the balance became payable. The second instalment was unpaid, and the whole of the balance had become due.

[Buchanan, J.: Does the matter arise out of a purchase of land?]

Mr. Jones: It is another man's debt.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan (for defendant): We say there has been no consideration. Counsel went on to read an affidavit by Bolla, who denied that he or Ganie owed anything to plaintiff, and said that the debt was owing by one Sheik Mahomet, alias Shiek Mahomet Abdullah. Deponent had carried on business at Cecil-road, Salt River. He declared that a mistake had been made in advertising his goods for sale under an execution, that he was not liable for the debt of Abdullah, and that he had received no consideration for the instrument in question. He had instituted an action in the Resident Magistrate's Court for damages, but absolution from the instance was granted.

Mr. Jones read an answering affidavit by L. Berman, articled clerk in the employ of plaintiff's attorney, who said that Bolla offered himself as debtor in place of Mahomet, and that he refused this, but agreed to accept Bolla and Garni as joint debtors in place of Mahomet subject to their paying costs. Counsel read an affidavit by the second defendant in support of the statements made by Mr. Berman, and also an affidavit by a translator in Hindustani.

Mr. Buchanan submitted that defendant Boller was not liable, because there was no consideration given for the note, and the document was got for a wholly different purpose, viz., to stop the sale of Bolla's goods, which had been attached by the messenger of the Resident Magistrate's Court by mistake.

Mr. Jones said that the consideration given in this case was that Sheik Mahomet was released from the debt and that the goods of Bolla, which had been attached, were released. The result would be that if Bolla were found to be not liable on this note, the creditor would be deprived of his remedy against the original debtor, or the delegated debtor. Seeing that this was a case of delegation, he submitted that consideration would not be necessary.

Buchanan, J.: In this case Cole, Ltd., obtained judgment against one Sheik Mahomet. They could not get that judgment satisfied, and they attached goods in the shop of one Bolla, and also one Parker. Bolla and Parker thereupon filed interpleader actions, and these interpleader actions were brought before the Magistrate. In Bolla's case the Magistrate held that the goods in the shop of Bolla were not executable to the judgment, and gave judgment in his favour, with costs. That is not denied. In the case of Parker, the Magistrate held that the goods in Parker's shop were executable, and gave judgment for plaintiffs. The attorney for the plaintiffs made a mistake, and instead of executing the Magistrate's judgment against the goods in the shop of Parker, advertised the goods in the shop of Bolla for sale. Fortunately, Bolla came in and got him to stop the sale, otherwise he would have let himself in for an action for damages. What took place on this occasion is a matter for dispute. As matters stand, it appears that Bolla was not in any way answerable for this debt. If the plaintiffs can succeed on the principal case, let them go into the principal case. At present provisional sentence will be refused, with costs, but the judgment as against Ganie will be made absolute with costs.

Mr. Buchanan urged that the document sued upon by plaintiffs should be impounded.

His Lordship granted an order accordingly.

ESTATE TURNBULL V. COWLEY.

Mr. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £248, less £100 paid on account, with interest, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Counsel explained that since the affidavits had been filed a further amount of £15 had been paid on the capital, and that interest had been paid to February, 1905. Judgment was therefore sought for £133 capital, and interest from the 8th February, 1905.

Mr. Roux (for defendant) read an affidavit by his client, in which she alleged that the matter was compromised in June of last year for £50. The amount had been tendered. Deponent said that she bought certain land from Mr. Van Reenen at Hout Bay with the intention of building thereon, but found that the land consisted partly of sand hills and partly of marsh. Counsel also read supporting affidavits by William Cowley (husband of defendant), and Mr. Bosman, attorney.

Mr. Lewis read an answering affidavit by Mr. A. W. Steer, attorney, who admitted that he agreed, on behalf of the original bond-holder, Mr. Van Reenen, to accept £50 in full discharge of the bond, but he added that that offer was subsequently withdrawn inasmuch as defendant did not pay the money at the time, and the negotiations broke down.

Mr. Roux submitted that this bond was novated by a judgment given by the Court in December, 1904, and that it could not legally have been ceded. The matter was clearly res judicata, seeing that the former judgment had not been satisfied or become superannuated. He contended that the bond was no longer in existence. The property had already been declared executable, and the plaintiff's remedy, instead of taking out a summons, was to issue a writ.

Buchanan, J.: The present holder of the bond now sued upon Van Reenen, obtained judgment thereon, and in consequence recovered about £130 of his debt of £240. In June, 1905, through his attorney, he intimated that he would be prepared to accept £50 sterling in full settlement in this matter. This £50 was not paid. Afterwards, Van Reenen ceded the bond to plaintiff, who now sues upon it. It is alleged, in answer to this action, that the bond has been destroyed, and the previous judgment given upon it in 1904 takes its place. I cannot hold that that is a good contention. Payments were made on account of that judgment, and then it was allowed to drop. The second defence is that there has been a novation by the letters of the attorney, and that, as this novation took place before the cession of the bond, the present cessionary is bound by the agreement. Whether or not, it would be necessary to show that the present plaintiff knew of this agreement. On the question of the alleged novation I must hold that such an agreement has not been proved. According to the affidavit of the attorney, this offer to accept the £50 was made on condition that the amount was paid forthwith. The letter does not give any time, and the presumption would be that it was an offer to accept £50 forthwith in settlement of the outstanding amount. This was in June, 1905. The affidavits show that afterwards the attorney gave the defendant 14 days' grace, and again in September, 1905, when spoken to about the amount, defendant said he could not raise the amount, and the offer was then declared off. No payment was made, or any tender of the amount until after the summons was issued in this case. The defendant cannot now rely upon this offer made in June, 1905, and not then accepted. Provisional sentence must be given as prayed, for the amount of the bond, less the payments admittedly made, with interest and costs.

STEGMAN V. OOSTHUISSEN AND OTHERS

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £207, payable at the Standard Bank, Willowmore, with interest and costs.
Order granted.

FLETCHER'S WHOLESALE V. PORTER.

LIQUIDATORS, S.A. BRICKFIELDS, LTD.
V. REILLY.

Mr. Lourens moved for judgment under Rule 329d, for two sums of £50, in respect of calls due and unpaid upon shares in the plaintiff company.

Defendant said that the company had passed a resolution to exempt him from the claim. He had a counter-claim. He had volunteered a settlement, so that the matter should not be brought into court. He asked that the matter should stand over.

In answer to the Court, defendant admitted that he had not entered appearance.

Judgment as prayed, defendant to take the regular proceedings if he had a claim.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the discharge from insolvency of Isidore Israelsohn.

Application granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.CHISHOLM V. WRIGHT. } 1906.
} May 10th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved on the application of Elizabeth Chisholm eldest child of the late William Chisholm and his wife, for the removal of Thomas Wright from his office as executor testamentary in the estate of the late Margaret Ann Wright.

Respondent appeared in person.

Mr. Jones read an affidavit by petitioner, who said that the respondent was addicted to drink, and had failed to perform his duties as executor. There was property in the estate at Claremont. Counsel read affidavits by several persons at Claremont, to the effect that respondent was unfit for his position, on account of his intemperate habits, contracted since his wife's death. It was stated that the respondent had handed over the administration of the estate to one Mr. Leonard Tudge.

Respondent, a bricklayer, alleged that one of the step-children, L. Chisholm, had made false allegations against him, and he asked for an adjournment. His power of attorney, he said, was held by Attorney Walker, of Wynberg.

Respondent was removed from office as executor, the Master was authorised to call a meeting of next-of-kin to appoint an executor dative, and Mr. Attorney Walker appointed curator bonis of the estate, pending the appointment of an executor.

Ex parte THE INSOLVENT ESTATE KOENIG.

Mr. Bailey moved, on the petition of H. Gibson and G. W. Steytler, trustees in the insolvent estate of Julius Koenig, for the removal of Barry Heatlie Heatlie from office as one of the trustees, Heatlie having disappeared from Cape Town.

Heatlie was removed from the office as prayed, costs to come out of the estate.

Ex parte WINTERBACH.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property at Ceres.

Ordered to stand over for further information.

Buchanan, J., suggested that the applicant should get fuller information, and proceed before a judge in chambers, under the Derelict Lands Act.

In re CROYDON BRICK CO., LTD.

Mr. Molteno moved, on the petition of Stephan Bros. and the Bank of Africa, for the rule nisi to be made absolute, and for the appointment of Mr. Harry Gibson as official liquidator. He stated that an application which had been made by certain shareholders and creditors for the appointment of Mr. Cook as official liquidator had been withdrawn. Counsel informed the Court that the value of the assets was below £20,000.

Rule made absolute, and Mr. Gibson appointed official liquidator, to provide security in the sum of £1,000, the liquidator to have all the powers under the 149th section of the Act.

Mr. Molteno also applied for costs of the postponement, occasioned by the application for the appointment of Mr. Cook instead of Mr. Gibson.

Buchanan, J., said that the costs of the application would come out of the estate, but costs of opposition must be paid by the other petitioners.

Ex parte JUST.

Mr. Russell moved, on behalf of petitioner, for leave to sue her husband, George Just, by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce and division of the common property. Petitioner stated that her husband, who was believed to have lately been living in Johannesburg, had not contributed to her support for years past.

Leave to sue granted, citation to be returnable on the 30th June, personal service, failing which publication once in the "Government Gazette" and once in the "Star," Johannesburg.

NILAND V. NILAND.

Mr. Pohl moved for a certain award of an umpire to be made rule of Court. Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SILBERMAN.

Mr. Lewis moved, on behalf of petitioner, for leave to sue her husband (Israel Silberman) by edictal citation in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The parties, it was stated, were married in Russia. Respondent had been residing in Cape Town, but had now disappeared, and had not been heard of for some time.

The matter was referred to counsel for further information, especially in regard to the question of the Court's jurisdiction.

In re THE RECREATION SYNDICATE, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Gutsche presented the official liquidators' report, and applied for the usual order as to inspection and publication.

Usual order granted.

Ex parte HOWARD.

Mr. Sutton moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent respondent in lunacy proceedings.

Mr. Swift was appointed curator ad litem, and the summons was made returnable for the 8th June.

Ex parte DUMBLETON.

Mr. Lewis moved, on behalf of the petitioner, for leave to sue his wife by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Respondent was stated to be in New Zealand.

Leave to sue granted, citation to be returnable on the 1st August, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte THE ESTATE SCHUMANN.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved, on the petition of the executrix testamentary, for leave to mortgage certain property in the village of Willowmore. Petitioner proposed to raise a sum of £350, so as to enable her to open a boarding-house at the coast. Minors were interested. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte SHAW.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for leave to dispose of and transfer certain property at Claremont.

Order granted, subject to the written consent of Frederick Reed, father of the children interested, being filed.

Ex parte BIRSE.

Mr. Burton moved, on behalf of petitioner, for an order allowing the period of his indenture in Scotland—four years—to count as service of articles of clerkship. Petitioner had been employed as a clerk by Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne since May, 1903. Counsel added that the Law Society did not oppose the application.

Order granted as prayed, petitioner to serve an additional year in this colony before applying for admission.

THOMAS V. COTTS.

Partnership—Interdict—Foreign jurisdiction.

This was an application upon notice to the respondent to show cause, if any, on behalf of himself or his firm of Cotts and Co., of Delagoa Bay, why an interdict should not be granted restraining R. P. Houston and Co., of St. George's-street, Cape Town, from paying over to him two sums of £512 11s. 1d. and £97 16s. 9d., pending decision of the matters at issue between the said Thomas and respondent. Mr. Burton was for applicant, and Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for respondent.

Mr. Buchanan took the point at the outset that the applicant was a foreigner, resident at Delagoa Bay, and that, on the authority of Brarley v. Faure, Van Eyk and Moore (15, "Cape Times" Law Reports, 20), he must give security for costs. Counsel read the correspondence which had taken place between the attorneys of the parties in regard to the question of security being given by applicant.

Mr. Burton said that the applicant was about to bring an action against respondent, and this was an urgent application to stop certain funds from being paid over to respondent. Applicant was prepared to tender any security in reason which the Court might direct.

[Buchanan, J. (to Mr. Burton): Are you prepared to bind your attorneys for security?]

Mr. Burton said that his attorneys were not in court, and he could not, of course, bind them without instructions.

Buchanan, J.: The proceedings will be stayed to enable petitioner to deposit security for £25 to the satisfaction of the Registrar, with leave reserved, if fresh proceedings are taken, to respondents to apply to increase the amount of security. If applicant does not give security, respondents will be entitled to costs of this application; but if he does give security, costs to be costs in the cause. The application may be renewed on Monday.

Mr. Burton: I take it that the money lying at Houston's will not be paid to the respondents?

Mr. Buchanan: I will undertake that the attorneys for the respondents will hold it until this matter is settled, should the money be paid over by Houston's.

Postea (May 18th).

Affidavits having been read, and Mr. Burton having been heard in argument, Buchanan, J.: Applicant and respondent carried on business in partnership at Lourenco Marques under the style of Cotts, Cotts and Co. It is stated in the affidavits that the capital for this partnership was found by the respondent Cotts. Under the deed of agreement, Cotts gave notice to terminate the partnership on the 12th April, as he was entitled to do by the contract. The partnership was terminated on the 12th April, but the applicant, Thomas, claimed that he had a right, as notice was given by Cotts to continue the firm of Cotts, Cotts and Co. for his own behoof. There is nothing in the deed of partnership which entitles him to do so. On the day after the partnership was terminated, Cotts entered into a new partnership with other people, and continued the business at Lourenco Marques under the name of Cotts and Co. As such firm Cotts and Co. drew upon Houstons for expenses of agency connected with the discharge of certain cargo a sum of £512 11s. 1d. Houstons' representative in Cape Town hesitated to accept this draft pending the decision of questions which had arisen between the partners. It now appears upon affidavit that this was money expended by Cotts and Co., and, as far as the affidavits show, it does not come into the accounts between the members of the late firm. The application now made in court is to restrain Houston and Co. from paying over this draft for the amount of disbursements made at Lourenco Marques. On the affidavits there is no ground for granting this interdict. But there is a further application to interdict Houston and Co. from paying £97, which is due admittedly to Cotts, Cotts and Co. Houstons have refused to accept this draft when drawn upon them by Cotts and Co., and the draft has been returned to Delagoa Bay, and there is no longer any chance of Houston and Co. paying over this amount to Cotts and Co. Therefore, the necessity for the interdict on the second part of the application has fallen away. The partnership was carried on at Delagoa Bay, the accounts are at Delagoa Bay, and the matter has been removed from the jurisdiction of this Court. The application must be refused with costs.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné. Respondent's Attorneys: Findlay and Tait.]

Ex parte LOUW.

Mr. Burton moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem in proceedings to inquire into the sanity of petitioner's husband, Nicolaas Gerhardus Louw, of Somerset Strand. It was stated that an action was pending against the respondent, and it would be necessary to appoint a curator bonis.

Mr. Advocate Roux was appointed curator ad litem, and the summons made returnable on Friday, 8th June.

LOUW V. TRUTER.

This was an application, upon notice to respondent, to show cause why a certain judgment for £54 0s. 1d., in the matter of Truter v. Louw, given on the 8th February last (16, C.T.R., 75), by reason of the defendant's default, should not be set aside, and why applicant should not be allowed to file plea. Mr. Burton was for applicant; Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for respondent. The parties belong to the Calvinia district.

Applicant in his affidavit said that there had been certain arbitration proceedings between respondent and himself, and that an award was made on all questions in dispute, except a counter claim, which deponent said that he had against plaintiff. The matter of his counter-claim was standing over, pending deponent putting in his counter-claim, and, to his astonishment, when he received the Cape Town papers on February 12 he found that judgment had been taken against him by respondent. As a matter of fact, respondent owed money to the applicant.

Mr. Buchanan read answering affidavits to the effect that proceedings were taken in the Supreme Court to protect the plaintiff's claim, inasmuch as no deed of submission had been entered into, and that on February 8, when the award of arbitrators was received, instructions were sent to Cape Town to stay proceedings in the Supreme Court, but was then too late. Respondent did not then know defendant had been barred. Respondent did not intend to enforce the judgment given by the Court on February 8 last, and all he intended to ask for was judgment for £15, and costs, in accordance with the arbitrators' award.

Mr. Burton submitted that the judgment of February 8 last should not be allowed to stand. Respondent must be confined to his award.

Mr. Buchanan submitted that it was largely in consequence of the applicant's acts that the judgment was taken. If defendant had not been in default nothing could have happened. Respondent was willing to have the judgment reduced to £15 and costs, and counsel submitted that that would be the reasonable course to be adopted under the circumstances. Applicant was not entitled to apply now for leave to plead.

Buchanan, J.: The Cape Town attorney, not having knowledge that the local attorney had agreed to refer this matter to arbitration, took, as he very naturally must have done, advantage of the defendant's default, and set down the case for judgment by default, and obtained judgment. I think this is a proceeding which the defendant had a right to expect would not be taken, after this agreement had been come to, to refer the matter to arbitration. Judgment was taken for the full amount of £54. I think it is a pity that the case was not set down for hearing, and judgment applied for in terms of the award, because costs would have been saved, inasmuch as the Court could have set aside the other judgment, and given judgment for £15, the amount of the award. The judgment of February last must, I think, be technically set aside, but the costs of this application will abide the result of further proceedings. As to the claim in reconvention, that would be no cause for setting aside the judgment already given. If the applicant succeeds in his subsequent proceedings, whatever form they may take, he will get his costs. He is not barred from taking an action against the respondent.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSION.

{ 1906.
May 14th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the admission of Tobias Johannes Louw as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MASTER V. ESTATE CRUMP.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for an order calling upon Kathrine M. Crump, to file an account in this estate.

Usual order granted.

ALING V. BOSHOFF.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

STEPHAN V. LOUBSER.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,550, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

FAIRBRIDGE, ARDERNE AND LAWTON
V. HEROLD.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,330, with interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ASPELING V. FALALL.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. AND OTHERS. V.
LAZARUS AND CO.

Mr. Struben moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be discharged.

Provisional order discharged.

WILHELM V. MIDDLETON.

Mr. Toms said that after a final order of sequestration had been obtained against respondent it transpired that a letter had been received from the latter. The terms of this letter had been brought to the notice of plaintiff's attorneys, who were prepared to consent to the final order of sequestration being suspended until certain affidavits could be received from Barkly East.

Order allowed to remain as it stands

ROSENBERG V. LUNTZ, TRADING AS LUNTZ BROS.

Provisional sentence.

Provisional sentence refused where the defendant denied that he was the person named in the summons.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Court of the First Special Judicial Commissioner at Johannesburg, for payment of £57 16s. on a promissory note. The judgment, counsel stated, was obtained on the 12th January, 1898, and the matter had previously been before this Court, when exception was taken that the judgment had become superannuated in the Transvaal, and that it could not be sued upon here until it had been revived in the Transvaal. The case was ordered to stand over for affidavits on the question of whether superannuation had taken place, but this point was not now persisted in by defendant. Affidavits had been sworn on behalf of plaintiffs, which counsel put in.

Mr. De Villiers (for defendant) said that the affidavits showed that a writ of execution was taken out within the period of superannuation. That was the reason why the judgment was not superannuated. Counsel went on to read an affidavit by Issy Luntz, trading as Luntz Bros., at Witmoos Station, division of Aberdeen, who said that he had been served with the summons. He denied that he had any knowledge of the alleged debt, promissory note, or judgment, or that he had resided in the Transvaal, and said that between 1897 and 1899 he carried on a produce business at Somerset East.

Mr. Benjamin read a replying affidavit by the plaintiff (Harris Rosenberg), who said that he had seen the defendant at Witmoos Station, and that Luntz at first denied that he knew deponent or was indebted to him. After some time, however, defendant admitted that he was the person referred to, and said that the transaction had quite slipped his memory, and he asked that the case be withdrawn, and promised that he would pay costs. Counsel also read a supporting affidavit by Alfred E. Gerwitz.

Mr. Benjamin: It is very extraordinary that the plaintiff should deny that he is the person in question. He says that he is not Israel Luntz, but Issy Luntz.

[Buchanan, J.: He denies that he was ever in the Transvaal.]

As to the question of costs. In the previous case he alleged Transvaal law. Now, after putting us to the expense of getting affidavits from the Transvaal, he takes up an entirely new position. We could not have proceeded under Rule 329 (d), Fletcher and Co. v. Froneman (4, C.T.R., 3). Under a liquid document a plaintiff must adopt the procedure which the law provides for liquid cases.

Buchanan, J.: A vital question of liability is raised upon the affidavits that cannot possibly be settled upon provisional proceedings. The parties must go into the principal case. Provisional sentence must be refused, and the parties must go into the principal case, all costs to abide the result.

DEMPERS V. MELMAN.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £650 and £500 respectively, with interest, the bonds having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

OHLSOON'S, LTD. V. WARD.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a certain lease for arrears rent, amounting to £450.

Order granted.

PAARL BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. GARB.

Mr. Bailey moved for provisional sentence on certain mortgage bonds.

Order granted.

MATTHEWS V. VAN DEN BERG.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £286 6s. 3d.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

SYDNEY V. HARRIS. { 1906.
{ May 14th.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, for £57 2s., for professional services rendered and moneys disbursed.

Order granted.

DOYLE V. SPENCE.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £14, balance of account for money lent and advanced, and costs of suit.

Order granted.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. WOOLFE.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 319, upon a declaration that defendant, who resided in Johannesburg, was sued through his duly-authorised agent in this colony under general power of attorney, at the instance of the Colonial Customs; defendant had knowingly, wrongfully, and unlawfully imported, and removed certain tobacco of the value of £737 10s., without first paying the Customs and other duties; the tobacco was, after the said importation, in the possession of the Railway Department, and had been seized by and was in the custody of the defendant. Plaintiff claimed an order (1) declaring that the defendant had forfeited the said tobacco, and (2) requiring him to pay to the Government the sum of £2,212 10s., being treble the value of the said tobacco, by way of penalty.

Defendant said that he desired that his case should be heard, but he admitted that he was not prepared to find security for costs. He alleged that the Transvaal Customs authorities were aware of the transaction, and that the duty had been paid to the authorities in Johannesburg.

[Buchanan, J. (to defendant): I am afraid that if you cannot find £100 security for costs, the law is against you, and you cannot be allowed to defend the case.]

Defendant: They have no right to these goods at all. The tobacco has come in as importation under the Customs Union Act.

Mr. Jones said that the Government's case was that the duty had not been paid. That was the information that they had from the Transvaal.

[Buchanan, J. (to defendant): I am sorry. I cannot alter the law. You cannot defend this case unless you find security for costs. Judgment will be given for plaintiff by default.]

ATTWELL V. VAN DER HEEVER.

Mr. Burton moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, for £30 4s. 4d., taxed costs of certain suit, defendant having brought and afterwards withdrawn an action against plaintiff.

Order granted.

DOOUSS V. LEVITAN.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £91 8s. balance due for work done, and costs.

Order granted.

IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE V. NATHAN.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £146 1s. 3d., goods sold and delivered, with interest, and costs.

Order granted.

ALLI V. ADAM.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £118 18s. 6d., cash paid on behalf of defendant, and £8 10s., further cash paid for defendant, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.
Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Watermeyer applied on behalf of Petrus Jacobus Froneman for his discharge from insolvency.

Application granted.

Mr. Rowson applied on behalf of Lazaar Goldberg for his discharge from insolvency.

Application granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

WEST V. WEST. { 1906.
 { May 14th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for a decree of divorce by reason of defendant's non-compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights, with custody and maintenance of the child of the marriage.

Rule made absolute.

STEVENS V. STEVENS.

Dr. Greer moved for a decree of divorce by reason of defendant's non-compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights, for payment of £50, value of half the joint estate, and custody and maintenance of the child of the marriage.

Rule made absolute, subject to affidavit of service.

Ex parte THE VREYBURG MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte THE DIVISIONAL COUNCIL, OUDTSHOORN.

Mr. Sutton moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte MACHAN.

Mr. Payne moved, on behalf of petitioner, for leave to sue his wife, Jane Ann Machan, by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights. Respondent was last heard of by petitioner at Stockton-on-Tees. Petitioner said that he had employed the Salvation Army with a view of tracing his wife, that he knew of no better agency for the purpose, but that their efforts had been unsuccessful.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, personal service if possible, failing which one publication in the "Government Gazette" and one publication in the "North-Eastern Daily Gazette," published at Middlesbrough, England, and circulating in Stockton-on-Tees; notice also to be given by registered letter addressed to respondent's mother, citation to be returnable on the 21st July.

Ex parte OLIVIER.

Mr. Pohl moved for leave to sell by public auction certain property in an estate in which minors are interested.

Order granted in terms of Master's report, sale to be subject to Master's approval.

Ex parte DE KLERK.

Dr. Greer moved, on the petition of Petronella Margaretha de Klerk, for leave to sue her husband, Julius Christiaan de Klerk, in forma pauperis, and by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce and forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage in community of property. Petitioner said that she was married to defendant at Humansdorp, where she still resided. Her husband deserted her in March, 1904, and she had no knowledge as to his present whereabouts. He was at Somerset East when she last heard of him.

The petition was referred to Dr. Greer for report and certificate.

GOLD AND LEVENSON V. ARISTO CIGARETTE CO.

This was an application upon notice to respondents to show cause why a certain judgment granted by this Court, on the 17th April, by default, should not be set aside, and applicants be allowed to purge default, and enter appearance. Mr. Lewis was for applicants; Dr. Greer was for respondents.

Mr. Lewis read an affidavit by the applicant Gold, who stated that the business of the partnership had been taken over by the Continental Cigarette Company, and that the judgment was obtained during his absence. He also stated that before he went away he made arrangements for the debt to be paid, and that there was no liability upon him for the same.

Dr. Greer read an answering affidavit, in which it was set forth that the Aristo Company had no knowledge that Gold had no notice of the proceedings on his return. It was denied that there was a good defence to the action. Gold had stated that he was going to Europe, and that Levenson would settle, but Levenson said the respondents could whistle for the money. It was denied that the amount claimed in the summons was one of liabilities taken over by the Continental Cigarette Company.

Mr. Lewis put in a replying affidavit to the effect that the respondents well knew that the Continental Cigarette Company had taken over all the liabilities of the firm of Gold and Levenson.

Buchanan, J., said the judgment as against Gold must be set aside, with costs. Regarding Levenson, he was duly served with the summons, and the judgment would only be set aside in his case on payment of costs.

Ex parte ESTATE TROLLIP.

Mr. Toms moved for leave to the petitioner, Susan Trollip, in her capacity as executrix, to raise a loan of £1,000 on mortgage in the estate of her late husband, Charles Trollip. There was a consent by three majors. The Master had no objection to the petition. Application granted.

MASTER V. TRUSTEE, INSOLVENT ESTATE DURANDT.

Mr. Howel Jones was for the applicant, and Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the respondent. The application was for an order of attachment for contempt of Court against the respondent, Henry Howard, sole trustee in the estate, for not filing an account, as previously ordered by the Court. The affidavit of the respondent set out that he was in a bad state of health, and could not attend to business during the time he should have filed the account. The account would shortly reach the agents in Cape Town.

An order of attachment was granted, with costs, execution stayed until June 1.

MASTER V. TRUSTEE, ESTATE DICKER AND MEIRING.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for an order of attachment against the trustee in the estate for not filing the account within the specified time. An account had now been forwarded, but the Master had not had time to see if correct.

Order of attachment granted, with costs, and execution stayed until June 1.

Ex parte ESTATE SULLIVAN.

Mr. Lourens moved for an order authorising the amendment of the petitioner's name and that of her late husband in a certain order of sequestration.

It was ordered that notice of intention to surrender be given in the "Government Gazette" in the correct name, and if no objection, the Master to correct the letters of administration in the usual way.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE SACKS.

Mr. Lourens moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property in the estate of one of the trustees. There was an affidavit from the auctioneer of a fair sale and price.

Order granted, subject to the consent being filed by the other trustee.

Ex parte EDDIE.

Mr. Palmer moved for an order authorising the amendment of a certain entry in the Debt Registry. The matter had been before the Court, and now there was a report from the Registrar that was favourable.

Order granted.

Ex parte MCCARTY.

Mr. Swift moved to make absolute a rule nisi calling upon respondent to show cause why the petitioner should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis for divorce.

Rule made absolute, Mr. Swift to take the reference as counsel, and Messrs. Syfret, Godlonton and Low to act as solicitors.

Ex parte MARAIS.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to issue a certified copy of a mortgage bond which had been lost.

The matter was ordered to stand over for a report from the Registrar of Deeds.

Ex parte JACKSON.

Mr. Palmer moved, on the petition of Henry Jackson, as guardian of his younger brothers and sister, children of the late Captain Hy. Jackson, of Wynberg, for an order authorising the Master to pay a sum not exceeding £336 9s. 4d., for the purpose of paying expenses incurred by petitioner for the support, maintenance, and tuition of the minors to the 31st December, 1906, and a further sum, not exceeding £100 per annum, for the maintenance, support, and tuition of two of the minors.

Buchanan, J. said that it seemed to be a very liberal allowance out of a very small inheritance that was asked for. The Court would authorise the repayment of the moneys already incurred, and further sums, not exceeding £60, £90, and £70, subject to the restrictions recommended by the Master, but no further payments would be allowed without further information being presented to the Court.

Ex parte ESTATE DE VILLIERS.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved, on the petition of the executor testamentary in the estate of Moritz Jacobus de Villiers, for an order authorising the sale of certain landed property in the division of Beaufort West for £3,750, and the deposit of the balance of the purchase price with the Colonial Orphan Chamber and Trust Co. Minors were interested in the estate.

Order granted as prayed.

BUDRICKS V. CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL.

Mr. Molteno (with him Mr. Roux) moved as a matter of urgency for a certain award of arbitrators to be made rule of Court. Respondent's attorneys consented.

Award made rule of Court in terms of consent filed.

MARAIS V. CAPE DIVISIONAL COUNCIL. { 1906.
May 14th.

Divisional Council — Rates —
Transfer of immovable property — Tender — Receipt —
Act 40 of 1889, Sec. 275.

M. purchased certain immovable property within the Division of C. The Divisional Council rates for two years, which had been levied before the date of purchase, were unpaid. M. tendered the rates for the previous year, on condition of receiving a receipt for the same; the production of such receipt being a necessary condition under Act 40 of 1889, Sec. 275, to receiving transfer. The Council refused to receive one year's rates unless all arrears were also paid.

Held, that the Council was bound to accept and give a receipt for the last year's rates, and might proceed against the vendor of the property for other arrears.

Smuts v. Cathcart Divisional Council (6, C.T.R., 384), distinguished.

This was an application, upon notice, calling upon the Cape Divisional Council to show cause why they should not be ordered to accept from the applicant payment of £33 10s. 10d., being the rate last due upon certain property, and why they should not be ordered to issue such receipt or certificate for the rate as is required by the Registrar of Deeds in terms of Section 275, Act 40, 1889.

To the affidavit of Mr. Godlonton, of Messrs. Syfret, Godlonton and Louw, attorneys for applicant, was annexed a declaration of purchase and sale in regard to certain property between applicant and one Myer Pincus, at £7,500, on March 15, 1906. An account by the Divisional Council for a rate amounting to £33 10s. 10d. was also annexed. On March 21 last, deponent stated, payment was tendered of this sum to the respondent, such tender being made in the name of the applicant as purchaser of the property for the purpose of complying with the provisions of Act 40, 1889. This tender was refused by the Council on the ground that they could not accept payment, or issue a receipt for the rates last due, until all prior rates had been paid, although no liability for such prior rates fell upon the applicant. By reason of the Council's refusal to accept such rate and grant such receipt, the applicant would be unable to obtain transfer of the property purchased by him from Mr. Pincus, and he stood in considerable danger, owing to the fact that Pincus, the seller, was in financial difficulties.

The answering affidavit of Mr. Van der Westhuyzen (secretary of the respondent Council), stated that the rates levied in 1904 and 1905 on this property were both unpaid, the amounts being, respectively, £37 11s. 1d. and £33 10s. 10d. Interest was also due on the first sum from June 16, 1904, and on the second from September 14, 1905.

Mr. Upington for applicant. Mr. Benjamin for respondent.

Mr. Upington argued that on the authority of Smuts v. Cathcart Divisional Council (6 "Cape Times" Reports, 384) the obligation was clearly upon the respondents to accept the payment of the last rate due, and issue receipt upon tender of the amount. The Council would still have their recourse against Pincus for rates other than the last rate due. In the Cathcart case the Chief Justice stated that "there is no lien or tacit hypothec created by law or by statute in favour of the Divisional Council or body of that kind for arrear rates." The main principle laid down in that case, counsel submitted, governed the present case.

Mr. Benjamin said that the Council did not wish to make applicant liable for these rates at all. That was the distinction between the present case and the case of Smuts v. Cathcart Divisional Council. Smuts was clearly liable to the Council for a certain rate as in occupation. Marais in this case tendered the rate really on behalf of Pincus, and, indeed, he could only tender the rate as agent of the seller. Pincus was trying to evade his liability for the arrear rates on the property. Counsel submitted that the Council had taken up a perfectly legal position. He also quoted a case against the Cape Town Council, in which a similar question was raised.

Buchanan, J.: In March last one Pincus, registered owner of certain landed property, sold the same to the present applicant, Marais. Marais, on attempting to get transfer, found that the Divisional Council rates levied during the last two years had not been paid. He therefore tendered to the Divisional Council payment of the rate which had been levied during the last year only upon the property. This tender the Divisional Council refused to accept, because the rates for the previous year had not been paid by Pincus. Prior to the passing of the Divisional Council Act, 40 of 1889, it was not necessary that the Divisional Council rates should be paid before transfer of any property was effected, but that Act, for the purpose no doubt of giving Divisional Councils some security, imposed the condition contained in section 275, which enacts that "before the passing transfer of any immovable property within any division every Registrar of Deeds shall require the production of a receipt or other voucher showing that the rates last due to the Council of such division upon such property have been paid." This section differs from that of the Cape Town Municipal Act. There are also several differences between this case and that of Smuts v. Cathcart Divisional Council (6, C.T.R., 384), which has been mainly relied on in argument for the appellant. In that case there was a sale in insolvency, and after that sale, but before transfer, a rate had been levied, and it was held that the purchaser of the property was not bound to pay anything more than the rates which had been incurred during his occupancy of the property. Here, however, the last rate has not been levied since the sale of the property, and prima facie the purchaser was not liable for any rates, but I do not see that this fact makes any conflict between the two cases.

Had this rate been levied after the sale of the property, it is admitted that the case of Smuts would apply, and there would be no ground for the Divisional Council to refuse to accept payment of the last year's rate from the applicant. But it is said that because the rate was due before the sale of the property, therefore the purchaser is not entitled to pay the last rate due by the previous owner without also paying the arrears due by such owner.

Great reliance has been placed upon a remark by His Lordship the Chief Justice, in the case of Smuts, that the Divisional Council would not be bound to accept from the owner of the property the last year's rates when such owner also owed the previous year's rates. That may be the case as between the previous owner and the Council, but the Council cannot on that account prevent the purchaser of the property from obtaining transfer. The Divisional Council does not say that a receipt for all rates due must be produced, but limits the receipt required to that for the rates last levied. It can only be read, therefore, as giving a security, or lien, or whatever you like to call it, for the rates last due. Mr. Marais has now purchased the property, and offers to pay those rates, which it is necessary should be paid before he is able to obtain transfer. His payment of the rates last levied does not release the seller from any liability to pay the rates previously levied. He is entitled to remove the objection created by this section, and to obtain transfer. I think there is no reason why the application should not be granted. It is said that a tender coupled with a condition for a receipt being given is not a good tender. However that may be, where a statute requires a receipt to be produced from a public body like the Divisional Council, I think it is the duty of such body to give such receipt upon the payment to them of the amount they are entitled to demand. The application will therefore be granted as prayed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

Ex parte NASH AND } 1906.
ANOTHER. } May 15th.

Lien—Stoppage in transitu—Bills of lading.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved, on the petition of Maynard Nash, as representative in Cape Town of John Deans Simmons (interim inspector of Reiners Von Laer and Co., of Port Elizabeth), and Cecil Govey, as manager of the Cape Town branch of Reiners Von Laer and Co., carrying on business under the style of Govey and Co. From the petition, it appeared that proceedings had already been taken on the 9th inst. by Mr. Simmons in the Eastern Districts Court for a temporary interdict, and that the Judge President granted a rule calling upon the Union-Castle Company, the Bucknall Steamship Company, the Ocean Line, the German-Australian Line, and the Port Elizabeth Harbour Board to show cause why they should not be interdicted from delivering to Ball and Co., or any other person or persons whomsoever for and on behalf of A. Ruffer and Sons, Schunck and Co., and the directors of the Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft, any goods already received by the said steamship companies, and the said Harbour Board, from delivering any goods which may yet come into their hands consigned to Reiners Von Laer and Co. by any steamers or vessels, and calling upon Ball and Co. to show cause why they should not be interdicted from parting with, alienating, or disposing of any such goods already received by them, or the proceeds of any goods that they may have sold, pending result of an action to be brought for and on behalf of the creditors of Reiners Von Laer and Co., to have it declared that such goods belong to the estate of Reiners Von Laer and Co. Rule to operate as a provisional interdict, and be returnable on the 17th inst. Mr. Simmons was appointed interim inspector of Reiners Von Laer and Co. at a meeting of the South African creditors held on the 20th April. Since his appointment, he said, negotiations had been proceeding in London (the largest creditors of the firm being banks and firms having their headquarters in Europe and America), for the general liquidation of the assets of the firm, either by a limited liability company, to be formed for that purpose, or else under inspection, and the South African creditors had in meeting assembled agreed to the proposal submitted by the European creditors for liquidation by a company, subject to the acquiescence of the South African banks interested. These negotiations were still pending. On or about the 30th April information was received that certain English creditors, who were factors, but not vendors, had indemnified the local shipping companies set out in the petition, and requested them not to make delivery of certain goods, some of which had arrived at Port Elizabeth, and some of which were on their way thither, consigned to Reiners Von Laer and Co., in whose names the bills of lading were made out, their intention being to stop such goods against which the factors had made advances of money coming into the hands of Reiners Von Laer and Co., and to ensure their being held over for the factors' account by their agents in Port Elizabeth, and to thereby obtain undue advantage over the other creditors. Petitioner drew attention to certain correspondence between his solicitors and Messrs. Ball and Co., the agents in Port Elizabeth of certain of the factors. He was informed that the creditors in England who had given instructions as aforesaid to the shipping companies were Ruffer and Sons, Schunck and Co., and the Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft, none of whom were vendors of goods, but merely parties who had advanced moneys thereon. The petitioners in the present application (Messrs. Nash and Govey) annexed a list of vessels by which goods consigned to and intended for Govey and Co., or Reiners Von Laer and Co., had arrived or were expected at Cape Town, in regard to which the bills of lading were held either by petitioners or the Port Elizabeth House. Petitioners called the Court's attention to correspondence or negotiations which had taken place with Bucknall Bros. regarding goods consigned to Govey and Co. by the Bucrania, which had been stopped in the hands of the Table Bay Harbour Board, with Wm. Spilhaus and Co., of Cape Town, who were acting in conjunction with Ball and Co., of Port Elizabeth, agents of Schunck and Co., and also with the Union-Castle Company in regard to assignments per their line, which had been stopped upon cable instructions, and were detained by the Harbour Board. Petitioners went on to say that they had received cable advices that the negotiations in London were so satisfactory that it was expected that a new company would shortly be formed for the purpose of taking over the assets of Reiners, Von Laer and Co., and, meanwhile, it was eminently desirable that, in the interests of the creditors in general, attempts to stop goods in transit should be resisted and frustrated. Petitioners were not able to place before the Court the grounds upon which the goods consigned to Govey and Co., or Reiners von Laer and Co., were being stopped in Cape Town, and they did not recognise any right to stop such goods in transit. Petitioners had received instructions from Port Elizabeth to apply for an interdict upon lines similar to the rule nisi obtained at Graham's Town. Petitioners prayed for an order interdicting the Union-Castle Co., Ltd., the Bucknall Steamship Line, Ltd., the German Australian Steamship Co., Ltd., the Deutsche Ost Afrika Linie, and the several agents of the said steamship lines at Cape Town, as also the Commissioners of the Table Bay Harbour Board, from delivering to any person whomsoever, other than the petitioners, any goods already received by them or their agents, or which may hereafter come into their, or their agents' hands, consigned to Reiners, Von Laer and Co., or to Govey and Co., by any steamers or vessels touching at Cape Town. Petitioners also prayed for an order interdicting Bucknall Bros. from handing over £56 16s. received by them as the proceeds of the goods covered by bill of lading, No. 76, ex Bucrania, pending further order of this court.

Mr. Schreiner went on the say that this case raised a very nice question of law, but he would not ask His Lordship to pre-judge it. All they wanted was that the status quo should be preserved until the whole matter could be argued before the Court. The firm was a very large one, with very large assets and very large liabilities. The idea was to float a limited liability company, which idea apparently was to be carried out. Everybody seemed to feel that, and it was likely that the business would be worked out on those lines, without an insolvency.

[De Villiers, C.J: Surely the Harbour Board won't deliver the goods to anybody but those who hold the bills of lading.]

Mr. Schreiner: It appears that it has done so. It has been done in Port Elizabeth. The Harbour Board has no right to treat the thing upon the instructions of the ships, and hand over to anybody that has not the bills of lading. Counsel added that the matter was really urgent, because it would appear that under indemnity the companies and Harbour Board were disposed to deal with the goods in an irregular manner. The petitioners were prepared to show that there was no right in the persons who were seeking to stop the goods in transitu. They held the bills of lading, and all the shipping documents. The factors, or the persons who had lent the money in England, had now no lien on the goods. They should have retained all the shipping documents in their hands until the money was paid. But they had handed over these documents to Reiners, Von Laer and Co., and they now seemed to seek some extraordinary remedy by way of stoppage in transitu.

[De Villiers, C.J: What do you propose to do with the goods after they have arrived?]

Mr. Schreiner said that the goods might remain in the Harbour Board's hands. It was only a question of rent of the Board's stores, because he was sorry to say those stores were not over well filled.

De Villiers, C.J: You may take an order, pending further order of court, interdicting the Union-Castle Company and the other steamship companies mentioned in the petition from handing over any of the goods mentioned in the petition to any other person or company than the Table Bay Harbour Board, interdicting the Harbour Board from handing over any of the said goods, and interdicting Bucknall Bros. from parting with the sum of £56 16s. mentioned in the petition, with leave to the Union-Castle Co., or any other person or company interested in the goods, to apply to this Court for a discharge of the order, question of costs to stand over. Leave will be granted to serve this order upon Ball and Co., of Port Elizabeth, by telegraph.

ADMISSION.

Mr. Alexander moved, as a matter for urgency, for the admission of Michiel Johannes Smuts as an attorney and notary public. Counsel said that applicant desired to proceed up-country. He added that two months of the articles were spent in studying for the examination, but there was authority in an ex parte application reported in 7, Juta, at p. 93, where the Court held that such time spent in study would be construed as a reasonable holiday.

Application granted and oath administered.

In re INSOLVENT ESTATE RUBENSTEIN.

Mr. Swift moved for the appointment of Mr. G. W. Steytler as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of Ruben Rubenstein, the principal assets being the Lady Grey Bridge Hotel, near Paarl.

Order granted as prayed.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

HOOGENDOORN V. GOODALL. { 1906.
May 15th.

This was an action brought by Johannes Stéphanus Hoogendoorn against Charles Albert Goodall, to recover £2,000 under a certain agreement.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was an undertaker, carrying on business at Cape Town, Woodstock, and Wynberg, and the defendant, at present and for some time past, carried on business as an undertaker at Woodstock. In May, 1903, the plaintiff agreed to employ the defendant as manager of his business at Woodstock, the employment being terminable on one month's notice. It was an express condition of the agreement that the defendant should not within five years of the termination of the agreement enter into a similar business within the limits of the Cape Peninsula, and should he do so, the defendant was to pay to the plaintiff £2,000. In October, 1905, the employment was terminated by the defendant on a month's notice, and defendant then opened a business in opposition at Woodstock, to the detriment of the plaintiff's business, for which the plaintiff claimed £2,000 on the agreement.

In his plea, the defendant denied he entered into the employment under the conditions alleged by the plaintiff. The agreement was not a term or condition in the contract, and there was no consideration for it.

Mr. Upington was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Watermeyer for the defendant.

Johannes Hoogendoorn, plaintiff, stated that his business was the oldest in town. In 1903 he proposed to open a branch of his business at Woodstock, and an advertisement was put in the "Times" calling for applications. Amongst the applicants was the defendant, and the terms were discussed verbally that the defendant was to have a free house, £10 a month, and 2½ per cent. on all cash takings. On the 16th May witness wrote a letter to the defendant setting forth the conditions in the declaration. The following Monday the defendant came into the office, and agreed to the conditions. The defendant remained in the service of witness until October, 1905, and he acquired during his time an intimate knowledge of witness's business connection. The defendant gave plaintiff notice, and then opened a business in opposition to plaintiff. When the defendant gave notice, he told witness that he was going to England. Witness then wrote to the defendant claiming the £2,000. He had suffered damages in consequence of this opposition.

Cross-examined by Mr. Watermeyer: The defendant's wife was present at the first interview. The defendant was not employed at the first interview. Witness thought he had in a way taught the defendant his business. The defendant's wife was present when the agreement was verbally agreed upon.

Mr. Watermeyer: Do you know any client of yours that has gone over to Mr. Goodall?

Mr. Upington: I don't suppose his clients come back again.

Mr. Watermeyer: Can you mention any families?

Witness: Oh, yes, several.

Edward Hutt, superintendent of the cemeteries at Maitland, put in a statement showing the applications for burial orders made by the defendant individually, and as manager of the United Funeral Furnishing Co.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Charles Albert Goodall, defendant, stated that at the first interview he was engaged by the plaintiff, who had not decided the exact locality of the business. The salary was fixed, a free house and 2½ per cent. commission. There was no mention on that occasion of any agreement. Witness received the letter from the plaintiff, but took no notice of it, as he thought it was absurd. Other undertakers, although they had no branch at Woodstock, carried on business there. On the 6th February he sold the business to the United Funeral Furnishing Co., and merely gave a receipt for the cash he received—£40.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness was continuing as manager to the company to whom he had sold. He was to get an increase on £10 a month if the business prospered.

You have been very energetic?—I can't kill people.

No, but you can get the funerals?—Yes.

As a matter of fact, you opened an office next door to the Registry of Deaths?—Yes.

Mrs. Goodall, wife of the defendant, corroborated her husband as to what took place at the interview with the plaintiff.

Mr. Watermeyer closed his case, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff in this case wished to start a branch of his own business at Woodstock, and he advertised for applicants. He interviewed some half dozen, and among them the defendant. The terms were discussed with the applicant, and two days later the plaintiff wrote the letter deciding to accept the applicant, and setting out the conditions of employment. The defendant admits receiving this letter, and that he wrote no reply to it. Both the defendant and his wife state that the terms were distinctly settled at the first interview, and the plaintiff says that the terms were merely discussed at the first interview, and after seeing the other applicants he selected the defendant. Under the circumstances the defendant must be bound by the terms set forth in the letter. The only question is whether, although not prayed for, an interdict, which the plaintiff is willing to accept in lieu of damages, should not be granted, and counsel might consult his client as to whether he would agree to this order.

Mr. Watermeyer, after consultation, said that his client would rather submit to damages.

His Lordship then assessed damages at £75, for the plaintiff, with costs.

INHAMBANE OIL AND MINERAL DEVELOPMENT SYNDICATE, LTD. V. MEARS AND FORD. { 1906. May 16th.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C.), moved as a matter of urgency for an order attaching a document conveying certain rights to the defendant in the case of the Inhambane Oil and Mineral Development Syndicate v. Mears and Ford.

De Villiers, C.J. said he did not wish to decide the question of the saleability of the document, but it would be directed that the Registrar take custody of the document pending further order of Court.

ADMISSION. { 1906. May 17th.

Mr. Alexander moved, as a matter of urgency, for the admission of Daniel Hendrik Viljoen, as an attorney and notary public. Counsel said that applicant had come down from Britstown for the examination, and he now desired to return.

Application granted and oaths administered.

INDWE MUNICIPALITY V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Declaration—Exception.

It is no ground of exception against a declaration which claims damages against the defendant for having collected water on his land and poured it on to the plaintiff's land, that the declaration, while alleging that the defendant's predecessor in title had committed a similar injury, does not claim damages for such predecessor's acts either from him or from the defendant.

This was an argument on exceptions taken by the defendant, the Commissioner of Public Works, as representing the Colonial Government, to the plaintiffs' declaration.

The declaration, after formally stating the parties and the circumstances leading up to their present position, proceeded:

4. The said (Indwe) company wrongfully and unlawfully collected water, which otherwise would have flowed over a wide area, over the company's land, on to the Municipal land, and the said streets without injury to them, in certain channels, and poured the water so collected at these points, on to the said land and streets. The said inhabitants at first, through their Village Management Board, and after 1898 through their Municipality, objected and protested against the said wrongful and unlawful action.

5. In 1902 defendant bought the line of railway, together with a piece of land attached thereto, from the company, and defendant is now the legal holder thereof.

6. The defendant has since 1902, with knowledge of the aforesaid facts, wrongfully and unlawfully collected at certain points on his land, bought, as aforesaid, from the company the water, which would otherwise flow over a wide area from the defendant's land on to the Municipal land and streets without injury thereto, and has wrongfully and unlawfully poured water on the said property at these said points, and on to the said streets in great quantities and has, notwithstanding objection and protest by the said inhabitants through their duly-constituted Municipality, continued and continues so to pour the said water on to the said land and streets.

7. By reason of the aforesaid wrongful and unlawful conduct of the defendant, great damage has been done, and is being done to the said land and streets, and it is impossible for the plaintiffs to construct, keep, and maintain the said streets, as they lawfully should, and if the defendant continues so to pour the said water so collected, as he claims the right to do, the plaintiffs, as representing the inhabitants, will sustain further great and irreparable loss.

Plaintiffs claimed: (1) £1,500 as and for damages; (2) an interdict restraining the defendant from collecting water on his land and pouring it on to the said Municipal land and streets, so as to damage the same; (3) alternative relief; (4) costs of suit.

The exception to the declaration was in the following terms: "Before pleading to the declaration, the defendant excepts thereto on the ground that the same is vague and embarrassing and bad in law, and that it is impossible to plead to the same, and especially for the reasons following: (1) Paragraph 4 thereof is irrelevant, vague, embarrassing, and bad in law inasmuch as the company was not mentioned as a party to this suit and the land, streets, channels, and points therein referred to are neither specified nor indicated, nor is there any allegation contained in the declaration that the defendant is responsible for the alleged wrongful and unlawful action of the company. He prays that the said paragraph be expunged, or otherwise that the plaintiff be ordered to join the said company as defendant and to amend the said paragraph. (2) Paragraphs 6 and 7 are vague, embarrassing, and bad in law, inasmuch as neither land nor any of the points and streets therein referred to, are specified or indicated, and he prays that the plaintiff be ordered to amend said paragraphs. Wherefore he prays that the said declarations be set aside or amended with costs."

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. H. Jones), for the exceptors (defendants); Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Van Zyl), for the respondents (plaintiffs).

Mr. Searle said that it was not stated in the declaration when the water was collected by the company. It must be alleged to have taken place before the Government bought the railway. Then it said that in 1902 the defendant bought the railway with a piece of land attached from the company. It was not stated what the piece of land was. As to the paragraph alleging that the company had collected water and poured it on the land and streets of the municipality, there was nothing in that paragraph to show upon what ground the Government were asked to be held liable for the wrongful and unlawful conduct of the company.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not understand that from the declaration. It is the Government's conduct that is complained of. The other is a recital. Plaintiffs say it was an unlawful act on the part of the company, and that the defendant continued it. You are only responsible for your own acts.]

Mr. Searle: Suppose we did nothing after this, except took the line over as we found it?

[De Villiers, C.J.: But then they say that, with knowledge of the aforesaid facts, the water was poured over certain points; that is all you are liable for.]

Mr. Searle: It is certainly alleged that we are liable for what took place before we bought the railway. I submit that there is no allegation in this declaration that the Government continued a collection of water that was wrongful and unlawful on the part of the company. Plaintiff says that they collected water at certain points on their land.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It must have been supposed that the Government, seeing that there had been a collection of water, thought it was legally collected water at a certain point.]

Mr. Searle: I do not see why paragraph 4 should be there at all.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not see why it is.]

Mr. Searle: It is embarrassing.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Well, I do not see where it is embarrassing.]

Sir H. Juta said that nobody ever dreamt of alleging that the Government were liable for the acts of the company prior to 1902. But since 1902 the defendant had done something, and for that wrongful act plaintiffs held him liable.

Mr. Searle submitted that the company ought to be joined in the action, or paragraph 4 should be struck out, so as to confine the action altogether to what the Government had done in this action of tort. Then there was the point as to whether, as a fact, something should not be specified in regard to where it was alleged the tort was committed. It was stated "at points," but it was not stated whether those points were the same points or different points. The defendant would also like to know the particular streets that were affected.

Without calling upon Sir H. Juta, De Villiers, C.J.: I consider that the declaration would have been quite good if there had been no allegation whatever as to the conduct of the Indwe Coal Company before the year 1902. But the introduction of the paragraph as to what the Indwe Company had done before 1902 does not, in my opinion, invalidate the declaration. As I understand the matter, the statement puts the defendant's case in a more favourable light; it certainly does him no harm. It is alleged here that the water had been collected before 1902, and that in 1902, after the defendant became the owner of the railway, the defendant also wrongfully and unlawfully collected water at certain points on the land, but I cannot see anything in the declaration from which it may be inferred that the plaintiffs wish to hold the defendant liable for what the Indwe Company had done before 1902. I see nothing, either directly or by inference, to lead to that conclusion. If the allegation made in the 4th paragraph is true, a good case is made out against the defendant for damages. Then it is said that the defendant is asked for damages for what the previous company had done. The following clause does not show that: "By reason of the aforesaid wrongful and unlawful conduct of the defendant, great damage has been done to the said land and streets." So that it would be quite impossible for the plaintiffs to maintain that damage done before 1902 by the company can now be claimed, and I cannot see how the defendant is in any way embarrassed by this bald declaration. Then, as to the contention that the points at which the water was poured on to the plaintiffs' land should have been specified, it might, perhaps, have been more convenient if a plan had been annexed showing the exact points; but it is not usual in a declaration to go into all the minutiae. If the defendant is in any way prejudiced, he has only to ask for particulars. If particulars are refused, then there would be time to come into court, and I have no doubt that if application were made to the plaintiffs for a small sketch map showing the points at which water was poured on the plaintiffs' land, such a sketch plan would be given. I do not see why the declaration should go into all the minutiae. Probably both parties know what is meant. In my opinion, there is really no ground for the exception. It must be overruled, with costs.

ESTATE SHAYLER V. DEVENISH.

This matter came on for argument upon an exception taken by defendant to plaintiff's declaration.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he was executor-dative in the estate of the late John Leonard Shayler, of Prieska, and he sued in his capacity as such, and the defendant was a farmer residing at Omdraais Vlei, in the division of Prieska. The deceased died intestate on or about the 15th May, 1903, and plaintiff was appointed executor-dative by letters of administration granted on the 23rd October, 1903. Previous to the death of the deceased, he (Shayler) and the plaintiff carried on business in partnership as forwarding and general agents at De Aar and Prieska, under the style or firm of Shayler and Co., and at the date of the deceased's death the said firm was indebted to the defendant in the sum of £200, with interest thereon at 8 per cent. per annum, under a certain promissory note. The said firm continued to carry on the said business until shortly before the death of the deceased, when the said business was sold, and the said partnership dissolved. In or about the month of April, 1904, the plaintiff, as executor-dative of the deceased's estate, erroneously and improperly paid to the defendant out of the assets of the said estate the sum of £225 in settlement of the said promissory note, with interest thereon, the plaintiff, in doing so, acting in the bona-fide belief that the proceeds of the estate would be found sufficient to satisfy all the just and valid claims to which it was liable, and that it was in the best interests of the estate that the said debt should be paid in order to save further accumulation of interest thereon. Owing to the impossibility of realising several outstanding accounts due to the said firm, the proceeds of the estate had been found insufficient for the payment of all the just and valid claims to which it was liable, as would appear from the administration and distribution account annexed to the declaration. The plaintiff was liable to pay to the creditors specified in the said account the amounts which they respectively would have been entitled to receive in respect of their said claims if he had not paid the said sum of £225 to the defendant, and which said amounts the said creditors demand that the plaintiff should pay. The Master of the Supreme Court, acting in the interests of the creditors, had refused, and still refused, to accept the administration and distribution account. Amongst the claims of creditors other than those referred to in the annexed statement, were some claims based upon accounts against the said partnership, but the estate of the plaintiff in his personal capacity was provisionally sequestrated as insolvent, on or about the 4th April, 1905, and the final adjudication thereof was ordered on or about the 27th April, 1905." "The plaintiff," the declaration proceeded, "was entitled, in his capacity as executor-dative in the estate of the deceased, to recover from the defendants the said sum of £225 so erroneously and improperly paid as aforesaid, in order that the same may be brought up in the assets of the said estate and distributed pro rata amongst the various creditors thereof, including the defendant, but the defendant refuses to pay the said sum or any part thereof." Plaintiff claimed repayment of the said sum of £225, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Before pleading to the claim, the defendant excepted to the declaration on the ground that it showed no good cause of action in law, and prayed that the same may be dismissed, with costs.

Defendant had also pleaded over in case the exception be overruled, the main purport of his plea being that he denied having received the payment in question from the plaintiff in his capacity as executor-dative in the estate of Shaylor, but he said that he had received the payment from plaintiff as remaining partner in the firm of Shaylor and Co.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for excipient (John M. Devenish); Mr. Burton was for respondent (Edward J. Tannock).

Mr. Burton explained that the claim was brought by plaintiff under the 32nd section of the Insolvent Ordinance.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: I think the section of the Insolvent Ordinance is wide enough to embrace a claim such as this, and that the exception should not be allowed. For the present there seems to me to be no reason why the case should not go to trial on the pleadings, but I cannot help saying that it is a pity that the section under which the claim is made was not mentioned in the declaration. The exception will be disallowed, but leave will be granted to the defendant to argue the point now raised at the trial, costs to be costs in the cause.

SPENCER AND OTHERS V. } 1906.
ESTATE HANSON. } May. 17th.

Fidei-commissum — Bequest of property to be free from control of husband—Security—Administrator—Trustee.

The testator burthened the inheritances of certain female heirs with a fidei-commissum in favour of their children, and expressed his special will and desire that the inheritances should not in any way be subject to the control of the husbands of the heirs. The defendant was appointed executor, but no direction was given that he should also act as administrator. He claimed the right to administer the property so as to be able to keep it free from the control of the husbands.

Held, that as executor, he could only liquidate the estate, but that the desire of the testator to keep the property free from the control of the husbands should be carried out by making the payment of their inheritances to the fiduciary heirs conditional upon their giving security for the transmission of such inheritances to the fidei-commissary heirs.

This was a special case stated for the judgment of the Court as to the construction of a certain will under which plaintiffs are appointed sole and universal heirs. Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for plaintiffs; Mr. Benjamin was for defendant.

The plaintiffs were: Wilhelmina Johanna Cathrina Spencer (born Wiedemann), wife of Robert Spencer; Christina Johanna Dorothea Mathilda Bower (born Weidemann), wife of William Snowdon Bower; Antoinetta Isabella Aberneathe Harris (born Wiedemann), wife of George Harris; Florence Wilhelmina Mary Anne Cleenwerck (born Whitehead), wife of William Thomas Cleenwerck; Mabel Johanna Georgina Leonard (born Whitehead), wife of Frank Guy Leonard; Maud Margaret Maria Whitehead (a spinster of full age). The defendant was Daniel Maclaren Brown, in his capacity as executor-testamentary of the estate of the late Abraham Hanson.

The special case was set out in the following terms:

1. On December 11, 1895 Abraham Hanson, who in his lifetime resided and was domiciled at Port Elizabeth, in this Colony, duly made and executed his last will and testament, a copy of which is hereunto annexed marked

"A" and which the parties hereto pray may be considered as inserted herein. On the 9th March, 1899, the said Abraham Hanson duly made and executed a codicil to the aforesaid will, and the parties crave leave to have the copy thereof (hereto annexed marked "B") regarded as inserted herein.

2. The said Abraham Hanson thereafter died, leaving the aforesaid will and codicil of full legal force and effect, and the defendant was thereupon in due form of law recognised and appointed as executor testamentary of the estate of the said Abraham Hanson, in pursuance of the above-mentioned codicil, in which capacity he is sued herein. He resides at Port Elizabeth aforesaid.

3. The plaintiffs, who reside in the Cape Division, are the heirs designated and named in the aforesaid will, the first three being daughters of Maria Fitzspencer Weidemann (born Hanson), and the remainder being the daughters of Florence Sophia Whitehead (born Manuel). The five first-mentioned plaintiffs are married in community of property to and are duly assisted herein by their respective husbands. The sixth plaintiff is a spinster of more than twenty-one years of age.

4. The defendant, having partially liquidated the estate, is prepared to file a first liquidation and distribution account therein, but doubts having arisen as to the true construction and interpretation of the aforesaid will and codicil, is it desirable to have such doubts removed by the decision of this honourable Court.

5. The plaintiffs contend: (a) That according to the true construction and interpretation of the will and codicil, they are severally entitled duly to receive from the defendant their respective inheritances, as sole heirs, as their absolute property free from any fidei-commissum or other limitation in favour of their children or any other persons whatsoever. (b) alternatively, if the Court should decide that the will and codicil do create a fidei-commissum in favour of their children, that they (plaintiffs) are severally entitled duly to receive from defendant the capital sums of their respective inheritances, and to hold, manage and control the same, subject to the obligation that at their respective deaths their several shares shall pass over to their respective children.

6. The defendant contends: (1) That according to the true construction and interpretation of the will and the codicil the plaintiffs are only entitled to the benefit and enjoyment of their respective inheritances subject to a fidei-commissum in favour of their respective children, and failing such children or any one or more of plaintiffs, then in favour of the other or others of plaintiffs. (2) That the plaintiffs are entitled to receive from defendant only the annual interest or increment of their respective inheritances, and that defendant is entitled to hold, manage, and control the capital sums thereof until the determination of the fidei-commissum imposed thereon respectively.

Wherefore the parties hereto severally pray for judgment in terms of their respective contentions and for an order that the costs of this suit be paid out of the funds of the estate.

The will was dated at Port Elizabeth December 11, 1895, and the material portions were as follows: "I hereby declare to nominate, institute, and appoint the daughters of Maria Fitzspencer Weidemann (born Hanson) and Florence Sophia Whitehead (born Manuel), both of Newlands, near Cape Town, that is to say Wilhelmina Johanna Cathrina Spencer (born Weidemann), Christina Johanna Dorothea Matilda Weidemann, Antoinetta Isabella Abernethie Harris (born Weidemann), Florence Wilhelmina Mary Ann Whitehead, Mabel Johanna Georgina Whitehead, and Maud Margaret Maria Whitehead to be the sole and universal heirs in equal portions, share and share alike, of all my estate, goods, effects, stock, inheritances, chattels, credits, and things whatsoever and wheresoever the same may be, nothing excepted, whether movable or immovable, and whether the same be in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, it being my special wish and desire that the said inheritance shall not in any way whatever be subject to the control of the present or any future husband of any of my said respective heirs, and that after the decease of the said heirs the said inheritance shall devolve upon their respective issue, the children of my said heirs abovenamed. And I further direct that if any of my said heirs shall die without leaving issue then surviving, then in such case his, her, or their respective share or shares shall devolve on the surviving heir or heirs. I hereby declare to nominate and appoint John Michael McCarthy, of Port Elizabeth, to be the executor of this, my will, and administrator of my estate and effects, hereby giving and granting to him all such power and authority as are required or allowed in law, and especially those of assumption. I hereby declare that it shall not be necessary for the executor of my will to file an inventory or a liquidation and distribution account of my estate with the Master of the Supreme Court of this Colony."

To this was a codicil dated at Port Elizabeth, March 9, 1899, in the following terms: "I hereby declare and nominate and appoint Daniel MacLaren Brown, of Port Elizabeth, to be the executor of my will instead of John Michael McCarthy mentioned therein, and granting to the said Daniel MacLaren Brown all such power and authority as allowed in law, and especially those of assumption."

Mr. Buchanan said that the plaintiffs were appointed "sole and universal heirs, in equal portions share and share alike." Those were very strong words, and any limitation of them subsequently would have to be very strong. The clause "it being my special wish and desire that the said inheritance shall not, etc.," dealt only with the control and not with the vesting of the inheritance, so that that did not limit it. But it may be said that the next clause, "after the decease of the said heirs, etc.," created a fidei-commissum in favour of the children. But the word "decease" may also mean decease before the death of the testator, and so make it a case of direct substitution. The next clause, "And I further direct that if any of my said heirs, etc.," seemed to be a clause of direct substitution. If it were taken as a fidei-commissary substitution, then if five out of the six heirs died without children, the sixth heir would receive one-sixth, subject to a fidei-commissum and five-sixths as fidei-commissary, and the latter amount would be subject to the control of the husband. This showed that the "decease" spoken of must be death before the testator; at all events, the matter was so doubtful that in accordance with the ordinary rule of law a direct substitution should be taken to be meant. As to control of the inheritance, in any case the fiduciaries ought to have that. An administrator was appointed by will, but the codicil changed that, and only appointed an executor. In any case, counsel submitted, the mere appointment of administrator would not take the control from the fiduciary.

Mr. Benjamin said that the words used "after the decease of the said heirs, etc.," clearly showed a fidei-commissum, so as to give effect to the intention of the testator to keep the inheritance out of the control of the husbands of the heirs. The construction that was contended for by the plaintiffs would mean that further words would have to be read into the will, showing the testator to refer to the decease before his death. The next clause, "And I further direct that if any of my said heirs, etc.," was quite consistent with a fidei-commissum, and it was perfectly open for a testator to wish a portion of his estate to be subject to a fidei-commissum, and a portion not to be. This clause, he submitted, did not qualify the other. With regard to the control of the estate, most frequently a parent, who was a fiduciary, was exempt from giving security to his children, as fidei-commissaries. The will clearly showed a desire to keep the custody out of the husbands, who would, otherwise, have it as being married in community of property. At any rate, security should be granted by the fiduciaries if control of the inheritance was given.

Mr. Buchanan having been heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: I am clearly of opinion that the will creates a fidei-commissum in favour of the children. As to the question of administration of the inheritance, the testator says: "It being my special wish and desire that the said inheritance shall not in any way whatever be subject to the control of the present or any future husband of any of the heirs," but unfortunately the testator has not named any trustee so as to keep the property free from the control of the husbands." The executor appointed by the will was also appointed administrator, but the executor appointed by the codicil is not directed to act as administrator. If such a direction had been given, there would have been some ground for holding that the defendant must administer the inheritances and thus keep them free from the control of the husbands. At the same time there ought to be some means of giving effect to the wish of the testator that the husbands should not have it in their power to diminish the amounts of the fidei-commissary inheritances of the children of the heirs, and in my opinion this can be done by making it a condition of the payment of the inheritances to the plaintiffs that they should give security. The Court, therefore, finds in favour of defendant's contention No. 1. and directs that the respective shares of the heirs be paid to them respectively upon their giving security to the satisfaction of the Master, for the payment, at their respective deaths, of the amounts of the respective inheritances to those who shall thereto become duly entitled, costs of the case to come out of the estate.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

W. AND E. J. SEARLE V. { 1906.
WARNER AND CO. { May 17th.

This was an action for £75 damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiffs owing to defendants stacking coal in Plum-lane, off Francis-street, Cape Town, to the damage of adjoining stores, and to the detriment of users of that thoroughfare. Defendants admitted the act, and tendered £25 in full satisfaction.

Mr. Russell was for the plaintiffs; Mr. Upington was for the defendants.

William Searle said that in 1903 the stores in Plum-lane were leased to Colison, Ltd. After the coal had been stacked against the stores the latter began to leak, and the lessee sent plaintiffs an account for damage, which was handed by them to their attorney. Correspondence ensued between the parties, and at one time arbitration was thought of, but at length the parties decided to go to law.

Cross-examined: The store was not built with slop brick, but clay mortar had been used in its construction. It was not an old store or a damp store, and forage had been kept in it. From McKenzie's brickfields the land sloped down, and in winter water flowed down, but was carried off by Searle and Osborne streets. Plum-lane and another lane. He had never found the Plum-lane wall of his stable to be damp. One store was 18 inches to 2 feet below the level of Plum-lane. It was not until the Deeds Registry was searched that the parties discovered Plum-lane to be a common one. Stacking the coal had caused the walls to be damp. Recently Mr. Warner had been denied access to the stores, owing to the attorney advising witness not to let Warner have the keys again. The store had been partially rebuilt, and new foundations put in. The bricks used were "red hard."

Robert Bryce put in a plan of the locality, and buildings concerned in the dispute. In his opinion, the damage was done through the water accumulating in Plum-lane.

Alexander Barron, who saw the work done to the store by a witness named Dunn, valued it at £56.

Mr. Russell closed his case.

Robert Chas. Warner, defendant, gave it as the reason for stacking the coal in the lane that a fire had taken place in his yard. At that time he had no knowledge that the lane was a common one.

Cross-examined by Mr. Russell: He gave instructions that the coal was not to be stacked against the wall.

Henry Stewart Milne, one time a bookkeeper, in the employ of one Sanders, who occupied the premises at one time, said that the walls were in a bad condition.

Cross-examined: He knew that there was a pool of water near one wall, because he had been thrown near there by a horse.

Johannes France, who had occupied a portion of the premises, said that an engineer, who slept in them, although there was a plank floor, took ill, and died: whilst witness had to shoot two of his horses, which were stabled on the premises.

Cross-examined: The horses he shot were suffering from mange.

John Stonner, an architect, who, at the request of the defendants examined the premises in September, 1904, stated that the end wall was slightly out of plumb. There were several old cracks in the wall. The bulging could be attributed to the foundations giving way. A sum of £10 would have put the lower wall in order.

Alfred Drake, builder and contractor, who inspected the premises, stated the bulge in the wall was not of recent date. There were no signs of new cracks in the wall. In his opinion the bulge was not due to the stacking of the coal.

Henry Edward Warner, manager of the defendant's business, stated that when he placed the coal in the lane after the fire he did not know that the lane belonged to anyone. A fence was placed across the lane to prevent people stealing the coal.

The evidence of Quartermaster-Sergeant Ashford, Army Service Corps, taken on commission, set out that a certain store in Francis-street was damp in winter. He was in charge of the building in 1897 and 1898.

Mr. Upington closed his case, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff, on receiving notice from his tenant as to the flooding of the store, wrote a letter to the defendant, and the defendant admitted that he placed the coal there, and he expressed his willingness to pay any damages which resulted. Seeing the reasonableness that was shown on both sides, it was a pity that the matter was not inexpensively and expeditiously settled. The plaintiff had the wall repaired and paid £53, and he was also liable to his tenant for damages. The question is, is £25 a sufficient tender? After hearing the evidence, I come to the conclusion that the justice of the case will be met if judgment is entered for the plaintiff in £50, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSION. { 1906.
Mary 18th.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the admission of Guy Bernard Stent as an advocate. Counsel stated that Mr. Stent had come down from Pretoria, in the Transvaal, and desired to take the oath in this court, in accordance with the wish that had been expressed from the bench from time to time.

Application granted, and oath administered.

STEYTLER AND CO. V. FLETCHER.

This was an action brought by J. and G. Steytler and Co., merchants, Cape Town, against Moses Fletcher, of Sea Point, to recover two sums of £33 14s. and £28 5s. 11d., respectively, for which he was alleged to be liable as guarantor, on behalf of his daughter, Mrs. Rachel Shur.

Plaintiffs, in their declaration, said that in April, 1904, defendant came to their premises with his daughter, Mrs. Shur, and it was agreed that she should open an account with them, the defendant undertaking to be a continuing guarantor for any indebtedness on her current account up to £30. Goods were supplied to Mrs. Shur from time to time. Subsequently, in December, 1904, an arrangement was made whereby the plaintiffs paid an account owing by Mrs. Shur to Messrs. B. Lawrence and Co., amounting to £33 14s., upon an undertaking by defendant that he would be surety for repayment of this sum, and also continuing guarantor for the current account. In October, 1905, Mrs. Shur's account was discontinued. She then owed plaintiffs £33 14s., in respect of the account paid by plaintiffs on her behalf to B. Lawrence and Co., and £28 5s. 11d., on her current account for goods supplied by plaintiffs. Mrs. Shur having left the Colony without paying the aforesaid sum of £61 19s. 11d., plaintiffs demanded the said sum from defendant, who refused to pay the same or any portion thereof. Plaintiffs prayed for judgment for the said sum of £61 19s. 11d., with interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Defendant, in his plea, admitted having introduced Mrs. Rachel Shur to the plaintiffs, but he denied that he had in any way become party to an arrangement by which plaintiffs supplied the said Mrs. Shur with merchandise under his guarantee. He specially denied that he gave the plaintiffs a continuing or other guarantee, or that he had agreed to become surety for the debt alleged to have been owing by Mrs. Shur to B. Lawrence and Co. He admitted that he had refused to pay the said sum of £61 19s. 11d., but he said that he was in no way indebted to the plaintiffs, and he prayed that the claim be dismissed with costs.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for plaintiffs; defendant appeared in person.

E. G. Steytler, of the plaintiff firm, said that the firm had had transactions with defendant for a number of years. He remembered defendant, who was accompanied by his daughter, calling to see the firm about April, 1904. Defendant guaranteed that the firm could allow her to buy goods from £20 to £30. They did not know Mrs. Shur before she was brought by defendant. On the 16th December, 1904, Mrs. Shur called to see plaintiffs about a debt that she owed to B. Lawrence and Co. In consequence of the interview, they wrote to defendant at Bellwood Estate, Sea Point, proposing to pay the account, provided the defendant gave a guarantee in regard to the amount, as well as the ordinary goods account. Defendant called on the plaintiffs, and agreed to the idea that they should pay the account, so that Mrs. Shur should have no bother with B. Lawrence and Co. About July, 1905, plaintiffs began to cut off supplies to Mrs. Shur, because the account had become very unsatisfactory. She called and told plaintiffs that the best thing to be done was to close the account, as she was losing money. She desired the plaintiffs to realise the goods. Certain of the goods had been realised. He estimated the value of the goods remaining at about £22 or £23. Subsequently plaintiffs wrote to defendant, who, in reply, said that he simply recommended Mrs. Shur to them, but that he had not agreed to become security for her. He expressed his surprise at the letter, and said that this was the first intimation he had had that he was to be security. The plaintiffs had tried to get the amount of the debt from Mrs. Shur, but had not succeeded.

By the Court: The plaintiffs would not have given credit to Mrs. Shur without a surety.

[Buchanan, J.: Why didn't you get something in writing. In England you could not have sued in this case without a written document. It would be more satisfactory if you had had a written document?]

Witness: We quite see that now, my lord.
